The Schubert Mass was performed as the second half of the concert. During the first half, the Boston Philharmonia Orchestra under Nelson performed Pastorale d'ete by Arthur Honnegger and Symphony No. 36 in C, K. 425 ("Linz") by Mozart.

Dr. Robert Wood, President of the University of Massachusetts was present at the concert in Boston and gave a short speech prior to the second half.

About one and one-half weeks ago the National Theatre was re-opened so as to be ready for the Chorale-Philharmonia Concert. The old theatre is under renovation as part of the Boston Center for the Fine Arts.

The University Chorale normally has about 60 members but it was expanded to number 87 for its three concerts with the 40-piece orchestra.

The Chorale was prepared for the concerts by Russell Falvey, Director of Music at Springfield Technical College and Conductor of the UMass Chorale during the sabbatical of Richard duBois.

Three members of the Department of Music performed as soloists during the Mass. They were Dorothy Ornest (soprano), Jon Humphrey (tenor) and John d'Armand (bass).

Donna Harler, active in musical activities in Amherst since her husband joined the Music Department faculty here, sang the alto solos. John Aler (tenor), who has just concluded a tour with The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre where he sang the title role in Britten's "Albert Herring," was the fifth soloist.

The UMass Fine Arts Council under Terry C. Schwarz and the Boston Philharmonia Society sponsored the three concerts.

Elvin Bishop Group Cancels Out

By DON BISHOP

One of the three groups who signed for this Sunday's spring concert has apparently backed out of its contract, and will not appear for the weekend event.

The Elvin Bishop Group notified the UMass Concert Committee last Tuesday, through their manager, that they had cancelled all 17 of their road dates for this May, which would include Sunday's date here. The group had been scheduled as the lead-off group, at 1:15 p.m., for the concert.

Cold Blood and It's A Beautiful Day are the other two groups who have been signed to perform Sunday.

David Forest manager of the Elvin Bishop Group indicated that the group had broken up two weekends ago and that this had forced the cancellation of all their future dates.

The Concert Committee, which has been intensively searching for a replacement group, indicated yesterday that they were considering the possibility of legal action against the Elvin Bishop Group.

Chairman Lee Trousdale stated that signed contracts from the group had been received and that "they are under legal obligation to show up on Sunday." Trousdale admitted the unlikeliness of a successful law suit, however, due to what he termed the difficulty of proving actual damages had been incurred by the Concert Committee, as a result of the cancellation.

"If we could show that we had sold out a hall or something like that," Trousdale stated, "then we might stand a chance against them in court." However Sunday's concert will be without charge, for all UMass students and their invited guests.

As of yesterday, no replacement for Elvin Bishop had been signed by the Committee, but Trousdale was confident that another group would be signed by this Friday.

Other details about the Spring Concert were released by Trousdale yesterday. He stated that the entrance for the concert would be on the east side of the stadium, in front of Dallas Mall. Also, no parking will be allowed next to the Stadium. All people are requested to either walk to the concert, or take one of the buses to be running to and from the Stadium on Sunday. Schedules will appear in the Collegian on Friday.

All those planning to attend are requested to not bring any glass containers to the concert and are reminded that the successful outcome of this year's venture will determine the future of Stadium concerts.

Sunday's concert will be held in the Stadium regardless of the weather.

Amherst Common May Day

Today on the Amherst Common from 12:00 noon to 5:00 p.m., the Radical Women's Council, the Young Workers Liberation League, and the New Valley Peace Center are calling all people to celebrate May Day, an international working class holiday in solidarity with the national liberation movements and the international working class movements.

"It will be a day of fun and celebration as well as a day to express our unity in struggle," said a spokesman for the group. "Ever since the Chicago strike for the eight-hour day on May first in 1890, May Day has meant that people all over the world will never forget the vision of a world free from exploitation and oppression. Everyone is urged to come and share songs, speakers, food, and games!"

MDC Reporter Freed In Wyoming

By BILL DENSMORE

Charges against Nathan Gorenstein, 20, a Collegian reporter jailed Saturday while covering the occupation of Wounded Knee, have been dismissed, according to Gorenstein himself.

But eight other students who were arrested with Gorenstein are still to be arraigned this morning in Wyoming. Gorenstein was released allegedly because he is a reporter, and with the proviso that he not enter South Dakota while returning to Massachusetts.

Gorenstein, a junior from Medford, had been arrested with eight other college students while travelling in a car in Cheyenne. The group had left Colorado and was allegedly heading for the Wounded Knee area to offer support to the occupiers of the hamlet.

According to federal authorities handling the arrest, the group was charged with crossing state lines with intent to incite a riot, a charge similar to the one leveled against the Chicago 7 conspirators in 1968, following the Democratic National Convention.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Tosh Soyematsu said yesterday Gorenstein was carrying no identification at the time of his arrest and was initially identified as a reporter.

Soyematsu said when the group was arrested they were transporting large amounts of molasses, which the federal lawyer claimed is used in the manufacture of Molotov cocktails.

Gorenstein, contacted by phone yesterday from Amherst, denied any involvement in illegal activities.

"I was not taking part in anything," he said, adding, "I have done nothing illegal."

He said that at the time of his arrest he was acting as a reporter for both the Collegian and the Springfield Union.

Richard C. Howland, UMass attorney for students, is representing Gorenstein and the Collegian in the case. Howland said yesterday the arrest "raises serious constitutional questions when the state of mind is alleged to be an intention to incite a riot which is neither planned nor has occurred."

According to Soyematsu, the federal prosecuter, Gorenstein had attended at least three rallies supporting Wounded Knee on college campuses while in Colorado.

He said that if Gorenstein was acting as a reporter at the time of his arrest he might be considered innocent.

Gorenstein had filed several stories with the Collegian as well as one dispatch to the Springfield Union while in the mid-west. He is employed weekends at a branch office of the Union in Westfield.

In his latest reports, Gorenstein had said the possibility of violence in the area is increasing daily because of dwindling food supplies within Wounded Knee. He described South Dakota as "a place worth fighting for" and privately expressed the view that the Indians are not going to leave Wounded Knee without a fight.

He repeatedly claimed in conversations with Collegian editorial staff members that "someone is going to get killed out here" if the negotiations stalemate does not end.

Since Gorenstein first made his predictions, two AIM supporters have died.

ELLSBERG DISCUSSES REPORTED BURGLARY—Daniel Ellsberg talks to newsmen after the judge in the Pentagon Papers trial released a government memorandum saying G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt, convicted Watergate conspirators, had burglarized the office of Ellsburg's psychiatrist. (AP)

Ellsberg Defense Asks Watergate Link

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Daniel Ellsberg's chief attorney asked Monday that 11 present and former government officials be ordered to tell what they know about links between Watergate conspirators and an alleged burglary of an office containing Ellsberg's psychiatric records.

Attorney Leonard Boudin said he wants to find out whether the Pentagon papers indictment was part of a "political espionage" plot.

U. S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne took the request under submission but said affidavits probably would have to be taken from the men before they were called to testify at the trial.

The witnesses Boudin wants to call to a special hearing include former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, resigned Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst, resigned White House aide John Ehrlichman, former acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray and convicted Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy.

Boudin also named former special presidential counsel Charles W. Colson; John W. Dean III, fired Monday as presidential counsel; Watergate trial prosecutor Earl Silbert; Justice Department criminal division chief Henry E. Peterson, and Robert C. Mardian, former assistant attorney general who became political coordinator of the Committee for Re-Election of the President.

The judge indicated he would be amenable to a request by Boudin to send jurors home and suspend trial testimony "until this situation is cleaned up, if it can be cleaned up."

Boudin said he felt revelations which would come out of affidavits and testimony "will mean the end of this case," but added the defense would not be satisfied with affidavits alone because "very frankly, we don't trust the government of the United States."

"I am certain," defense attorney Leonard Weinglass told the judge later, "that this case should not go to the jury under the cloud that now sits over it." Weinglass is Russo's chief attorney.

Weinglass also asked that Ehrlichman be questioned about his intentions when he contacted Byrne about possible appointment as FBI director last month.

Byrne announced from the bench before proceedings began that he had been contacted on April 5, had met with Ehrlichman at the Western White House in San Clemente and was introduced to President Nixon.

He said there was no discussion of anything related to the Pentagon papers trial and that he refused to consider the offer until the trial's end.

Democrats Criticize Richardson Appointment

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

HURON, Ohio (AP) - Top Democrats said Monday that President Nixon's choice of a new attorney general from within his administration won't satisfy the public demand ,or total disclosure of all facts surrounding the Watergate case.

National Chairman Robert S. Strauss and Govs. Marvin Mandel of Maryland, Wendell Ford of Kentucky, Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania and John J. Gilligan of Ohio immediately criticized Nixon's choice of Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson to replace Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst.

"A designated pinch hitter," scoffed Mandel.

"He's continuing to use the inner sanctum to fill the places of responsibility," Ford said, declaring that wide consultation and choice of outsiders "would have made more of an impression on the public."

News of the change at the Justice Department and the resignation of three top White House officials in the wake of the Watergate scandal reached the Democratic governors here just after they adopted a resolution urging "total and full disclosure of all facts relating to the Watergate case as quickly as possible."

They also called on Nixon to name an independent prosecutor for the case, possible one recommended by the American Bar Association.

"It is our belief," the governors said, "that the restoration of confidence in government is imperative to move this nation toward resolution of pressing domestic problems."

Gov. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, chairman of the Democratic Governors Caucus, hailed the resignations and Nixon's announcement of Monday night's televised address to the nation as indicating that "what we're recommending is at hand."

But other Democratic state executives were more skeptical of the White House moves announced Monday.

Mandel, who heads the bi-partisan National Governors Conference, complained about Richardson's selection: "It's always the same people whoare playing the game."

Shapp called it "just shuffling some old hands into new places" and said: "The resignations more or less prove there have been very high officials in the Nixon administration involved in the planning of this operation and also in the cover-up."

Kissinger To Plan Brezhnev Visit

By STEPHENS BROENING
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)-Henry A. Kissinger is coming to Moscow at the end of the week.

President Nixon's top foreign affairs adviser will visit the Soviet capital chiefly to prepare for the forthcoming U.S. visit of Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev.

He also will confer with the Russian leadership on what the White House called a "whole range of bilateral problems" and what the news agency Tass said were "questions of mutual interest."

He is to leave Washington on Thursday, arrive here Friday and return to Washington after four or five days, officials in Moscow and Washington reported.

It was Kissinger who, on a secret trip, sorted out the preparations for Nixon's summit with Brezhnev in Moscow last spring.

The summit produced a packet of bilateral agreements ranging from strategic arms limitation to a statement of principles governing Soviet-American relations.

Kissinger returned in September on an errand for Nixon, that time talking about trade problems, including the hurdles in front of most-favored-nation treatment for Soviet exports.

Besides the Brezhnev trip to the United States, believed planned for early summer, Kissinger and Brezhnev could discuss:

—Any new agreements covering trade or security to deepen the Soviet-American relationship.

—Soviet policy on emigration, particularly as it concerns Jews who want to leave for Israel.

—The second phase of strategic arms talks, covering offensive weapons. SALT 1, the first agreement signed last year, limited only defensive missile systems.

—Reduction of conventional armed forces facing off in central Europe.

—The all-European conference on European security and cooperation under preparation in Helsinki, Finland.

Cambodians Move To Free Capital

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cambodian government soldiers attacking in the wake of U.S. B52 raids drove back enemy forces and broadened the defense perimeter around the besieged provincial capital of Takeo, military sources reported Monday.

Informants in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, said the government troops struck Sunday in three directions and have expanded government-controlled territory by 2,000 yards on the western flank and 1,500 yards on the northern and southern edges of the encircled city. Their counterattack followed heavy pounding of suspected enemy troop concentrations by American bombers.

The Nixon administration released in Washington a long-awaited document setting forth the official justification for the continued American bombing in support of President Lon Nol's troops.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers introduced the document into the record of a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on U. S. policy in Indochina. It cited an article of the Vietnam peace accord and President Nixon's authority as commander in chief of American military forces.

Rogers' 13-page argument said "it has long been apparent that the conflicts in Laos and Cambodia are closely related to the conflict in Vietnam and, in fact, are so interrelated as be considered part of a single conflict."

Takeo, a key of 30,000 about 40 miles south of Phnom Penh, has been surrounded and under attack for several months. The city is a prime target of the anti-government forces for the psychological effect of seizing a provincial center and for consolidation of their control of southern Cambodia.

The antigovernment forces control about two-thirds of the country and have cut off most of the country's highways. The Lon Nol regime claims they are Vietnamese Communists and imposes censorship on outgoing news dispatches to prevent newsmen from calling them Cambodians. However, field commanders and foreign diplomats indicate most of the fighting is being done by Cambodian Communists, with the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong providing logistical and leadership support.

An investigation team for Vietnam's International Commission of Control and Supervision inspected a commission helicopter downed in Northern South Vietnam on April 7 to settle a dispute whether it was off course when the Viet Cong shot it down.

Rogers Justifies Cambodian Bombing

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State William P. Rogers said Monday a halt in U. S. bombing in Cambodia without withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces "would undermine the central achievement" of the Jan. 27 Vietnam peace agreement.

The President's powers under the Constitution as commander-in-chief "are adequate to prevent such a self-defeating result," Rogers told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Rogers said the President's authority to enforce compliance with the peace agreement is the same that permitted him to negotiate and execute the agreement.

He said that Article 20 of the agreement, requiring withdrawal of foreign forces from Cambodia and Laos, "recognizes the underlying connections among the hostilities in all the countries of Indochina."

The presence in Cambodia and Laos of North Vietnamese troops threatens, he said, the right of self-determination of the South Vietnamese people, which was a key United States objective in the Vietnam war and is guaranteed by the peace agreement.

To argue that the Constitution requires immediate halting of U.S. air strikes in Cambodia because of the agreement, he said, is an argument that the Constitution "contains an automatic self-destruct mechanism designed to destroy what has been so painfully achieved."

Rogers presented a separate 13-page statement of administration position on the President's authority to continue the Cambodian bombing in an appearance before the committee on the $987 million State Department authorization bill for fiscal 1974.

Committee members were not convinced.

"I think it's illegal," said Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo.

"I believe that what we are doing there is without justification in the Constitution and in Law," said Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine.

Nixon Sends Congress Tax Reform Proposals

By EDMOND LeBRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A tax reform package striking at large sheltered incomes and offering to ease the burden of filling out returns was sent by President Nixon's administration Monday to a Congress apparently intent on broader changes.

After Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz outlined the proposals to the House Ways and Mean Committee, Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., commented, "We'll have to develop our own program. there are a number of areas he didn't touch on."

Instead of the present minimum tax on certain kinds of preference income, which critics say has proved ineffective, the new proposal would establish a minimum taxable income, calculated so that no one could escape paying regular taxes on about half, at least, of his income.

The propsed new return form, the Treasury said, would ease the annual April chore for about 20 million taxpayers who have too extensive deductions to use the present short form but are overburdened by the detailed requirements of the full return.

The Nixon package also includes tax credits up to $500 for low-and moderate-income elderly persons against the real estate taxes they pay either directly or through their rent, and a credit, up to $200 per child for tuition payments to nonprofit private schools.

Another item is aimed at widely publicized arrangements by which upper income individuals, through inactive partnerships in real estate, rental and other businesses, can for a time obtain tax losses reducing the levy on their regular incomes. Under the proposal, such losses could be used only to offset profits, present or future, from the business involved itself.

To encourage exploration of petroleum reserves in the United States, the administration proposed an investment tax credit of 7 per cent, with the possibility of another 5 per cent for wells that become productive on exploratory drilling costs.

Other items in the package are a liberalized child-care deduction for working parents an interest subsidy for states and local governments who would agree to issue bonds with taxable interest, and a major simplification of the credit on retirement income available to those who receive relatively small Social Security payments.

Nixon Gets Price Control Extension

By JOHN LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) The Senate Monday passed and sent to the House a compromise bill to extend the President's authority to impose wage-price controls for one year.

The Senate action was by a non-record, voice-vote.

The presidential authority to impose controls was scheduled to expire at midnight. The House must act next.

Sen. Gale McGee, D-Wyo., had threatened to talk until midnight unless he got Senate action on his postcard voter registration bill, but McGee yielded the floor.

Speaking to newsman last Saturday, Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz said the administration hoped Congress would extend the control authority. But even if Congress delays action, he said, it wouldn't necessarily imperil the government's anti-inflation program.

The Senate fell two votes short Monday of closing off a filibuster on the voter registration bill. The vote was 56 to 31, short of the two-thirds vote needed to stop debate.

McGee could step aside and allow action on the compromise version of the bill extending the President's authority to impose controls.

But he told the Senate: "I'm in great shape. If midnight is the challenge, I believe I can give it a try."

Libya Bans Non-Arabs

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Libya closed its doors to all foreign travelers except those with Arabic-language passports Monday in an apparent extension of Col. Moammar Khadafy's Arab nationalist "cultural revolution."

In another Middle East development, Palestinian guerrillas tried to attack the U. S. Embassy in Lebanon but were stopped before they got there with a suitcase full of explosives, police said.

The new Libyan policy, in effect, halts travel into the oilrich northern African country except by arabs. It is a tightening of rules laid down by Khadafy's regime in January but heretofore applied only to tourists and some newsmen.

Diplomats in the Libyan capital of Tripoli and in Rome said hundreds of foreigners who tried to fly to Libya over the weekend were stopped at the Tripoli or Benghazi airports and forced to board the earliest flight out. Those refused entry included resident foreign oil workers and their families, some with valid visas who had gone to Europe on holiday, the diplomats reported.

An official at the Libyan Foreign Ministry declined to detail how the restrictions will be applied or give the reasoning behind them. But a Libyan diplomat in Rome, where many of those turned back were forced to return, said the Khadafy government will make no exceptions.

Libya has a substantial foreign community, particularly to work the huge oil fields. It includes several thousand Americans. There was no indication Khadafy planned to force them out, and expulsion was viewed as unlikely because of wide reliance on the foreigners in key oil, engineering, education and medical posts.

Police in Beirut, Lebanon, reported they foiled the attempt by Palestinian guerrillas to attack the U. S. Embassy. Security officers said four members of Al Fatah, the largest guerrilla group, were arrested.

Mississippi Flood Waters Start To Recede

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The flood waters receded slightly in the northern part of the Mississippi River Valley Monday, but the danger was far from over and the damage was still mounting.

The Mississippi stood at 42.8 feet in St. Louis, down from 43 feet on Sunday and from a record crest of 43.3 feet - 13.3 feet above flood stage on Saturday.

But the weather forecast called for more rain, with thunderstorms Monday night and the Army Corps of Engineers said it was rebuilding its stocks of sandbags and emergency pumps.

A spokesman noted that the river already had crested three times in a short period and warned people to remain vigilant. "An relaxation now would be courting disaster," he said.

The Corps of Engineers has estimated 35,000 persons have been evacuated from the area between Hannibal, Mo. and the Gulf of Mexico. Eleven persons have died because of the flood and more than 10 million acres, including prime farmland, is under water along the 1,500-mile route of the Mississippi. Agricultural experts say cotton crops may be cut back sharply.

Damage already is in the millions in the seven states affected by the flood and officials say they will be unable to provide a total estimate until the waters recede.

South of St. Louis, in Crystal City, Police Capt. Robert Nahlik said his first helicopter flight over the area was a startling experience. "I damn near cried," he said. "I finally realized how many people we've got down here affected by this thing."

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz will make an aerial tour of the flooded areas on Tuesday.

The Mississippi was cresting Monday at Chrester, Ill, about 60 south of St. Louis. The river hit 43.3 feet - 16.3 feet over the flood stage level of 27 feet.

The river forecasting service said the Mississippi would crest at Cairo, Ill., in the southernmost part of the state, on Wednesday, but said the level of the river would be below levees and no flooding was expected.

"Of course this crest will move on down stream," a spokesman said, "so it looks like all points down stream to Natchez will rise slowly over the next several days. Below Natchez, - that is, below the Morganza and Old River Control Structures, which are diverting part of the river water out of the main stream - the river should stay fairly flat.

FDA Wants Tighter Control On Barbituates

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Food and Drug Adminiutration today recommended tighter controls on nine barbiturate drugs, including three ranked among the 10 most abused drugs in the United States.

The FDA said it based its recommendations on a Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs report showing substantial diversion of amobarbital, secobarbital, and pentobarbital.

Six other drugs which would fall under tighter regulatory controls because the FDA said they have "similar abuse potential" are butabarbital, cyclobarbital, heptabarbital, probarbital, talbutal and vinbarbital.

The FDA said the nine sedative drugs account for the bulk of the 1.1 billion barbiturates prescribed annually. The bureau said that during the 12-month period ending in April, 1972 more than 7.3 million dosage units were stolen.

Barbiturates are both physically and psychologically addictive and may be fatal when ingested with alcoholic beverages.

Bill Baird

The Southwest Assembly last week voted to disassociate itself with Bill Baird, a long time proponent of abortion and birth control. The decision was hasty and seemingly irrational, and based upon incidents which are still unclear.

Baird himself was upset by the disassociation, because it was the first time in ten years he had been attacked by anyone besides the Catholic Church.

Bill Baird has worked hard over the years and has been a powerful spokesman for women's rights. He has paved the way for women to obtain abortions and birth control.

While people may disagree with his ideas and activities, there is no logical reason to attempt to damage his reputation by name-calling and unfounded charges.

Bill Baird will be speaking again on campus tonight. We sincerely hope that, for the sake of free expression, he will be allowed to speak uninterruptedly and without distracting incident. Baird is a sincere man, devoted to an unselfish cause. He has been faced with many risks, including jail sentences, for striving for what he believed to be a just cause. Baird should command respect from the students on this campus, not derision.

The Southwest Assembly should rescind its potentially damaging decision to disassociate itself from Baird's activities.

The Buffoon Speaks

By BILL DENSMORE

They appeared from the corridors and corners of the Student Union, reached the end of the lounge by the windows and saw down. It was 8:59. The speech was scheduled to begin at 9:00 but a few last minute advertisements were thrown in; the star of the show was late.

"This is a special report on the Watergate from CBS News."

The tint was all out of whack on the TV so he looked sick, kind of green. Sitting in his White House office, a picture of his wife and family to his left—Abraham Lincoln to his right. An American flag to one side. The hundred or so students shut up—a motley bunch: long-hairs, women in shorts, guys with course work on their laps.

The President began.

"I want to talk to you tonight from my heart."

Laughter. The audience started laughing. Most of the room thought it was funny.

". . . Last June 17 while I was in Florida trying to get a few days rest . . ." Laughter.

". . . I learned of the bugging through newspaper accounts." Laughter.

The President said that he did not know his aids were involved in the Watergate, that in fact he at first believed that no White House members were involved until newspaper accounts said otherwise.

"I was determined that we should get to the bottom of the matter. I wanted to be fair."" Laughter.

He said newspaper accounts had suggested that there "had been an effort to conceal the facts, both from you—and from me." Laughter.

He called Presidential advisors H. R. Haldeman and John Erlighman "two of the finest public servants I have had the pleasure to know." Laughter.

And so it went, for 25 minutes the charade lasted. The buffoon spoke. The audience listened, disbelieved, and laughed. Seventeen times those 100 UMies thought Nixon was funny.

And so the back of Watergate was broken. One hundred tired, muddling, naive, freaked-out college students saw through the game.

They laughed when he said he had appointed a man "of unimpeachable integrity"—Elliot Richardson—as acting Attorney General.

"Looking back in history," he said, "two questions have been asked—how could it have happened? . . . who is to blame?"

"In every organization the man at the top must bear the responsibility." Laughter.

"I accept that responsibility."

But who will stand trial?

Do Not Support A.I.M.

By MICHAEL ALTFILLISCH

Ever since the American Indian Movement (A.I.M.) activists have taken over Wounded Knee there have been efforts to legitimize their actions as a truly representative expression of despair of the Native Americans of the country in general and of the Oglala people in specific. The seizure of Wounded Knee is the crystalization of many things but it is not an expression of the collective will of the Oglala people.

When I make this statement I speak with a certain advantage. Unlike many people I have not had to depend on the Eastern Media Establishment for all of my information. With the exception of an occasional column buried in the recesses of the New York Times, coverage by the eastern media has been abysmal. The western South Dakota newspapers have given the entire series of events much more coverage. As my father is an expatriot South Dakotan he subscribes to the papers and I have had access to them.

These papers have talked about a lot of things that the Support Wounded Knee are either ignorant about or have willfully not mentioned. When the militants seized Wounded Knee they disrupted the lives and displaced a large number of Indians who have actively resented this. They have organized themselves and set up a road block to starve out A.I.M. In retaliation A.I.M. has burned down six houses in Wounded Knee that belong to people who are being taken care of by the Red Cross. In their activities A.I.M. has desecrated two churches. Descrated is not my word this was the angry reaction of an Indian from the Pine Ridge Reservation who wrote a letter to the editor of the Rapid City Journal protesting this. In order to feed themselves A.I.M. has taken it upon itself to appropriate whatever livestock they can find. This has been Indian livestock. The slaughtering of Indian beef stock painfully acquired has angered many residents of the Pine Ridge Reservation. The A.I.M. people have engaged in a campaign of terror to subdue anyone who obstructs them.

A.I.M. has not been able to secure the support of the Oglala people. Four times running A.I.M. has failed to impeach the tribal chairman. When a petition to have elections was submitted to be verified it was found to be loaded with the signatures of children.

Non-residents of the reservation and elderly people who can't read and didn't understand what they had signed. The A.I.M. people have fired off salvoes of innuendo to grab as much national media coverage as possible because massive local support doesn't exist. A.I.M. claimed that they would have a 1000 Indians come to Sturgis S.D. to protest the charging of an Indian with the murder of a white woman. 120 showed up. After Wounded Knee A.I.M. claimed that they would have 500 people from the Rosebud Reservation join them. They never did. When Vernon Bellecourt spoke at UMass, he said that 1000 people would converge on Wounded Knee to break the blockade. They didn't.

No one white or Indian feel that the present system that is inflicted upon the Indians should remain. Neither Richard Wilson, the tribal Chairman or Dennis Banks are ecstatic about the BIA or conditions on the reservation.

A.I.M. has not been able to gain the massive support of the Oglala people because of several reason. In seizing Wounded Knee they have disrupted the lives of Indians not the BIA or the federal government. The people who were displaced by the seizure have organized themselves to starve out AIM. They also are threatening to take their guns and attack AIM if they don't get out of their town. AIM has not only gone after Dick Wilson on the Pine Ridge Reservation but has demanded to do away with all present Tribal Governments see themselves as the only vehicle for self-determination that the Indian has and feel that A.I.M. threatens this. Because of this they have voted to support Dick Wilson.

Another factor that has caused the people on the Pine Ridge Reservation to resent the AIM people is the feeling that the AIM people have stirred up fear and anger among the white community that they will have to deal with long after A.I.M. people have left. Before seizing Wounded Knee there were violent confrontations in Custer, S.D. and Rapid City, S.D. After the seizure A.I.M. burned down the house and stole some cattle from a local white rancher. A.I.M. has succeeded very thoroughly in scaring the hell out of a lot of people in S.D. Many feel that after the confrontation at Wounded Knee there will be a backlash to cope with.

Added to this is the feeling that A.I.M. is sabotaging the plans the Tribal Governments have made for the economic development of the reservations. In order to improve the economic situation and create more jobs on the reservation the Tribal Governments had planned to stimulate a tourist industry. Capitalizing on their chief asset, lots of land, the tribes have come up with a 10 million dollar program to develope the reservations for hunting, camping and fishing. The tribes will receive direct fees from these activities and will get some jobs out of the support activities such as grocery stores, gas stations, etc. Needless to say the spectre of guerilla war does not help to attract tourists.

By their violent confrontation tactics A.I.M. has created a situation that they no longer control and which no one may be able to control. There is a damn good chance that there will be a lot of people killed, mostly Indians. There are a lot of angy people running around. They are armed and getting edgy. You have for starters several hundred A.I.M. people at Wounded Knee. Next you have those people who were displaced from Wounded Knee. They have armed themselves and have been sneaking out on the prairie at night to snipe at the A.I.M. people. In addition they are threatening to attack them if they don't surrender. After the displaced residents of Wounded Knee there are the supporters of Tribal Chairman Richard Wilson who look upon A.I.M. as a group of predominatly outsiders who are trying to overthrow their tribal government. They have armed themselves and are out to make things as hard for A.I.M. as possible.

There are two segments of the white population in S.D. that might also be actors in the tragedy. There are the White ranchers who feel very immediately threatened and armed and organized themselves. There are also some people who have been writing letters to the editor suggesting that members of the South Dakota National Guard organize themselves extralegally and go in and simply clean A.I.M. right out.

In the middle of this there is the FBI and the federal marshalls. Originally they merely had to contend with trying to apprehend the A.I.M. people. Now they have to keep the factions apart to prevent the outbreak of a general war.

There are hundreds of armed and scared people running around in S.D. and there is going to be a disaster unless the A.I.M. people surrender themselves so that the whole general hysteria can be defused.

A.I.M. has got the federal government to agree to investigate the Government of Richard Wilson and to investigate the BIA. No further purpose will be served by continuing the occupation of Wounded Knee. It will instead heighten the chance of bloodshed.

If the people of UMass realize what they are doing they will stop sending money to A.I.M. By sending them money you are perpetuating the potential for disaster. If you want to help the people on the Pine Ridge Reservation then please send money to the hospital on the reservation. They could definitely use the money to expand their medical facilities. Another way that money could be used is to send it to the St. Francis Mission at St. Francis on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota. If you want to help the Sioux people than please resist in your efforts to strenthen A.I.M.

The Case For Jewish Oppression

To The Editor:

As a Jew, I feel compelled to express my abhorrence at what appears to be an almost monolithic Jewish stand against any criticism directed against Israel, as well as any accurate expose of white racism, of which Jews play a major collaborative role throughout the world.

Isolated from any context, the case for Jewish oppression, and the anguish experienced in fighting for survival, are humane and just. However, because there is a very real context in which Jews operate, that experience needs to be placed in perspective, and that anguish becomes tainted with evil. The Jewish claim for a homeland can never be completely justified if it is at the expense of a homeland of another group of people. Despite protests by Golda Meir and others that Palestinians are simply southern Syrians, or that "all Arabs are alike anyway," the fact remains that Palestinian people do comprise a nation, with a long history and distinct culture, and no rationalizing can make their right to their homeland any less just, any less important, than Jewish claims.

Certainly Jews have experienced viscious oppression. But Jews have allied themselves on the side of white oppressors - Europe/America - and the nation of Israel was born. So many African states, without white power to support them, had to wait until the 1960's for their so-called independence. Regardless of Jewish culture 5000 years ago, the reality is that a by and large white European culture has been transplanted, imposed, upon a particular Arabic culture, and a white European law system (never noted for its fairness) comprises justice there.

Within the Jewish community of Israel itself, white racism is in bountiful supply. Jews from Africa and the Middle East live in ghetto conditions that no white Russian Jew would be allowed. Black Jews arrive in Israel just as penniless as do some white Jews from Europe, yet the later are aforded opportunities and conditions reserved only for what can be regarded as fit for the upper caste.

We hear of Jewish protests regarding the treatment of Soviet Jewry, in and of itself a humane and just cause. Yet never do these protesters mention the behavior of the Jewish community in South Africa, where is silently views the murder of millions of Africans, and in addition, plays an active role in perpetuating that vile system. Thus, as-oppressors, Jews even have one up on Catholic silence during World War II.

And then there is the role that I and other Jews play in the United States. Most unlike the African experience here, Jewish families have been allowed to stay together, we were allowed to practice our religion, and we are almost all white. As whites, we reap the endless list of benefits that a white racist society by definition affords all whites. Clearly, Jews here are products of a white, Judeo-Christian European experience, and, as such, we fit in very well; for in America if you're white you're right. Jewish people have again chosen to side with oppressors, doing practically nothing as a community to alter the pervasivesness of white institutional domination in this country except to become very much a part of it, and thereby perpetuate it. Jews apparently see no need to become involved in changing this racist structure because our whiteness is so central to us, and as such guarantees that difficulties arising from anti-semitism are very minor when compared to the luxury of life afforded us here.

Dick Gregory has pointed out that almost every Jew over the age of 15 has heard of another Jew do or say something that is detrimental to Black people, btut that has not been reason to become upset. Jewish exploitation of poor people in this country has been much-written about, past and present. I only wish to affirm that.

Thus, as a Jew, I feel shame, embarrassment, and anger towards the ethno-centric and tiresome "Jewish response" to the exposing of racism. Stokely Carmichael spoke for over an hour, implying Jewish complicity in oppression but twice, while at the same time offering his audience a magnificent, powerful, and sensitive response to the condition of oppression; yet so many Jews could reply with only emotional defensiveness based on a narrow-minded, racist perception of the world Jewish role in relation to oppressed people, thus effectively removing all onus of personal responsibility from oneself.

Specifically, it is those Jews who, while enjoying the fruits of the "American Dream" promised to all whites, take freedom for granted. It is the Jews who choose to react only to criticism - so much of it justified - instead of to the advantages we have accrued unjustly, who prove that the race problem is a white problem, and that we whites, in our present behavior, are the obstructors to justice.

Parking Surcharge

To The Editor:

I am writing in the hope of correcting one or two misunderstandings that might have been engendered by the brevity of Mr. Fine's report to the Collegian of April 27.

The surcharge for overnight storage of campus residents' vehicles was proposed by the Parking and Transportation Council in an effort to encourage the most efficient use of our scarce parking resources consistent with the legitimate requirements of all concerned. The need for a surcharge to discourage the storage of vehicles on campus is based on the following arguments: 1) the parking of cars by those who have no other reasonable means to gain access to the campus is, in general, a more pressing need than the storage of cars by those who reside on campus; 2) during periods of snow emergency, vehicles stored on campus seriously impede the prompt removal of snow, thus effectively pre-empting far more than their fair share of parking space. It is primarily for this latter reason that overnight parking and storage must be carefully regulated and restricted from the $5 lots and the other areas for which commuter demands are expected to be particularly great.

Special provisions for overnight storage of vehicles, and the additional costs of such provisions, should not be confused with the budgeting of funds for the removal of snow by University Physical Plant personnel. The cost of snow removal from all lots and roadways on the campus is borne completely by the State; no contributions from parking revenues is made or contemplated for this activity.

Paul W. Shuldiner, Chairman
Parking and Transportation Council

Seeing Red

To The Editor:

Didn't anyone inform your distinguished columnist Bob Estelle that the McCarthy era was in the early 1950's, not in 1973? I'd expect to find his column (Get us out of the U.N.) in a newspaper twenty years ago.

I think it's quite nice that there's a major international body located in the U.S. working against "our interests." Our interests have all too often proved to be the interests of imperialism and exploitation. But besides that, the U.N. has proven to be an essentially powerless organization. In what ways have they ever effected U. S. policy regarding any issue? It's just nice to have a place where people from almost every country in the world can get together to shoot the shit. Maybe when a major worldwide crisis arises again the U.N. will be the body to prevent the might of the nuclear giants from being unleashed.

By the way Bob, thank you for reminding me that the word "Red" isn't just a color. I was beginning to forget. Wake up!

The Real Problem

To The Editor:

Re: Proposed parking fee increase

Now that the squawking has begun it's a good time to THINK for a few seconds (that's all it takes) and attack the real problem at hand.

Some people who have been around for four or more years may recall the days when legal possession of a car on campus was pretty rare and an admitted luxury. And most will agree that there was substantially less difficulty parking then because there was more nearly one space for each car.

The problem now is that too many people INSIST on having an automobile on campus. And the problem is that many people who have automobiles on campus simply do not absolutely need them. The GIMME's (those who never got their wrists slapped or went without a lollipop) are finding out that unlimited "freedom" to keep and use an automobile is not possible without some adverse side effects. That is, if everybody who lives on campus INSISTS on having an automobile there simply can't be enough spaces. So bitch if you like; but if you're one of those who feels that he NEEDS an automobile to drive from Southwest to your Phys Ed class in Boyden or from The Hill to SBA, YOU are the problem.

You are abusing your right (unquestioned) to own and drive an automobile because the benefits which YOU (the individual) derive from it are far outweighed by the detriment which WE (the community) derive from it. Before you complain too bitterly about the new proposed parking fees, please take a minute for some self-inspection. If you are one of those who doesn't absolutely NEED an automobile, yet INSIST on registering one on campus, then YOU are the problem at hand. And the parking board is trying to price you out of the running.

Stokely

I was greatly disappointed and more than a little disturbed by Stokely Carmichael's speech at the Student Union Ballroom last Wednesday. I went to hear a man who, in light of his awareness of the suffering which Blacks have under-in this country and around the world, would exhibit feelings of compassion toward the suffering which other segments of the human race have had to endure. Instead I heard a Black racist who subtlely advocated the killing of whites and who, with a contemptuous wave of the hand, brushed aside the fact the Jews, as much as the Blacks, have been the object of horrible oppression and prejudice. I went expecting to hear a speech which would attempt to deal honestly and realistically with the issues which now face Black Americans. Instead I heard an endless stream of intellectual banalities and mystifications, only partially disguised by their brilliant oratorical garb.

Among the more ludicrous themes in Mr. Carmichael's speech was his insistence that the advent of "scientific socialism" is an inevitable certainty according to the inexorable laws of history. Unfortunately Mr. Carmichael neglected to inform his audience of exactly how the revolution would occur and his one dabble in Marxist theory was a pronounced failure. The collapse of capitalism is not, according to Marx, precipitated by the constant rise of prices and wages, as Mr. Carmichael would have it. Wages, if they fluctuate at all, go down. What does happen, according to Marxist theory, is that the number of workers who lose their jobs at the hands of technological innovation steadily increases. Since the capitalist makes his profit from the fact that he can afford to pay the worker less than the value of what he produces, the more machines (constant capital) in proportion to the number of workers (variable capital), which he employs in the production process the less profits he makes. The capitalist's predicament is worsened by the fact that while he uses more machines to increase his level of productivity, he is contributing to the "industrial reserve army" of the unemployed and can thus not realize his profits. It would have been preferable for Mr. Carmichael to have defended the death warrant which Marx issued to capitalism and his going so far as to misconstrue Marx was inexcusable.

In addition, Mr. Carmichael's assertion that all Blacks are Africans, seemed to me a bit shallow. I think he under-estimates the strength of the ties which one has to a country in which one has grown up. As much as I dislike America in many ways, and I share Mr. Carmichael's abhorence of the inhumanity of the capitalist system, I still feel very much an American and could never seriously consider living elsewhere. So far as racial seperatism in general is concerned, while I can see its attraction for Blacks, I doubt that it is the most practical or moral solution to racism, past or present.

What was to me the most disturbing thing about Mr. Carmichael's speech was its overall tone and the nature of the audiences reaction. Many of Mr. Carmichael's remarks were extremely vicious and each was greeted with a kind of frenzied applause from the audience. On several occasions the atmosphere in the ballroom was so emotional and explosive that I was reminded of the huge Nazi rallies depicted in the movie, Triumph of the Will. Those who attended the speech, as opposed to those who heard or read about it second hand, can attest to the fact that the comparison is only slightly overdrawn.

I am writing this as a white; in essence, as an outsider. Were I a Black, my reaction to Mr. Carmichael's address might have been different. I would like to think not. I would like to think of myself, and other people of all races and nationalities, as immune to the kind of acrimonious hatred which Stokely Carmichael apparently believes to be the spirit in which the world's oppressed and disadvantaged should be rescued. If this is humanism, something is very, very wrong.

Female Sexual Chauvinism

By BILL BAIRD

(Editor's note: The following article by birth control and abortion advocate Bill Baird is a reponse to the controversy surrounding his recent visit to UMass.)

The liberation movement for abortion and birth control affects men and women. The whole range of society's problems, i.e.: overpopulation, environmental pollution, unwanted children, womans rights, etc. affects women, men and children. Approximately 10,000 people who die daily of starvation according to the U.N. are men and children as well as women. The ignorance, inaccessability and archaic laws are responsible for much suffering to individual human rights. What triggered me on a personal level, a decade ago, I was clinical director for a national birth control manufacturer. In one of the hospitals that I was coordinating research with concerning birth control, I had seen a 29-year-old black woman, pregnant for the 9th time, who, in a desperate effort to abort herself used an 8-inch piece of wire coathanger. Tragically she went through the wall of the uterus, into the bowel and hemmoraged to death. Bad enough that she died, but that she left motherless 8 little boys and girls is an example of how ignorance can hurt us all. Her only knowledge of birth control was the use of vinegar as a douche. As I became more aware that these archaic laws existed in N.Y. and other parts of the U.S., I decided to fight them.

I realize many of the poor had misconceptions that cause conceptions about their own bodies. I realized that many of the poor were afraid of hospital surroundings so I decided to go to them. I took my savings and bought a 25' van, fixed it up as a living room and drove it at night and weekends into poor areas and was received with tremendous enthusiasm by the poor, both men and women.

This May 14, 8 years ago in 1965 while I was teaching birth control and abortion and drug addiction to the black poor of Hempstead, N.Y., I suddenly saw the eerie red lights of police cars bounce off the walls and I heard the charge "Get him!" I suddenly was surrounded by 15 policemen, handcuffed and charged with violating a 125 year old law of showing "obscene objects" (birth control and abortion devices). I was jailed overnight and faced a 1 year prison term. My arguments were as consistent then as they are today: That the individual, regardless of age, sex, or marital status has the right of birth control and abortion help. I suddenly learned that the conservative pharmaceutical companies did not want their executives arrested and I was faced with the decision of being fired from the position that paid me $20,000/year or give up the fight for individual rights. I made my decision to fight. I quickly and painfully learned that I was unemployable. I was black-listed. Frank McGee, NBC-TV did a documentary on my work in 1966 based on the fact that I was able to set up the nation's first non-profit birth control and abortion center, contrary to law, with a medical team of doctors, and nurses, helping the poor from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. and the only employment I could get without compromising my beliefs of individual freedom was working at Creedmoor Mental Hospital for $2.00 an hour from midnight to 8 a.m. The job lasted approximately 1 year until 1966 when several black welfare mothers were threatened with jailing on charges of fornication in Freehold, N.J. by Marcus Daly, the welfare commissioner. I drove my mobile "Plan Van" to N.J. to teach the poor about birth control and abortion. Again I was pulled out by police from the van and charged with violating a 125 year old birth control law and I was ultimately convicted and sentenced to 20 days in prison. By this time more of the national media was picking up my call to repeal birth control and abortion laws (not reform). I was invited on national TV shows, ie: Joe Pyne, Alan Burke, etc. and said "If you are pregnant, I will help you get an abortion realizing that my enemies were aware that every woman we were helping was a potential 5-10 year prison term for "aiding and abetting" an abortion. Literally thousands of people were helped which meant thousands of times a 5 to 10 year jail term was risked. I was unemployed as a direct result of the New Jersey arrest. Nobody would hire me. I found, though that I was getting tremendous response from students who joined me in abortion and birth control freedom marches. In fact, the nation's first birth control group was at Hofstra University, set up by me. The nation's first abortion fund was set up by myself at the University of Maine whereby students lent money to others for abortions. I had to carve out a whole new career to support a family and became a lecturer, which has been primarily my only source of income to finance a family as well as my work all these years.

In 1967, I received several calls from the Editor of the Boston University newspaper, Ray Mungo, whose concern was that Massachusetts single women could not get birth control and abortion help. He gave me a petition of 700 names of men and women asking me if I would challenge the constitutionality of a 100 year old Mass. law, called "Crimes against Chastity", which carried with it a 10 year prison term for 2 counts. I was ultimately convicted of 2 crimes, each carrying a maximum of 5 years in jail. One was for exhibiting a diaphragm, IUD, and a package of pills and the other for giving one package of EMko foam to a college student before 2,000 people at a lecture at Boston University. I was ultimately given a 3 month prison term at the Charles St. Jail. I also knew though, that if I would be fortunate enough to get the case before the U.S. Supreme Court that not only would the law of Massachusetts be declared unconstitutional, but the laws in 26 states would also be unconstitutional, thereby benefitting millions of people. I also knew that if they agreed with me that if birth control is the right of privacy, as I have contended for 10 years, that not only the laws on abortion would go but the laws on fornication, homosexuality, etc. would eventually go. This was the first time in history the U.S. Supreme Court was going to hear arguments on the rights of women to control their own bodies. I pleaded with various national and local feminist groups including NOW, WOONAC, etc. to file an amicus curaie brief supporting the rights of the individual to birth control and abortion realizing that millions of women would benefit directly if we were to win. One would reasonably figure that with 255 chapters of NOW, and WOONAC groups, etc, there would be at least 1 brief filed from each state, for a total of 50 briefs of support. No one can alter the disgraceful, historical fact that when I appeared before the U.S. Supreme Court only a year and a half ago, there was not one brief of support for women's rights to control their bodies filed by the feminist activist groups! Jackie Ceballos, President of NYC, N.O.W. said on channel 5 TV "if Bill Baird were a woman, we would have backed him!" This is the female sexual chauvinism that is the "sick" part of the liberation struggle, that must be exposed and fought. Female sexual chauvinism is as bad as male sexual chauvinism. Betty Freidan, one of the founders of the women's liberation movement, said on page one of the N.Y. Post "It is rumored that Bill Baird is a CIA agent". Last summer an abortion rally was held in a public building at Hunter College, open to the public, but only for those that were women. When I protested the discrimination against men, Ms. Mintz, one of the leaders said, in the N.Y. Post: "I can see why Bill Baird is so upset because he's layed himself on the line for us so many times. What happens to him happens to us all the time". When I arrived there, not only was I banned but all men were banned including male reporters, because of their sex. Again, an obvious act of sexism and discrimination.

Then, when I was invited to speak at UMass, I got calls not to come because "we do not want a man" and threats of castration. I drove to UMass on Monday and met with Ms. Michaelson, an administrator and she told me that there was a lot of hostility from the Southwest Women's Center. I decided to meet directly with the women with the hopes that I could help them understand that people can contribute to a movement regardless of their sex. In the meantime, 2 Collegian staff members were assigned to cover my activities. I can not imagine that people from the S.W. Women's Center could be so naive to think that I would tell the college editor who to assign, or what sex the reporter should be. Within a matter of minutes of meeting Judy Katz and the other members at the SW Women's Center, I was amazed to see how rapidly she wanted to tell me she was a lesbian. I am not concerned with anyone's sexual habits, but rather that people be free to express themselves sexually anyway they see fit and that obviously includes the gay liberation effort. In trying to explain what my lecture would be about, I told her I would show a film of an abortion. She protested vehemently saying it would sexually arouse men, to quote her: "Men would get their rocks off". Her own discrimination against men was obvious when she felt men couldn't control themselves if they saw a vagina on the screen, but yet lesbians who have a strong interest in vaginas obviously, in her eyes, could. It is interesting to note her discrimination by calling Collegian reporters "boys" and to insult me in Friday's article by calling me a "Pig".

A woman who identified herself as "Susan" in talking about the inequalities said "We will continue to get even with men, until equality is reached." A woman in Ms. Michaelson's office said, in the presence of Collegian reporters, that when she goes to the SW Women's Center on occasion and wears a dress that she is criticized for wearing one. It is amazing in the quest for freedom how the "self proclaimed freedom fighters" won't let others be free. Her attack on both the reporter and photographer because they were male were again examples of the woman's own brand of sexism. The article by Mark Vogler that appeared in the Collegian was very accurate. Ms. Katz repeats throughout her article her claim of my "frequent mention" that I was in prison which she deliberately distorted. What I was referring to was the fact that if one compares any other social movement...i.e. in the peace moevement one heard "free Dr. Spock" by those who supported his views; in the civil rights movement one heard "Free Bobby", "Free Angela" by those who shared that view. Yet, in the abortion, birth control movement one of the great abortion pioneers who was jailed repeatedly, there was not a cry from any of the feminists to free Dr. Rappoport or any other male jailed for this cause, only because of our sex!

Some of you may recall I recently picketed the Roman Catholic Bishops Conference in Virginia along with women from Trinity College to protest the church's discrimination against women and the abortion issue. I was arrested by 2 off duty policemen who were hired by the Catholic Bishops and faced one year in jail. Again I asked women for support including NOW and was again refused because of my sex. This prompted a public news statement from a group that would normally not get involved with abortion. It was a letter addressed to women's liberation groups saying "We challenge your commitment to the liberation struggle....and your conspiracy of silence concerning Bill Baird's fight in Virginia." It was signed by the N.Y. State VP of NAACP, President CORE, President Leadership Training Institute, and President of the Black Federation. Later I was cleared on the charges and the ACLU has filed a law suit for 26 million dollars for false and malicious arrest against the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and I will use the money for free abortion clinics for women. I have long supported the concept of equal rights for women, equal job opportunity, equal pay, but I will never support the concept that women are "more" equal than men! When a movement calls for equality-to end discrimination against women-then hypocritically practices its own brand of discrimination and sexism, it sickens and weakens the entire movement! Banning men has been happening nationally, including a male UPI reporter at the National Women's Political Caucus in Texas, recently. Exposing this discrimination and sexism and fighting to remove it can only strengthen the liberation struggle. Sexism by men must be exposed and fought but students should not be fearful of exposing sexism by women.

There is enough oppression to go around for us all. We need not oppress each other saying you cannot speak here because you are the wrong sex, you cannot enter a building because you are the wrong sex, or you cannot be hired because you are the wrong sex.

Judging from student reaction to my having spoken to an overflow audience last Wednesday, many women as well as men came up and said it was the best lecture they had ever heard and that they would like me to come back to UMass. I am hoping that when I speak on Tuesday night before the SW Assembly that they will retract their statement regarding the 2 Collegian reporters and myself, based on the one-sided heresay testimony presented only by the women's center. I am happy to have learned that over 1,000 students have signed a petition of support for me, condemning S.W. Assembly's action.

It is my hope that everyone will understand the principle that we see each other not as young or old, black or white, or male or female; rather we see each other as human beings and then the concept of human liberation will prevail.

For direction information concerning this article or help concerning abortion or birth control, please call me at my Hempstead Abortion Center, 107 Main St., Hempstead, Long Island. Telephone (516) 538-2626.

Ripoff Help

BY MDC STAFF

Ripoff victims take heart!

WMPIRG, the student funded consumer group, has a new service designed to help with consumer problems.

The Small Claims Court Citizens' Advisory Service will encourage use of the court as a fast, effective way to settle disputes without the aid of a lawyer. The Advisory Service will open centers this month in Amherst, Northampton, Williamstown, Pittsfield and North Adams.

The Amherst group has published a consumer information booklet on "How to Sue in Small Claims Court in Western Massachusetts." Both the booklet and the service centers are intended to aid victims of unfair business practice in use of the small claims court.

Fifty students from seven area colleges recently completed a four-week workshop exploring use of the court by consumers. They attended court sessions and held weekly discussions with lawyers, government officials and professors familiar with the small claims process.

Pat Hennessey, a Hampshire College student who coordinated the training workshop, said volunteers are now available to aid citizens with complaints. "They will not act as attorneys offering legal advice," Hennessey said, "but the students can provide information enabling consumers to take their own cases to the court."

"Most individuals don't realize that they can file claims up to $400 for money lost through business frauds, personal damages or contract breaches," she added.

Disputes with a landlord over security deposits or with an auto mechanic regarding faulty repairs are the types of cases properly dealt with in small claims court system as part of her course work at Hampshire.

The 20-page booklet, "How to Sue in Small Claims Court," outlines basic procedures for filing small claims court actions. It lists court addresses, clerks and schedules for Berkshire, Hampden, Franklin and Hampshire counties. It also contains examples of forms required for small claims court action and helpful tips for preparing testimony, appearance in court and carrying out the suit.

The District Court of Hampshire County, where small claims suits are handled for Amherst, Pelham, and Belchertown, is in the county courthouse on Main Street in Northampton.

Clerk is Charles Julikowski; office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., and small claims are heard every Thursday at 2 p.m.

Sunderland residents must take their complaints to the District Court of Franklin County in Greenfield, where Delbert Witty is clerk. Small claims are heard every fourth Tuesday at 10 a.m., according to the WMPIRG booklet.

Copies of the booklet and further information on the advisory service are available from the WMPIRG office, 233 N. Pleasant St., 256-6434.

Bromery Accepts Grant

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, left, receives a $5000 Exxon Education Foundation grant check from two Springfield Exxon Co. officials. Robert E. The grant will be used by the chemical engineering department to support undergraduate teaching and research at the master's level.

Baha'i Association

Books Presented On History Of Faith

The Baha'is of UMass and the Pioneer Valley will present Goodell Library with over ten volumes containing the teachings of their 100-year-old faith, tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

Mr. Sigfried Feller, head biographer, will formally receive the volumes which include The Book of Certitude, The Advent of Divine Justice, and The World Order of Baha'u'llah. These are being given to supplement the Baha'i books already on the Goodell shelves.

This group of books contain the fundamental principles and laws of the World Order of Baha'u'llah.

This presentation is being made within the period from April 21 to May 23, in which the Baha'is of the United States are joining with their fellow Baha'is in 333 independent countries and significant territories and islands of the world in celebrating the successful conclusion of a nine-year international plan, a period that has seen the unprecedented growth of the Baha'i Community.

May 2 is the twelfth day of Rivdan, a joyous Baha'i festival celebrating the declaration of Baha'u'llah in 1863. Since this declaration, the Baha'i Faith has practiced the oneness of mankind, the equality of men and women, the elimination of racial and other prejudices, the need for justice in economic and social situations, the establishment of a world international body to eliminate international warfare, and the need for a moral family structure to provide the bedrock for civilization.

The "Nine Year Plan," launched in 1964 by the Universal House of Justice, was the fourth in a series of systematic teaching plans successfully carried out in this century by the followers of Baha'u'llah, Prophet-Founder of the Baha'i Faith.

WMUA Openings

China Today

Tonight at 7:30 WMUA's OPENINGS series features a look at China today. Stanley Kuong, a doctoral candidate at the UMass School of Education and a native of Hong Kong, joins WMUA's Joe C. to talk about his recent visit to the mainland. As a Chinese, Kuong faced no language barrier. He travelled extensively and freely in the eastern parts of the Peoples' Republic. Kuong is uniquely qualified to comment upon what is happening in China; and, as a long-time student in the U.S., to compare China today with the U.S.

University Orchestra Leaders Linda Yamamoto, Ann Leathers (concert mistress), and Ronald Steele (conductor), will participate in a public concert which will begin at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday night, at Bowker Auditorium.

Public Concert At Bowker Tomorrow

Music by Stravinsky, Haydn, Handel, and Purcell will be presented Wednesday, May 2, by the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Symphony Orchestra, the University Chorus, and soloists from the UMass faculty.

The free, public concert will be a 3:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on campus. Alan Harler will direct the Chorus, and soloists will be: Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Donna Harler, alto; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass.

The program will include the Concerto Grosso Op. 6, No. 1 by Handel, "Welcome to all the pleasures" by Purcell, "Ebony Concerto" by Stravinsky, and Symphony No. 45 ("Farewell") by Franz Joseph Haydn. Ronald Steele, University Symphony music director, will conduct.

Dr. Cole In May Day Talk

The example of Cuban socialism as a way to organize society around humane values is the subject of tonight's Project 10 discussion series, "Cuba and the Socialist Alternative to Capitalism," led by Dr. Johnneta Cole, the University Afro-American Studies professor who visited Cuba for three weeks late last year.

"What I saw in Cuba," Dr. Cole says, "showed me a specific example of how a society can be organized which would eliminate such functions of capitalism as racism and sexism as well as promote the struggle in the world against imperialism."

Active participation by the average person is one of the main values expressed in Cuban society, she notes, which includes productive work by all, internationalism, and egalitarianism.

Manual labor is shared by all, including university students, who must work four hours a day in exchange for free education, housing, and allowances.

Tonight's discussion will meet in the Main Lounge of Pierpont in Southwest, beginning at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited to participate in the talk, which is held to commemorate May Day as the day of worker solidarity.

Next Tuesday, May 8 at eight p.m., the Project is sponsoring a showing of the feature length movie documentary on the 1950 French expedition in the Himalayas, Anapurna, a classic mountaineering adventure film. Admission is free.

Polish Filmmaker Speaks Tonight

The Department of Slavic languages and Literatures is pleased to announce that Professor Marian Marzynski of the Rhode Island School of Design will show and discuss several of his award-winning films on May 2 at 7:30 p.m. in SBA 116.

Marzynski, who has studied at the Polish Film Academy in Lodz, has produced more than 14 documentaries and 15 television films in Poland, Denmark, Sweden and Germany. His films have won numerous awards including, most recently, the Silver Prize at the International Film Festival in Switzerland in 1972 for the film "The Strangers."

Professor Marzynski was born in Poland in 1937, received a Master's degree in Journalism from the University of Warsaw, and has worked for Polish radio as a producer. He later switched to Polish television where he worked until 1969. In addition to the TV films and documentaries that he has made, Marzynski has also written several plays dealing with various political and criminal trials.

The event is open to the public without charge.

Project Ten Set To Begin 'Experimental College'

A student and faculty initiated plan for a living-learning community, based on a corridor housing 20 students and focused on the study of small communities past and present and the work of organic gardening, will begin this fall in Project 10, the campus "experimental college."

According to one of the idea's sponsors, Elizabeth Martin of the comparative literature department, "the entire program will be for at least a year and can include full arrangements for course work related to the experiment."

"Students have said they want to make an effort to create a true organic community, small enough in size so that people can really grow to know one another well," she says.

"We need to prepare ourselves for the future energy crisis now being predicted by so many. Gardening, recycling, and good food preparation can become a course in survival for the future."

One of the plans for the experiment, according to English professor Charles Adams, Project 10 director, is to negotiate with Food Services for meal ticket exemptions for students participating in the corridor effort.

A kitchen and dorm food service for the Project, based in Pierpont in Southwest, is scheduled for completion this summer and would serve as the kitchen for the group's communal food preparation.

Another plan is to use Dining Commons garbage as the compost for the organic garden, which was begun in the Project a year ago.

The idea calls for workshop courses next spring on organic gardening, focused on planting and harvesting (in the summer and fall) food, and including freezing, canning, and drying.

Project 10 courses in the fall which relate to the experiment include seminars on Alternatives to the Family, Community Development, and possibly African Arts and Crafts (batik, tie-dying, etc.).

The core course, taught by Dr. Martin, is on the literature of religious communities, using historical and sociological modes as well as literary analysis on the monastic communities in Europe and America, from the Middle Ages to Thomas Merton.

In addition to drawing upon various speakers, she plans visits to nearby religious communities, the yoga ashram in Montague, the Trappist monastery in Spencer, and the Buddhist one in Haydenville.

Another core course in the fall, on the history of organic gardening, is also planned, led by such teachers as Prof. Barker in Plant and Soil Sciences and Joe McCrea, who teaches farming at Belchertown State School. Chuck Beryea, the owner of a local restaurant, will advise on natural food preparation and on cooking for large groups.

Other study possibilities include independent study under Project 10 faculty, particularly in the sociology of communes, human and community development, "free school" education, community folklore, etc.

Space for the "organic community" effort is on purpose not large, so anyone interested should apply in writing this week. Project applications may be picked up in the Project office (Pierpont) or at Room to Move (Student Union).

Applications should indicate the specific interest in the "organic community" corridor. People with questions can see Elizabeth Martin (office, 822 Thompson) or call Project community developer Jin Gilbert (6-5266), Charles Adams (5-0871), or Project head of residence Bob Brick (6-4572).

Another special corridor in the Project, in addition to the "academic" corridor planned for the fall, will be a corridor, adjacent to the "community" corridor, devoted to meditative disciplines.

Seniors-Describe Your Years As A UMie

Seniors may not live forever, but their words may.

The Senior Committee is now soliciting short statements from graduating students about their years at UMass for the Commencement programme centerfold.

The statements should be no more than two or three sentences long. The Senior Committee will select the statements on the basis of general interest and how well the writer can articulate his or her experiences.

The programme will be distributed to parents, students, and visitors at Commencement, May 26. It will also include the list of honorary degree recipients, facts about the University, and explanations about the Commencement rituals. A photographic description of Commencement will be mailed to all graduates later in the summer.

Any interested senior should leave his or her statement signed in the Collegian Office addressed to Don Glickstein, or in the Student Senate Office addressed to Denise Magnell.

WMUA

Tonight: 'What's Eating You?'

Tonight on WMUA from 6:30-7:00 it's the popular bitch show "What's Eating You?" It's the live call in show where you can air your complaints of UMass, Amherst, or the Pioneer Valley in general.

Your host Kent Best—6:30-7:00—WMUA.

TONIGHT!

JOHN FORD'S

HOW GREEN WAS MY VALLEY

It's a pity that so many people know so much about Bergman, Fellini, Truffaut, and Kubrick, but have never heard of John Ford, perhaps the greatest director of all. And this is one of Ford's best. Based on Richard Llewellyn's novel of a Welsh mining family, the film won 8 Academy Awards. (It was the culprit that beat CITIZEN KANE for the 1941 Oscar.) It's a beautiful film and if you go with it, it will really move you.

Don't change your summer plans

If you're going to spend a lot of this coming summer around the water—sailing and swimming—you'll want the protection of Tampax tampons.

Girls have frequently wondered about swimming during those difficult days. Old-fashioned napkins make swimming impossible, but with Tampax tampons the message has always been: "Go ahead and swim." You're dependably protected internally. And you never have to worry about anything showing under swimsuits because internal protection is invisible protection.

NO BELTS NO PINS NO PADS NO CORK

So don't change your summer plans just because your period might interfere. Tampax tampons let you sail, swim, waterski, sunbathe—just like any other day of the month.

The internal protection more women trust

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

The late, great astrological writer and editor, Grant Lewi, was a Gemini. A current astrological editor who has done much to elevate the field is Edward Wagner, a Scorpio. The most famous of American astrologers was Evangeline Adams, an Aquarian. Two great Leo astrologers were Alan Leo and Llewellyn George. An Aquarian astrologer who did much in her lifetime to popularize astrology was Bianca Holmes. She was stubborn and charming and a friend.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on change, the completion of task, a chance to free yourself from a legal bind. What occurs is swift. Touch all bases. Take nothing for granted. Your own initiative is key. Be independent, not arrogant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Strive for new start. Study Aries message. Work schedule is revised. Nothing is apt to occur halfway—it is all or nothing. Keep up with current happenings. You could be on brink of major opportunity.

GEMINI (May 21-Jaun 20): One who means much to you may be far away—key is to establish communication. Holding things in now is not wise. Your emotions need an outlet. Aquarian could play important role. Don't feel there is but one way. Diversity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Burden is lifted. You have more freedom of movement. What was holding you back turns out to be less than solid. You can make your way through—you can make your way. Sagittarian might play key role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work within circle of your own knowledge. You are able to make ideas come to life. Have faith in your ability to best express what you do and what to do. You feel an inner strength. You achieve and others recognize the achievement.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Gain comes through unusual procedures. Following the crowd would be an error. Key now is to be an innovator. Doing so spells profit. Gemini person could play prominent role. Be ready for change and variety.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Publicity could accompany your efforts. You could be pleased by sudden windfall. But maintain balance. You will not be given anything on proverbial silver platter. Key is to be realistic, especially about family situation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): See persons as they are, not a romanticized version. Strive to understand behind scenes maneuvers. If you don't know, ask. Throw aside false pride. You can step up, you can make progress. But you must be perceptive and relentless in pursuit of truth.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar aspect is indicative of allies coming from unexpected sources. You are given more responsibility accompanied by additional opportunity. Capricorn could play important role. Accept overtime duty.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cooperate with Sagittarian. Complete assignment. Leave no loose ends. By double checking, you could save yourself money and prevent embarrassment. One who usually is stable now makes eccentric decision.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creative associate presents idea which needs to develop. Don't rush. Take time to consider current consequences. Message received should not be taken literally. Follow up could contain key revision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Money and how to use it, earn it and save it—this now is emphasized. Take no unnecessary risks. In trying to save money, be sure you are not ultimately wasting it. Message should become increasingly clear.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are vibrant, independent, an original thinker. You will, during 1973, have great opportunities for advancement, with September indicated as a highlight month. You draw to you many born under Leo. You are a determined person, but your sense of fair play enables you to see various points of view. Travel is indicated next month.

THE HANDS HAVE IT - Jerry Lucas and Don Nelson with a few other limbs thrown in, seem to be involved in some bizarre kind of ballet as they hit the boards in Sunday's basketball action. The Celtics lost the game and the series and now go home to await the start of the next NBA season. (AP Photo)

Ruggers Romp, 13-0; Roll Over, 0-19

By WEBB ELLIS

It was just a case of coming up against a better team as the UMass ruggers won one and lost one this weekend. It was the first defeat this season for the ruggers.

On Saturday, the ruggers beat Tufts at home, 13-0, with touchdowns by running backs Nick Abbott and Doug Knapp. Rick Scarpignato kicked a touchdown conversion and a field goal for a total of five points on the day to finish the scoring.

On Sunday afternoon the Charles River Rugby Club, formerly called the Tufts Alumni, visited UMass. The results were not the same as on Saturday, with the "Rate," (a self-adopted name), rolling over UMass 19-0.

"They're just a better team," said Doug Knapp, the UMass fly half, after the game. "They're almost as good as the Boston Firsts (the best team in New England)."

As a Charles River player put it after the game, "It may seem like we're on an ego trip or something. That's because we are. We've been averaging around 26 points a game (UMass is averaging 15), and we've allowed only two touchdowns against us. You guys were good, though. You held us to our second lowest score this season."

Conditioning has been a problem for the UMass ruggers, causing them to tie Portland last week. In that game UMass died in the second half and allowed them to score two touchdowns in that period.

Some of the UMass players have petitioned the captains to run more in practice, so the ruggers should be in better shape when Keene State visits next Saturday.

The UMass B sides fared the same as the A's this weekend as they beat Tufts on Saturday and lost to a Springfield College team on Sunday.

On Saturday after the A game, wing forward Al Solish broke through and jumped on a loose ball in the end zone, to make the score 4-0. Later scrum half Malcolm Best scored a touchdown, his second of the season, and kicked the conversion to make the final score 10-0. Best is the second leading scorer on the UMass team.

On Sunday the UMass B's lost to Springfield College, 19-9, in a see-saw battle that saw UMass take the lead and lose it twice.

The B's led early in the game with a field goal by Doc Laurence. Later John Mangiardi, a new recruit from Holy Cross, broke a tackle and ran twenty yards for a touchdown. Doc Laurence made the conversion to finish the UMass scoring.

Next Saturday UMass will meet Keene State at home, and travel to Providence to play Brown on Sunday. Brown is considered one step below Charles River and on a par with the UMass rugby team.

Red Sox Quiz

By STEVE DECOSTA and CHARLES SPOSATO

Okay Red Sox fans. Here's your chance to show off your knowledge of our beloved Fenway friends. All you Red Sox groupies out there just jot down the answers and leave them at the sports desk of the Collegian before 7 o'clock tonight. Remember, no fair looking them up; this is just to see how many of you so-called Red Sox fans really know your stuff.

1. Three different Red Sox sluggers led the American League in runs batted in once during the 60's. Who were they?
2. Carl Yastrzemski has led the American League in batting three times in his career. Who was the last Red Sox hitter, prior to Yaz, to lead the league?
3. The last Red Sox hurler to throw a no-hitter was_____. The last pitcher to no-hit the Red Sox was _____.
4. Who was the first black man to play for the Red Sox?
5. In 1961 a Red Sox rookie set a record by committing only eight errors in a 154 game season. Who was he?
6. Yastrzemski was the last Red Sox player to be the American League's MVP. Prior to Yaz, who was the last Bosoxer to win the award?
7. In 1962, two Red Sox pitchers hurled no-hitters within two months of each other. Who were the pitchers?
8. What former Red Sox hurler also played basketball in the NBA?
9. Since 1916 the Red Sox have won only two American League pennants. In what years did they win them and who were the managers?
10. Carlton Fisk was last year's rookie of the year. Who was the last Red Sox first year man, before Fisk, to win the coveted award?
11. In 1967 a Red Sox rookie approached immortality by pitching a near no-hitter in his major league debut. Who was the pitcher who took his no-hitter into the ninth inning before giving up a two-out single? Also, who was the batter who broke up the blanking? (Ironically enough he joined the Red Sox on waivers later in the same season.)
12. One of the best Red Sox trades in recent years was the acquisition of Ray Culp from the Chicago Cubs. Who was the player given up by the Sox in the deal?
13. The first player to collect 12 straight hits accomplished the feat in a Red Sox uniform. Later he returned to manage the Sox in the early 60's. Who was he?
14. What Red Sox hurler was the victim of Roger Maris' 61st home run?
15. Luis Tiant had the lowest earned run average in the American League last year. Prior to Tiant, who was the last Red Sox twirler to lead the league in ERA?

National Champions Hand Rowers First Setback

By RICH CLAIR

The UMass oarsmen traveled to Derby, Conn., this weekend to tangle with two University division teams (UMass is in the college division), last year's National Champions UPenn and Yale. A strong effort against a high headwind and rough waters found the varsity oarsmen finishing 4.6 seconds behind Penn.

UMass got off to a smooth start to get a slight lead over Penn and two seats over Yale, and that is how it stayed for the first few hundred meters. Yale continued to fall behind and the battle continued between the two lead boats. At the bend at the 1000 meter mark of the course, the water got considerably worse and UMass got a crab on its starboard side, while Penn took a twenty stroke sprint which gave them the lead. Yale closed to within a length of the Minutemen here.

The rest of the race was a matter of UMass trying to regain the water lost to Penn. Continually pulling further away from Yale, the UMass eight began to move on Penn but there just was not enough course left. Penn finished with a 6:30 time, UMass at 6:24.6 with Yale ten seconds behind them at 6:34.

The JV's had a one-on-one race with Penn, Yale not having a second eight this year. The Mass boat had a poor start which gave Penn the first advantage and they never relinquished their lead. The JV's just could not get settled in the rough water and had a hard race all the way down the course which allowed Penn to finish 3 1/2 lengths ahead of them.

In the freshman event, UMass gave an impressive race. Penn has been on the water almost all year since the Skuykil River does not freeze, and this can make all the difference in frosh boats. UMass' freshman did not begin their intensive water training until this March. The finish had Penn one length ahead of Yale, and UMass one length behind the Elis.

Coach Vespoli felt that his varsity lost their race in the third 500 meters of the race. With the varsity not racing this week-end due to a technicality raised by the defeated Trinity College crew, Vespoli intends to drill his charges hard this week and next in preparation for the Dad Vail National Small College Championships on May 10-11.

The JV's and second frosh will be traveling to Providence this weekend to take on Dad Vail rivals Coast Guard and University Division School, Brown.

Gorillas Challenge Cross-Town Rivals

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Today's lacrosse game against the Lord Jeffs of Amherst is just the first of a string of three important games this week. On Thursday, the Gorillas will play Williams College here in a game which was postponed last Saturday because of the rainy weather. Then, on Saturday, they will host the New Hampshire squad.

Although the Williams game is supposed to be the BIG game this week, Coach Dick Garber and his players are not looking past Amherst tomorrow. "The Amherst game is also a fairly important game for us," said Coach Garber, "I have stressed to our guys that we can't look ahead to Williams but we have to think of Amherst." The rivalry between the Gorillas and the Lord Jeffs is a factor in this game. Commented Coach Garber: "This is a cross-town rivalry. Amherst always seems to play their best against us. They get psyched for this game. The scores of these games over the last several years have been fairly close. Last year we beat them 7-5 although we outshot them and outplayed them."

Daily Collegian

Coach Garber has seen the Jeffs play this year. He witnessed their bombing of Wesleyan, 14-4. "I was impressed with their team,," said Garber. "They have a good all-around team. They play a fundamentally sound game. They throw, catch, and pass well and they don't make silly mistakes." Amherst's team record is equally impressive. They are 4-1 with their only loss coming when they were upset by Trinity College. They have beaten M.I.T., Tufts, Lehigh, and Middlebury.

The Amherst team stresses defense. "Amherst," said Garber, "relies heavily on their defense to win games. They play a zone defense and most of their games have been fairly low scoring ones." A mainstay of their defense will be goalie, Fred Huskins. He is, in the words of Coach Garber, "a good goalie". The coach also said that the zone defense which Amherst will use "is bothersome". The Jeffs cannot win the game on defense alone so they will have to rely on their attack of Harry Hinkley and Tony Minicucci. They are both good feeders and can score. Also on offense, the Jeffs will have midfielder, Ed McMahon who scored three goals against Wesleyan and, according to Coach Garber, "looked good".

Amherst will employ their zone defense against the Gorillas tomorrow in order to stop their powerful offense. The Gorillas will field the starting team they have used for the past few weeks. It consists of Frank Garahan, Fred Michels, and Peter Connolly on attack; Dwight Blomquist, Hirsch Seidman, and Jack Moran at midfield; John McGarthy, Rich Lally, and Billy Blaustein on defense and John Rutledge in the goal. Incidentally, Garahan, Michels, and Conolly are top three scorers in that order with Garahan and Michels tied for the top spot.

It appears that tomorrow will be a beautiful day, so what better way is there to relax and enjoy the sun than going down to Boyden Field and watching the UMass-Amherst lacrosse game which begins at three o'clock.

A Pleasant Valley For UMass

By EARLE BARROLL

The course was nearly 7,000 yards in length. The weather made it seem like eight. The scores made it seem like nine. But it was no fault of the golfers. "The weather was simply atrocious", said UMass golf coach Fan Gaudette. "Due to the rain the fairways couldn't be cut. The greens were still spiked."

Only one golfer broke 80 – just barely, 79. He was not from UMass. However, the names Artman, Kern and Olsen vere tied for seventh, a Russell was eighth and a Grygiel and a Duane eluded enough traps to count in the scoring that brought UMass a Yankee Conference Championship and kept alive any possible hope of an NCAA invite.

The Minuteman composite was 514 over the semi-spacious yet treacherous Pleasant Valley course that has more than once rendered the professional tour in the same quagmire, proportionately that it had the collegians in. New Hampshire was second with 518.

"More than anything the weather brought us back to the pack" said Gaudette alluding to his sharpshooters who had mugged the rest of the conference during the regular season. "But no alibis, we won it and that's what counts."

What also counts is the follies that UMass has made of the Kearney Trophy that goes to the school with the most Yankee Conference titles. They call it supremacy. UMass has made the loop a joke.

Joe Artman, Dave Kern and Rick Olsen shot 84's. Gary Russell had 87. Call it consistency. "It was also the key to our season," noted Gaudette. "Consistency has won for us all year."

As far as the nationals are concerned Gaudette is still in a state of supended waiting, but it might all go for naught. "We'd have to play just super, super golf in the New England's" he explained. "And even then that might not be good enough."

"It's awful tough to break that southern bloc in terms of playing time and exposure. Eastern schools have a hard time being picked for their lack of playing time."

They'll give it one more try at the New England's at Kirkbrae Country Club in Lincoln, Rhode Island, May 12th and 13th.

"Peter Trow: Part II"

Out of a Shell—It was kind of quiet in the sunlit Arena that day. Kind of on the warm side. A few friends of the Family could be seen. But for the most part, the only inhabitant of the Stadium that day was Fortune . . . And it belonged to the hundred hearty souls that were there to contest a spot with MacPherson. No cameras, no booze, no flying penants, no hash-marks, just a lot of desire . . . It's all but a summer away.

No, it wasn't Harvard Stadium in the fall of '72. But setting was all it lacked. From goalline to goalline it was the real thing. You didn't need 20,000 partisans and some solid stock of Cold Duck on the fringe. The exam was the same. It's a race to California in December and the small college national championship. Only the strong and able of the 160 up-starts that started Spring Football four weeks ago will make the trip. Peter Trow will be one of them.

Whether McPherson takes us to California or leaves us second fiddle to the University of Maine is of little consequence right now. The Men of MacPherson, that motley crew of starlits who all but sacrifice their virginity for the University, will find a way of winning. But some of the names that graced the gay, pinkish roster for yesterday's Spring game won't be around to hug comrades in victory fashion at Harvard, wipe mud off their faces at Burlington, and buy drinks for the cheerleaders in New Brunswick, N. J. (Rutgers). Some of yesterday's hundred will miss that . . . Peter Trow won't.

McPherson's gonna' give you some gold next fall. You can read about it, listen to it, watch it (Ah! WTOY. . .) or truck on down to Alumni and drink through it. And then there are those who want to spend that gold. Those who want to participate in the worst way. They took their exam at the Stadium yesterday. Some flunked. Peter Trow didn't.

Schubert, Metallo, Brooks, Mullen—don't try it . . . They're gone to greener pastures and more money than any college could afford them either on or under the table. But let's usher in the new. Let's save space for the ultra unknowns like a Bobby Verolini, a Cary Paster, a Steve Wood, or a Sam Penn. "Who the Christ are these guys," you ask . . . They're not the Metallos of tomorrow . . . Peter Trow might be.

And so the anguish of Spring ball is over. For a month the Men of MacPherson and of tomorrow went helmet to helmet while holdover safety John Healy went behind the plate for Dick Berguist. A kid by the name of Cook (Billy) came from UConn and might be a third defensive end in an ingenious 5-2-4 new defense this fall. Yushinsky hurt his shoulder again, Captain Jones is healthy in the knee again, and Eddie Hadjusek might be heir apparent to Steve Schubert . . . So might Peter Trow.

And if there was to be a surprise this spring it came from the lockeroom of Jackie Leaman. On the eve of the National Invitational Tournament he threw a wise ass, cackling columnist out of his office for suggesting that a disappointed member of his flock may leave the Leaman way of life for some of that Boardwalk Bowl Pie . . . And now Peter Trow is fully capable for such reward . . . according to yesterday's released statistics.

From Midcourt at the Cage to the Endzone at Alumni, Trow romped into the hearts of the coaching staff and on to the jealousy list of Hadjusek (Berra is safe) with 7 receptions good for over 100 yards and almost the game winning score from 23 yards out. And coach Ken O'Brien gave him the afternoon off for the feat. Leaman almost gave him his career, but Peter, contrary to my opinion will be back as 8th man with roommate Pitino next December . . .

But he may miss the basketball opener . . . unless he can catch a quick flight back from California. . .

SW Assembly Rescinds Baird Vote

By MARY KEANE

After two and a half hours of heated debate, the Southwest Assembly voted last night to rescind a bill passed last week disassociating the Southwest Assembly from Bill Baird and Collegian staffers Mark Vogler and Kevin Mack.

The defeated bill stated that Baird has "taken the liberty to use his invitation here to defame the women's movement and specifically the Southwest Women's Center" and that "Collegian reporters Mark Vogler and Kevin Mack have libeled, misquoted and ignored Collegian policy." (The question of Collegian policy revolved around the use of the form of address Miss as opposed to Ms. in a Collegian story.)

Baird had requested permission of the Southwest Assembly to speak after hearing the bill. He addressed a crowd of 250 students and Southwest Assembly persons in Hampden Dining Commons for half an hour before the floor was opened for debate.

Baird, who has fought for more than ten years for individuals to have the right to use contraceptives and women to have abortions, addressed himself to what he termed the "moral paralysis" of the Southwest Assembly in not having both himself and reporter Vogler present to defend themselves when the bill was passed. He stressed that everything that has been charged against him is "heresay," as only he, the members of the Southwest Women's Center, and the Collegian representatives were present at their confrontation last week.

Baird noted that he resented being called a "pig" by Judy Katz in an article appearing in Poor Richard's last week.

A petition signed by 670 Southwest residents was introduced, deploring the actions of the Southwest Assembly as "juvenile" and called for the disbanding of the Southwest Assembly.

Baird continued by adding that he resented the Southwest Assembly's action in that it "gave dignity to female chauvinism" by making public a statement causing Baird embarrassment. He said that UMass students were the first student group to ever reject him and that this would be the first time anti-abortion groups such as "Right to Life" would have anything that they could "hang on me."

Baird stated that Collegian reporter Vogler is a "fine reporter, what he said was so, and what he reported has taken place."

In the debate that followed the question was raised as to how Baird could resent being called a "pig" while he reportedly referred to the women's movement as "sick". Baird replied that he had referred to a segment of the women's movement as sick, and questions were again raised as to where the word "segment" appeared and did not appear in quotations from Baird appearing in the Collegian last week. "Segment" appeared in one statement in a story while not in another.

The first vote to rescind the bill was tied. A reconsideration of the first vote was called for by the Assemblyman Michael Padquali. It was voted to reconsider the rescind motion, and as students stood anxiously on tables, the motion was passed, and last week's action was rescinded in a 17-15 vote.

Prior to the Southwest Assembly meeting, the women of the Southwest Women's Center issued a statement of policy concerning the Baird controversy. The statement reads:

"We never denied Bill Baird the right to speak about abortion and birthcontrol in Southwest. We feel that we are entitled to choose our own spokesperson, as we would allow and any other group to chose theirs. Our only comment when we were asked to sponsor Bill Baird was that we would rather have sponsored a woman, as we encourage women to speak out about their our physiology.

"We never attacked Bill Baird personally. No one associated with the Southwest Women's Center has ever made a threatening phone call to Bill Baird, and we resent the implication that we did. We feel that Bill Baird,

FBI Agents Guard Watergate Files

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)— FBI agents were dispatched to the White House Tuesday to guard Watergate-related files kept in the offices of departing officials.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said an around-the-clock safeguarding procedure was begun "to physically protect" various White House documents.

Sources said President Nixon's top aides, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman culled through government files before they resigned.

That disclosure came amid a flurry of other developments in the day after Nixon's speech to the nation on the case:

—Nixon met with his cabinet in an effort to get his Watergate-rocked administration back on course.

One participant described the session as a general "rallying round," and said the President told the Cabinet things would move forward now in the administration.

—After the Cabinet meeting, Nixon met for an hour in his Oval Office with Vice President Spiro T. Agnew. In disclosing the meeting a White House spokesman would not say what was discussed, describing it only as a private meeting. This apparently was the first time since December Nixon and Agnew had held such an extensive discussion.

—Sources predicted that the Haldeman and Ehrlichman resignations will bring major changes in the White House staff structure. One source said Nixon would announce the shuffle next week. Ziegler said the President had made no decisions on replacements for the two aides, but administration officials said they expect Treasury Secretary George Shultz to receive expanded White House duties.

—In the Pentagon Papers' trial in Los Angeles, U.S. District Judge Matt Byrne said Ehrlichman told FBI agents he knew that Watergate conspirators had broken into the office of defendant Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist. Ellsberg's attorney moved for a mistrial.

—The Senate voted to call on Nixon to appoint a special prosecutor from outside the government to oversee the Watergate investigation. The President in his speech Monday night said appointment of a special supervising prosecutor was up to Atty. Gen.-designate Elliot L. Richardson.

—Sen. Carl T. Curtis and others suggested Nixon call on former Sen. John J. Williams, R—Del., to oversee the probe. Sen. Barry Goldwater, R—Ariz., cautioned that Richardson had close ties to prominent Watergate figures, just as did resigned Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst.

—The federal grand jury on Watergate heard from "a very important witness," according to assistant prosecutor Seymour Glanzer. He declined to identify the witness, saying "the important people who come before a grand jury are never the important people in the headlines." He said the probe has been intensified.

—A Justice Department source said "indictments are pretty far down the road" in the grand jury inquiry. Glanzer said "we're not going to be stampeded into doing something rash."

The Haldeman-Ehrlichman search for documentation began days prior to Nixon's acceptance Monday of their resignations as his closest advisers, sources said.

It apparently was prompted by continuing news accounts linking them to the Watergate swirl and was accelerated after reports that John W. Dean III, fired Monday by Nixon as presidential counsel, was ready to turn over to investigators certain documents relating to an alleged White House coverup of Watergate involvement.

Haldeman and Ehrlichman were seen leaving the White House Tuesday morning carrying stacks of documents. They rode off to an undisclosed destination in the back seat of a White House limousine.

Not long afterwards, it became known that Nixon's Watergate investigators had ordered the FBI agents be posted around the clock at the offices of Haldeman, Ehrlichman and Dean and other locations where Watergate-related files are kept.

FBI Cited As News Leak

WICHITA, Kan. (AP)—Roger Mudd, CBS television network newsman, said Tuesday the FBI has been one of the main sources leaking information to the press on the Watergate scandal.

Mudd made his comment during a Law Day U.S.A. luncheon speech.

He said those in the FBI who have been leaking the information are "disgruntled loyalists to J. Edgar Hoover."

Mudd said the loyalists were unhappy about the appointment of L. Patrick Gray II as acting director of the FBI by President Nixon after Hoover died last May.

Nixon nominated Gray for the director's job, then withdrew the nomination. Gray resigned as acting director last Friday.

Silberman Speaks

'Order Rather Than Learning'

Charles Silberman spoke in the Student Union Ballroom last night on the state of American education today.

By DENNY MATTEAU

"The children entering school this year will be in the labor force in the year 2030-do we know what kind of world they will be facing?"

This question was raised by Charles Silberman, author of Crisis in the Classroom, as he addressed an audience of 400 in the Student Union Ballroom last night. He said that "We should not fill them with crippling information, but should instead prepare them to teach themselves."

Silberman said that a major problem with today's educational system is the overwhelming emphasis on order rather than learning. He attributed this problem to the fact that "Learning is conventionally seen as something teachers create in children, not as something the children do themselves, with the teacher's help."

"There is an atmosphere of distrust permeating the system. Taxpayers distrust the school board, which distrusts the superintendent, who distrusts the principal, who distrusts the teachers, who distrust the students, and back around in the other direction."

After talking about the "appalling mutilation", as he called what goes on in American classrooms, Mr. Silberman described some of the alternatives being tried, such as open classrooms. He said, "Changes are most visible in the elementary schools. The rows of desks and chairs are disappearing, classrooms are becoming workshops, with different areas devoted to various interests and activities, and with more freedom for the child to move among the areas."

Silberman said that reform must be approached with the realization that "form is not substance, and method and technique are subordinate to thought and attitude."

When asked whether he thought that the newer approaches to education have been helpful in fighting racism, Silberman said, "I don't think there has been any reduction in racism in the last five years. Mr. Nixon has been in office for the last 4-1.2 years."

The audience laughed, and Silberman said, "I am serious. His role has been significant. There had been a presidential commitment ot reform, but Nixon has deliberately played on the ugliest racial fears as a technique for winning elections, and this has affected the country."

He said that "Deeply engrained racial attitudes are less important, in education, than racial behavior. We're heading in the wrong direction (economically), funds have been cut for next year by the Nixon administration, but I'm not completely pessimistic-one happy consequence of the Watergate is that now there'll be more Congressional flexing of muscles."

Charles Silberman is now directing the Study of Law and Justice; a $455,000 research project funded by the Ford Foundation. He was a member of the editorial staff of Fortune magazine from 1953 to 1971, for the last ten years as a member of its Board of Editors. His lecture was part of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Farmers' Market Comes To Town

By MARY MULLOY

The Farmers' Market, in the spirit of old New England tradition, is coming to Amherst.

Dr. Brent Spears, Coordinator of the enterprise and Jack Prichett, Publicity Chairman feel that this latest food- shopping trend—in town farmers' markets will give local growers an opportunity to sell their fruit and vegetable crops, dairy products, flowers and home-made foods, as well as enabling shoppers to buy locally grown produce at reasonable prices.

Prichett said that the most pressing concern at present is to "contact interested people who will begin to grow locally. May 15 is the first frost-free day," he said, "so those who plan to participate should start growing now."

Although the exact procedure to register for a space at the market is still tentative pending the decision by the Amherst Board of Selectmen, Prichett said, "registration forms will probably be available in advance at the Town Clerk's office." A minimal fee of fifty cents each Saturday morning will be required per person to defray operating costs. A set of rules and regulations will be drawn up and distributed to each potential vendor.

The market will be located in the second parking lot at Amherst Commons and sections will be roped off to prevent cars from interrupting. Beginning July 7 and continuing into the fall, the market will operate every Saturday morning from 7 a.m. until 12 noon.

The market planners are considering inviting certain non-profit organizations, such as church groups, 4H, the Grange, and the Scouts to set up booths in the hopes of assisting these organizations and providing a fuller line of produce for the shoppers. In addition, they hope to get the Northampton County Agriculture Extension Service to have a booth at the market, in order to give out information on gardening, freezing, canning, and so forth.

Presently the organizers are engaged in compiling a list of growers or people willing to help in any way and in publicizing the event. The number to call is 256-8778, if interested.

Amherst will soon be added to the list of more than one hundred cities across the nation utilizing this old-fashioned marketing concept, in which everyone is predicted to come out ahead.

Rents And Fees Vetoes Proposed Salaries

By BRIAN COYNE

A presentation from the Campus Center Board of Governors in behalf of student administrator salaries and a discussion of the new parking fee proposal was the order of business at last night's Rents and Fees Committee meeting.

The committee voted against recommending salaries for the executive committee or committee chairpersons of the Board of Governors. The proposal will now go into a conference of the undergraduate and graduate senates.

In defending the proposal, Jay Denning, Board of Governors representative, said that the salaries would help to insure professional performance by board members.

"If there are no salaries, the caliber of people on the board will be much lower next year."

The proposal as it stands now, the proposal calls for a salary of $125 a month for eight members of the board, but representatives said the figure was negotiable.

Several members of Rents and Fees expressed concern that having salaried positions would inspire politics and competition on the board. Also cited was the present position of the Student Senate, opposed to paying its own committee chairpersons.

In other business, the committee refused to endorse the new parking fee proposal until they had learned of its long-range ramifications and heard from Elliot Sherman and Doug Tindal, student representatives on the committee which drew up the proposal. The committee is interested in how the proposal was drawn up.

The committee plans to invite Sherman and Tindal to next week's meeting, the last of the semester, to discuss the situation.

The move was made, Ziegler said, "to physically protect the files to make sure that access and removal of any files were supervised in accordance with very strict procedure."

Elaborating later, Ziegler said the resigned White House aides still have access to files in their offices but that whenever files are removed an FBI agent must be present to record the action.

Asked whether any Watergate-linked files were missing, Ziegler said he had been informed by Leonard Garment, who took over Dean's duties, that this was "not a problem."

The sources did not disclose what specific documents Haldeman and Ehrlichman were planning to use in defending themselves against allegations that they took part in a White House coverup of the Watergate bugging conspiracy.

Correction

In yesterday's story describing the parking hike meeting in the Student Union Ballroom, Ms. Dorothy Murray was inaccurately quoted as blaming the state legislature for not providing enough monies for parking spaces on campus.

In reality, she had said that the administration had been putting the blame on the state legislature for not providing funds for parking areas. The Collegian regrets the error.

like anyone else, is entitled to his or her own opinion on the Women's Movement. However, we fervently wish that he would not malign and misrepresent us."

When asked why women from the Southwest Women's Center did not participate in last night's debate in the Assembly meeting, Ellen LaCroix of the Women's Center said that there were two reasons why the Center was not vocal during the meeting. She said the Center feels that "Baird has taken enough of our time" and that no matter what the women did they would be "playing into his game of getting press coverage and publicity."

She added that, "The Southwest Women's Center exists to work with other women, not against men. Once we state a position of an issue such as this, we get back to working with other women."

Student Falls From Gorman

Mark Kachadorian, a student from Kappa Sigma fraternity, 70 Butterfield Terrace, fell about two stories shortly before 7:00 p.m. last night when he tried to climb down the side of Gorman House on a rope slung from the hird floor.

According to observers, Kachadorian free fell about two stories and landed on his back on a grassy strip at the base of the dorm. He then stood up, but was told by friends to lie down until an ambulance arrived.

Both University police and the town ambulance truck arrived within a few minutes after the mishap. Kachadorian was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton by the UMass-station wagon cruiser, then transferred to the infirmary.

He was listed in excellent condition last night.

Senate Reviews RSO Budgets Tonight

By FRANCES BROCK

The Budgets Committee will present, before the Student Senate tonight, their final budget proposal for R.S.O. groups. The stated primary concern of the Committee was to have the students pay the same $96 for activities fees that they paid last year. Since the Campus Center fee will be lowered to $52, the Student Activities Tax Fund (S.A.T.F.) will be put at $44.

The Student Senate, when reviewing the fees that the students pay, consider the Campus Center fee and the S.A.T.F. to be activities fees, although the money goes to different organizations. The fees are considered at the same time.

Unfortunately, if the fee ratio is to stay the same, and a balance between the income and the expenses for the R.S.O. budget is to be reached, the Committee had to cut the group support, that is R.S.O. (Recognized Student Organizations) group funds, by slightly over $24,000.

The committee said it was not happy about the idea of having to tell the R.S.O. groups that their belts would have to be tightened, especially since some groups would not be touched and others, which the committee felt had the most padded budgets, would be cut by 9%. The proposal, which the committee decided on, involved much debate, especially between Paul Hamel, Treasurer of the Student Senate, and Paul Doran, chairperson of the committee, over the cuts that would directly affect Student Senate money such as senate operations and central services.

But, as Doran put it, "I will vote for a referendum before raising the tax."

The Committee decided to divide the 42 groups into priorities for cuts. The following is the list of priorities and their percentage cuts. Where the cuts will come from will be left up to the individual groups.

PRIORITY 1 (no cuts)—Index, Legal Services Office, R.S.O. Office, Student Senate Finance Affairs.

PRIORITY 2 (2% cuts)—Area Governments, Bolwood Project, Central Services, Collegian, Concert Committee, Draft Counseling, Medical Emergency Loan Fund, Senate Operations, Transit

PRIORITY 3 (4% cut)—Belchertown Project, Northampton Volunteers, Room to Move, Spectrum, U.S.C.C., WMUA

PRIORITY 4 (5%)—Afro Am Society, Attorney General, Black Mass Communication, Bicycle Club, Student Homophile League, WTOY

PRIORITY 5 (7% cut)—Ahora, Amateur Radio Club, Coalition for Environment, Harambe, Imani, International Program Office, J.O.E., N.E.S., Outing Club, Student Automotive Workshop, S.W.A.P., Union of Third World Women.

PRIORITY 6 (9%)—C.C.E.B.S., Drum, Poverty Committee, Student Center for Education Research, Senate Sponsored Activities.

Senate To Vote On Budget

By LARRY CARPMAN

The Student Senate will vote tonight on its proposed organization budget for 1973-74. If the budget passes, the Student Activities Tax will increase $12.38 over last year.

Student Senate Budgets Chairperson, Paul Doran, said that he did not believe the budget would pass because a two- thirds vote is necessary.

There are several groups previously funded last year that are budgeted for much less or have been given no funds for the 73-74 year. The Rugby Club, funded for $1,433 last year, has been transferred to the Athletic Department and will receive no SATF funds. Yahoo which was funded for $7,898 has been struck from the budget.

The Area Governments in the proposed budgets will receive approximately $48,000 more than last year. The Collegian's budget was cut by almost $3,600 while that of WMUA was cut by about $5,000. The budget for Draft Counseling was cut from $6,850 to $265 because a full time professional is no longer needed. Lack of interest caused the budget for the Nutrition and Human Needs Club to be struck from the proposal.

Below is the comparative analysis of budgeted student organizations as compiled by the Senate's Budgets Committee.

Ellsberg's Lawyer Asks Trial Dismissal

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Daniel Ellsberg's attorney moved for dismissal of the Pentagon papers trial indictment today after a revelation that just-resigned presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman told FBI agents he knew that Watergate conspirators had broken into Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

Ehrlichman's interview with the FBI last Friday was handed to defense attorneys today by U. S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne. The attorneys then revealed that Ehrlichman had told the agents he hired Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy to conduct an investigation "directly out of the White House" into the Pentagon papers and other similar leaks to news media of classified documents.

Ellsberg's chief attorney, Leonard Boudin, further revealed that Ehrlichman, who resigned his post Monday, admitted knowing that Hunt "was endeavoring to prepare a psychological profile relating to Ellsberg."

Boudin moved for dismissal of the indictment against Ellsberg and Anthony Russo, stating that he believes the White House - "I mean the President specifically" - was indirectly responsible for Hunt's and Liddy's actions. He said Ehrlichman stated in the FBI interview that he was asked by President Nixon to make inquiries into the Pentagon papers and other disclosures "independent of the FBI investigation."

The iudge has indicated that if Ellsberg's psychiatric records were used in his prosecution, this could indicate "tainted evidence" in the four-month-old trial.

Concert Comm. Sets Plans

By MARY MULLOY

The Concert Committee met last night to finalize the line-up for the second annual free spring concert held on campus. Bruce Springsteen, the committee's latest choice to replace the Elvin Bishop Group (who broke their contract last Tuesday) has not yet responded.

Springsteen, described by one of the committee members as a cross between Bob Dylan and Van Morrison, currently has an album released on Columbia Records, entitled "Welcome to Ashbury Park."

Cold Blood and It's a Beautiful Day are still scheduled to perform Sunday, May 6th beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Also present at the meeting, was Ms. Stone from the Security Department who described some general techniques of marshalling and effective ways to deal with crowds. But the concert committee does not anticipate any major problems. As one member said, "the concert is free for anyone to walk in and out, so there won't be any of the usual hassles. Everyone will be there to have a good time."

On Friday, the committee plans to issue a few minimal rules generally for safety and to inform the concert-goers where the marshals, medics, Room To Move, radio-people and concession stands will be located.

News Analysis

Watergate Unsolved

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon's claim that his investigators hid the truth from him in the Watergate wiretapping leaves a lot of questions awaiting answers.

The Watergate scandal long ago spread beyond the mere break-in at Democratic headquarters last June 17.

It now embraces secret campaign funds, hidden documents, links connecting the White House and the Nixon campaign to a mutual-fund scandal, and alleged crimes by White House employes against the man who leaked the Pentagon papers.

The President mentioned none of these in his address Monday night, except for a reference to "allegedimproper actions" for which Nixon said he shoulders full responsibility.

Here are some subsidiary scandals in the conglomerate now collectively called "Watergate."

MONEY: Two secret campaign funds have been found, and a third is reported in news accounts. The Watergate burglars were paid from a secret cash fund in the President's reelection headquarters.

A former aide to presidential chief of staff H. R. Haldeman has been quoted in transcripts of grand jury testimony as saying Haldeman kept $350,000 more in campaign cash in his White House safe, purpose as yet unknown.

News reports say investigators turned up a $500,000 fund in a California bank, used by the President's personal lawyer to pay a political saboteur, among other things.

Government auditors have urged that Nixon's campaign treasurer, Hugh Sloan, be prosecuted for failing to report payments used to give a phony impression of public support for Nixon's war policies. Nixon hasn't said whether he knew of these dealings.

RECORDS: Although the President promises there will be no "whitewash," his campaign organization continues to keep secret its spending, reportedly involving around $10 million, from before last April 7. That is the date a new law required public reporting.

Nixon's campaign finance chairman, former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans, faces a threat of a contempt citation for dragging his feet in turning over cartons full of records to court officials, as promised last November. A campaign lawyer has said these documents contain payroll records of at least two of the Watergate conspirators.

Campaign officials have resisted a lawsuit by Common Cause seeking disclosure of secret finances, arguing that donors gave money before last April 7 with the understanding that their names would be kept confidential.

This explanation wouldn't prevent disclosure of how much the campaign spent, where the money went, and for what purposes. Nixon didn't explain why these spending records are being kept secret.

VESCO: Financier Robert L. Vesco is accused in a lawsuit by the Securities and Exchange Commission of looting $224 million from mutual funds he controlled. Several links already have been established between his dealings and Nixon associates.

A representative delivered $200,000 in cash to the Nixon campaign last year, and reportedly asked for "help." Campaign chairman John N. Mitchell, the former attorney general, then told Vesco's lawyers they could meet with SEC Chairman William J. Casey.

Eventually government auditors accused the Nixon campaign of illegally failing to report the gift, the SEC went ahead with its suit, and the campaign returned the money two months later.

Other ties to Vesco go back to 1971. Mitchell called the U.S. embassy in Switzerland Dec. 1 of that year when Vesco had been arrested on a share-holder's complaint.

Senate Wants Special Watergate Prosecutor

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate told President Nixon Tuesday it wants the Watergate investigation taken out of the executive branch and turned over to a special prosecutor free of any taint of bias.

With no objections raised, the Senate approved by voice vote a resolution by Sen. Charles H. Percy, R—Ill., who said the White House should stop investigating itself.

Percy and a number of other senators said they have faith in the integrity of Atty. Gen.-designate Elliot L. Richardson but that he has worked for the Nixon administration too long to investigate Watergate himself.

In a speech Monday night Nixon put Richardson in charge of all Watergate investigations but said he could name a special independent prosecutor if he thought it desirable to do so.

The Senate, in effect, told him to take that step now.

Several senators told Nixon in telegrams and letters they believe the best choice he could make to fill that position would be former Republican Sen. John Williams of Delaware who devoted most of a long congressional career to investigations praised for their objectivity and thoroughness.

The Percy resolution was introduced in identical form in the House by John Anderson, R—Ill., chairman of the House Republican Conference. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The resolution calls for the immediate naming by the President of an individual "of the highest character and integrity from outside the executive branch" to serve as special prosecutor, subject to approval and confirmation by the Senate.

Meanwhile, sources on the Senate Watergate investigating committee said the resignations of three top members of the President's staff have not changed the investigation's course.

"We are charging full steam ahead and fully expect to begin hearings on May 15 as scheduled," a source close to the committee said.

But the source said the direction and timetable of the probe might be changed if any indictments are handed down before May 15 by a grand jury.

Monday, Sen. Lowell T. Weicker, R—Conn., said hearings in mid-May would be premature because they might jeopardize the legal rights of persons alleged to have been involved.

Richardson-Defense Priorities

WASHINGTON (AP)—For the time being, Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson will concentrate more on national security matters than on the Watergate scandal, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

"His priority rests with defense matters," Maj. Gen. Daniel Chappie James said. "He is still the secretary of defense at this point."

Richardson was nominated by President Nixon Monday to become attorney general. But he was also named to take over immediately all federal investigations of the Watergate affair.

James said Richardson would retain his office at the Pentagon at least until May 9 when hearings begin on his nomination to be attorney general, replacing Richard G. Kleindienst, who resigned.

Despite the emphasis on defense matters, James said Richardson has begun discussions with top Justice Department officials, presumably including Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen, previously the man heading up the Watergate probe.

Richardson also is reported to be assigning some of his top staff men to begin work on the Watergate problem.

As the defense secretary shifts his emphasis to Watergate matters, more of the burden of running the Pentagon will fall to his deputy, William P. Clements Jr.

Morton Urges Gas Conservation

By JAMES PHILLIPS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Warning that the nation faces potentially severe gasoline shortages this summer, Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton Tuesday urged all Americans voluntarily to restrict their driving.

"The driving habits of the American people can determine whether we get through the summer without a problem or whether we have to consider far more serious remedial measures than have so far been considered," Morton said.

"I am convinced that if a majority of Americans take energy conservation seriously," he added, "we will not have gasoline shortages this summer."

The secretary urged everyone who drives to adopt what he called "commonsense" measures, including planning vacation and camping trips closer to home, walking or riding bicycles on short trips and driving 10 miles an hour below the speed limit on superhighways. The secretary made his plea on two fronts—in an appearance before the Senate Interior Committee and in a press release describing various actions concerned Americans can adopt.

Morton noted that 70 per cent of all gasoline is used by consumers in automobiles and said, "the margin between experiencing energy shortages and not experiencing energy shortages is very small."

"For this summer, only a one or two per cent difference reduction in gasoline consumption could make a difference," he said.

Other measures which Rogers outlined to save gas included limiting the use of auto air-conditioners and other fuel consuming accessories, using trains, buses or airplanes on long trips rather than automobiles, placing greater balance on small cars, particularly in two car families, and using mass transit systems more extensively.

He also said that the American public should keep automobile engines tuned and tires inflated properly.

In renewing presidential authority for wage and price controls, Congress Monday also gave the President clear authority to allocate petroleum products.

Administration officials have said there is no intention to impose gasoline rationing in the foreseeable future.

B52's Pound Phnom Penh

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

American B52 bombers and jet fighters pounded suspected enemy camps around Phnom Penh Tuesday and North and South Vietnam issued May Day pledges of reforms for their war-weary peoples.

U. S. and North Vietnamese negotiators returned from Paris to their respective capitals after a round of talks designed to improve observance of the Vietnam cease-fire. The U.S. envoy issued an indirect threat that fighting might be resumed unless Hanoi stops its violations.

Teams of F4 Phantom and F111 jet fighters from American bases in Thailand again bombarded the rebel-held eastern bank of the Mekong River two miles across from Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital. The B52s thundered toward targets farther east and south.

The antigovernment forces control about two-thirds Cambodia, the one Indochinese country without a cease-fire.

The Saigon government in neighboring South Vietnam announced that President Nguyen Van Thieu plans sweeping changes to streamline and decentralize the country in preparation for political struggle with the Viet Cong. But other government sources quoted Thieu as saying the reorganization will keep political power concentrated in Saigon.

In Hanoi, Premier Pham Van Dong of North Vietnam called for reforms in the economy, consolidation of nafional defense and strengthening of the armed forces. He gave no details.

The North Vietnamese negotiator in Paris, Deputy Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, ruled out a predicted meeting between Henry A. Kissinger and the North Vietnamese official with whom Kissinger negotiated the Vietnam peace accord, Le Duc Tho.

Sources in Washington had said the Kissinger-Tho discussions would take place in Paris in mid-May.

He spoke as he boarded a plane for Hanoi following several days of conversations with U. S. deputy assistant secretary of State, William H. Sullivan, in an effort to stop cease-fire violations. Thach's talk of an unfavorable atmosphere indicated their efforts were not fully successful, and Sullivan's own comments reinforced that impression.

"Hanoi will soon have to make its choice and decide whether it wants full implementation of the accords in good faith or if it prefers to take the path which would take us to the unfortunate military situation to which we hoped to put an end by signing the agreement," Sullivan said. ". . . We are absolutely unsatisfied by the way the North Vietnamese and the forces under their control are conducting themselves and in the way in which they have implemented the accords."

Sadat Charges U.S. Pro-Israeli

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt charged Tuesday that the United States backs Israeli domination of the Middle East out of concern over Arab oil and the energy crisis.

He assailed U.S. peace plans for the Middle East and pleaded for Soviet support for the Arabs in what he repeated is an "inevitable" confrontation with Israel.

Sadat declared in his 90-minute speech that Washington has an interest in maintaining Israel's strength because the Arabs control more than half the world's known oil reserves and "we know there is an energy crisis in the United States."

"If need be, the Americans would come and occupy the sources of energy in the Arab world," he added, "so we know why Israel is being supported by the United States."

This appeared to imply a charge that the United States would be prepared to invade Arab countries and grab their oil fields if the U.S. oil shortage demanded it. But the Egyptian president did not specifically make that accusation, nor did he say why U.S. oil needs would not dictate friendship with the oil-rich Arabs rather than hostility against them.

Premier Golda Meir of Israel told students at Hebrew University that should the war break out again as Sadat seemed to be predicting, "There is no doubt what the result would be."

In still another indication of war preparedness in the Middle East, Israel unveiled more new additions to its arsenal, including an American-built helicopter, an American-built gun mounted on a tank and modified versions of Soviet-made tanks captured from the Arabs.

The Israelis plan to parade their military might through Jerusalem in their 25th anniversary observance May 7.

In his speech, Sadat repeatedly alluded to the inevitability of war with Israel and announced: "Our Soviet friends must realize that what has been taken by force can only be recovered by force."

This was interpreted as a plea for Soviet backing in military action against Israel, which Sadat has been saying for months is the only way out for Egypt.

Nixon Asks $2.9 Billion For Aid

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon asked Congress Tuesday for $2.9 billion in foreign aid to friendly nations, including $632 million to rebuild Indochina.

The package included no money for North Vietnam, but Nixon said the Communist country would be eligible for U.S. help when it complies fully with the Vietnam cease-fire agreement.

"If and when that occurs," he said, "I believe that American assistance for reconstruction and development of both South and North Vietnam would represent a sound investment in confirming the peace."

His proposal includes $652 million in military assistance and another $100 million for Jordan, Thailand and other countries considered especially close to the United States. Some $33 million would also be spent to train foreign soldiers here.

The $2.9 billion requested for fiscal year 1974 contrasts with the $2.6-billion foreign aid program that has been in effect under a continuing congressional resolution for nearly two years.

"The sums I am requesting represent the absolute minimum prudent investment which the United States can afford to make if we wish to create a peaceful world," Nixon said in his message.

A special feature of the new assistance program is the singling out of South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia for economic reconstruction aid.

Nixon said that "to ignore these needs would be to task the enormous investment we have in the freedom and independence of the countries of Southeast Asia."

Nixon asked Congress to act on his request "with a special sense of urgency so that we may continue the important progress we have made toward achieving peace during the last year."

The President said that under the Nixon Doctrine the United States has tried to stimulate the other countries to bear a larger part of the costs of their own defense and economic needs.

But he said this balance should not be shifted too quickly, "and increase the likelihood of international instability."

Former Aide Talks

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Newly resigned presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman told the FBI that he hired Watergate conspirators G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt to investigate the Pentagon papers case and learned later they broke into the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, it was disclosed Tuesday.

U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne, presiding over the trial of Ellsberg and Anthony Russo, revealed the statement that Ehrlichman made to the FBI last Friday.

The defense attorneys immediately moved for dismissal of the case and Byrne took the motion under advisement.

The FBI interview quotes Ehrlichman as saying President Nixon designated him in 1971 "to make inquiries independent of the concurrent FBI investigation which had been made relating to the leak of the Pentagon papers."

Ellsberg was indicted in June, 1971, on charges of espionage, conspiracy and theft.

Ehrlichman told agents that Nixon "had expressed interest in the problem of unauthorized disclosures of classified government information . . ."

The report added that, according to Ehrlichman, "G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt were designated to conduct the investigation."

Ehrlichman told the FBI he learned of the burglary afterward and told Hunt and Liddy "not to do this again."

Ehrlichman said he knew the two men were traveling to California to "follow up leads," including word that "there was information available that Ellsberg had emotional and moral problems, and Liddy and Hunt sought to determine full facts relating to these conduct traits."

The report added, "Hunt endeavored to prepare a "psychiatric profile relating to Ellsberg. The efforts of Liddy and Hunt were directed toward an 'in-depth investigation of Ellsberg to determine his habits, mental attitudes, motives, etc.'"

"Such activity was not authorized by him," the report says, "he did not know about this burglary until after it happened, he 'did not agree with this method of investigation' and when he learned about the burglary he instructed them 'not to do this again.' "

Ziegler Apologizes To Washington Post

WASHINGTON (AP)-White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler publicly apologized to the Washington Post Tuesday for past harsh criticism of its investigative reporting of the Watergate conspiracy.

Asked if he would apologize in the wake of President Nixon's tv-radio statement Monday night that a "vigorous free press" helped uncover the truth about Watergate, Ziegler replied:

"Yes, I would apologize to the Post."

He then volunteered an apology to Post reporters Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward who, he said, vigorously pursued the story, deserved credit for their work and are receiving it.

"When we're wrong, we're wrong," the White House spokesman said.

Last Oct. 25, Ziegler characterized one Post account as "a blatant effort at character assassination that I do not think has been witnessed in the political process in some time."

When asked about another Post account on Oct. 16, Ziegler said, "I will not dignify with comment stories based on hearsay, character assassination, innuendo, guilt by association."

In his remarks today, Ziegler said, "I think we'd all have to say mistakes were made...I was overenthusiastic at that time in my comments about the Post...It was an overstatement."

He later said his apology was not intended to render judgment on individuals named in various articles published by the newspaper.

"I will dignify with comment Mr. Ziegler's apology' it's entirely welcome," said Harry Rosenfeld, metropolitan editor of the Post and the man in charge of the work done by Bernstein and Woodward.

May Day

A "Day Of Contrasts"

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It was a May Day of contrasts abroad, with war talk and peace talk, and strikes that virtually crippled a nation.

Workers in many parts of the world took time off to celebrate the official international holiday of labor's left wing.

While the president of Egypt spoke of war, the leader of the Soviet Union affirmed a policy of peace.

Workers in Britain went on strike, throwing the transit system into chaos.

May Day became an occasion for labor demonstrations after the Second Socialist International chose that date for its holiday in 1889.

In England and the United States, the holiday grew out of an ancient Roman rite of spring-celebrated with dancing around a Maypole decorated with flowers and streamers.

May Day themes around the world were familiar ones-peace, struggle against capitalism and colonialism.

The crowds ranged from 750 Cambodians who showed up at the Olympic Stadium in Phnom Penh to vast throngs who filled Moscow's Red Square.

President Lon Nol told the Phnom Penh rally, "We must work harder and harder so our country will survive Communist domination." Insurgent forces were only a few miles outside the city.

In Moscow, five huge posters of Leonid I. Brezhnev waved above a sea of smiling Russian faces in Red Square. Brezhnev, the Communist party secretary who dominated the day, told them: "The policy of the Soviet Union in Europe, just as in other parts of the world, is first of all a policy of peace."

The Russian leader's peace pledge contrasted sharply with those of Egypt's President Anwar Sadat.

"Our friends in the Soviet Union believe a peaceful settlement is the only way out of the Middle East crisis," Sadat said over Cairo radio in a May Day speech.

That idea, Sadat said, "is a myth." He asked for Soviet help in preparing for war with Israel.

North Vietnam celebrated with a massive military parade, while the Communist party newspaper, Nhan Dan, warned in an editorial, "The situation in the Indochinese peninsula is very grave."

In Rome, Pope Paul IV told thousands of persons assembled for his weekly audience, "Radical struggle among different classes for the monopoly of richness is a social and economic error." Not far from the Vatican, tens of thousands of Italian workers staged a rally where many held signs with leftist slogans.

Narctoics Agents Suspended With Pay

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Four federal narcotics agents were suspended Tuesday for mistaken-identity raids last week on the homes of two Illinois families.

In announcing this, the nation's chief enforcer of drug laws, Myles J. Ambrose, said he also was seeking an immediate grand jury probe of the incident.

Ambrose, head of the Office for Drug Abuse Law Enforcement, said the four agents—joined by 11 other agents from local police—had stormed into two Collinsville, Ill., residences without approval of either the courts or their superiors.

"I have said before," he said, "that people who use their badge to violate other people's constitutional rights are worse than criminals."

He said the federal agents were being suspended with pay.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Giglotto and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Askew have said officers, dressed as hippies, subjected them to threats and other physical and verbal abuse and damaged their property.

The Askews have filed a $100,000 damage suit.

Ambrose said a preliminary investigation confirmed "there was some damage" but that the claims of other improper conduct must await airing before the grand jury in Springfield, Ill.

As for the 11 local agents, Ambrose said he had requested the appropriate agencies to remove them from further participation in the federal narcotics program.

The officers, who he declined to name, have denied they were discourteous, he said.

Ambrose said he had sought and received authorization to call the grand jury from Deputy Atty. Gen. Joseph T. Snead and hoped it would begin sitting Thursday.

Giglotto said his wife, wearing a negligee, was insulted in the foulest of terms and he was knocked down and threatened with his life. His furniture was overturned, his books strewn about and his television set was smashed, he said.

"That," said Ambrose, "would be reprehensible conduct even if they, the Giglotto's were the defendants." At this point, he added, the incident looks to be a case of "more stupidity than anything else."

Miss. Flooding Continues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The swollen waters of the Mississippi continued their relentless journey to the Gulf of Mexico on Tuesday, and authorities warned people in the flood's wake to be on the alert in case of more rain.

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz, en route to Mississippi to address a group of farmers, flew over parts of the flooded river valley.

Stopping in Memphis, Tenn., he predicted that farmers would be able to recover and plant their land. "I am convinced," he said, "that if fair weather comes, our farmers will get out there shortly."

The Mississippi River Commission has estimated that 11 million acres in seven states-much of it prime farmland-is under water. Cotton farmers in several areas have said that by the time the land dries out, it will be too late to plant.

Butz, saying that all but about 1-1/2 million acres could be planted, said that if cotton were ruled out, the farmers would grow soybeans or other crops that can be sown late in the season.

Officials cautioned that more rain could bring more trouble. Authorities in Quincy, Ill.-where the river is still about 7 feet above the 17-foot flood stage-said that the effect of heavy rains Monday and Tuesday in parts of northern Illinois and central Iowa won't be known until next week.

In St. Louis, Mo., where the waters crested over the weekend, the river stood at 41.8 feet on Tuesday-down one foot from Monday, but still almost 12 feet above flood stage.

The Office of Emergency Preparedness said more than 5,500 persons in Missouri had applied for federal flood disaster aid by Monday night. Damage throughout the regions that were declared disaster areas has been estimated at $320 million already.

A spokesman for the National Weather Service at St. Louis said the rain Monday night could cause localized flooding, but would not have a significant effect on the Mississippi or Missouri rivers.

The service urged people to stay alert for further developments, however, noting that a major spring weather system-which could bring more rain-was moving into the area.

The major problem in the southern part of the valley was flooding from backwaters

N.E. Leaders Approve Atty. Gen. Richardson

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England political leaders have voiced confidence in newly designated Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson to investigate the Watergate affair, and some have urged that a special outside prosecutor be brought in on the case.

"I have total confidence in Elliot Richardson to be able to do the job and square it with the American people," Massachusetts Lt. Gov. Donald E. Dwight, a Republican, said Tuesday.

"The President stated directly in his speech that Atty. Gen. Richardson would be able to bring in an outside prosecutor. I think that's a clear signal that an outside man will be brought in to conduct the investigation and give it that final touch of impartiality that some of the critics are looking for," Dwight said.

Richardson, who also has served as secretary of defense and secretary of health, education and welfare before replacing Richard Kleindienst, is a former attorney general and lieutenant governor of Massachusetts.

Sen. William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, said he hopes Richardson appoints a special prosecutor "although I have the utmost confidence in the integrity" of the newly designated attorney general.

The Watergate affair requires "a special prosecutor without any obligation to anyone except the general public. . .," Hathaway said.

David LaRoche, New Hampshire Democratic chairman, said he had "some reservation about another administration official being charged with the continuing investigation."

Richardson's credential, he said, "may be impeccable, but I think we all feel the enormous pressure there will be on Mr. Richardson should he be forced to reveal more Watergate information that will even further damage the credibility of the administration," and LaRoche urged that an outside investigator be appointed.

Rep. James C. Cleveland, R-N.H., said some questions about the affair remain unanswered, and he felt that Richardson "will certainly bring all the facts to light and all guilty to justice."

A spokesman for Gov. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts said "the governor is encouraged that the president has made a full commitment to finding out what transpired in the Watergate case. And he thinks that Elliot Richardson is a man of unquestionable integrity."

Former Minnesota Sen. Eugene McCarthy, visiting Radcliffe College, criticized the selection of Richardson as attorney general.

"What did Richardson do as Secretary of HEW or Defense," McCarthy said. "No hits, no runs, no errors. He's the administration's designated hitter."

Maine Requests New Boundary

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-A legislative committee was asked Tuesday to approve extending Maine's offshore boundary to 200 miles, not necessarily for enforcement purposes, but as a psychological move.

Sea and Shore Fisheries Commissioner Spencer Apollonio said he felt extending the boundary would not have the effect of law, but would bolster Congressional efforts to get a uniform, 200-mile limit nationally.

Apollonio said the state lacks the enforcement facilities to adequately police an expanded limit as proposed in a bill filed by Rep. Elmont S. Tyndale, R-Kennebunkport.

Tyndale told a hearing conducted by the Marine Resources Committee that he wants "not only to protect the multi-million dollar Maine lobster and fishing industries, but also to conserve our marine resources for future generations of Americans.

"Presently, huge foreign government-subsidized ships are allowed to drag our ocean's resources right out from under us as in close to our shores as 12 miles."

Tyndale noted the states of Massachusetts and Rhode Island recently adopted 200-mile limits, and New Hampshire is currently considering the same action.

Foreign trawlers, he stated, have "engaged in intensive overfishing which has already decimated some of our commercially important species of fin fish.

"The foreign poachers couldn't care less; the record shows that when they have depleted one area, they move on to somewhere else. In addition, Maine fishermen and lobstermen have suffered the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of gear and profits as a result of foreign trawlers deliberately sweeping through their well-marked lines of pots in blatant disregard of the lobsterman's rights."

Charges Dropped vs. MDC Reporter

VALENTINE, Neb. (AP)-Charges of violating antiriot laws have been dropped against Nathan J. Gorenstein, 20, of Medford, Mass., arrested Saturday in connection with an alleged attempt by about 20 persons to get food into Indian-occupied Wounded Knee, S.D.

Charges against Gorenstein were dropped after he told officials he was at Wounded Knee as a reporter for the University of Massachusetts newspaper, the Daily Collegian.

The case of UMass researcher Douglas Phelps, 25, has been continued in connection with the same incident.

Boston Doctors Give Brazilian Ability To Walk

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP)-Osmarina Santana has returned to Brazil carrying the hope that treatment she received for a rare lymphatic disease will allow her to live a normal life.

She also hopes the attention to her case may help end the suffering of othes with similar afflictions.

After unsuccessful treatments and being told that nothing could help her, the 17-year-old girl came to Boston last December as a partial cripple. When she left Monday, she was able to walk and for the first time she could remember to run.

Osmarina suffers from lymphedema, commonly called Milroy's Disease, in which the lymph fluid from body cells cannot drain because of inadequate lymphic vessels.

This fluid accumulates in the legs and causes swelling, pressure and pain which makes it difficult, if not impossible, to walk. Firm, fibrous tissue forms in the swollen areas which keep the legs large and unsightly and socially embarrassing.

Osmarina and her father, Elroy Santana, came to Boston after an unsuccessful attempt to get help in Miami. An industrialist in Brazil had heard of the girl's plight and asked his daughter, Dr. Lillian McMahon, to find help.

Dr. McMahon, a pediatrician at the East Boston Neighborhood Health Center, contacted hospitals in New York and Boston, but was told they could do nothing.

She finally reached Dr. Neil R. Feins, of the Boston University Medical Center, and he said he could help with a technique developed by a friend of his, Dr. Eric M. Fonkalsrud of the UCLA School of Medicine.

Dr. Feins removed seven pounds of tissue from Osmarina's right leg and later removed a lesser amount from her left. While Fonkalsrud's method does not cure the disease, Dr. Feins says, there are no reported cases of the swelling returning.

Since her case was publicized, Drs. Feins and Fonkalsrud have been contacted by more than 50 persons who have Milroy's Disease and had been told their cases were hopeless. Both physicians have performed several other operations and have more lined up.

Before leaving for Belem, a town in Northern Brazil at the mouth of the Amazon, Osmarina thanked everyone for the hundreds of cards and letters she had received and said she hoped to return to the United States to go to college.

Osmarina, who speaks Spanish and Portuguese, answered all her correspondence with the help of Dr. McMahon.

Dr. McMahon said she translated the letters from English to Portuguese, then Osmarina wrote the replies in Portuguese. Dr. McMahon then wrote out the English translations and Osmarina recopied them in English.

Since the operations, Dr. McMahon said, Osmarina has become more self-confident and outgoing, and began doing things she never did before because of embarrassment or inability.

"I came home one day last month and she ran up to me saying, 'see, see,'" Dr. McMahon said. "I didn't know what she was talking about and she kept running around saying 'look at me.' Then she said, 'I'm running,' and I realized that she was running for the first time in her life."

Central Area Gov't Votes To Aid AIM

By SHELLEY BAKST

The Central Area Government met Monday night and passed two crucial proposals. Money was allocated to the American Indian Movement and to Community Homes for Children.

Three university women representing American Indian Movement (AIM), two of whom just returned from bringing food and medical supplies to South Dakota, were present at the Council meeting. They explained to the group that economic and moral support for the movement is urgently needed. They asked the Council for $500.00 for funds which would aid in the bail for those University students presently in jail for what the law sites as "inciting riots". The Council voted in favor of economic support for Wounded Knee and later, after much debate, voted in favor of supporting the American Indian Movement morally as well as economically.

Doug Segal, representing Community Homes for Children propsed that the Council donate $200.00 towards the purchase of a Halfway house in Amherst for children in state mental institutions such as Belchertown. Amherst schools and community leaders have proved extremely cooperative in aiding with the project. Volunteers will work at the May 6th concert at food concession stands hoping to raise a good part of the $10,000 that is necessary before the Federal Government will subsidize the project. Those interested in volunteering may call Doug Segal at 9-549-6307.

Class Gifts Announced

The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Senior Class announced its class gifts today, and called for a greater committment from the University administration for campus handicapped programs.

The Class of 73's gifts will be the publication of a handbook for the handicapped on campus and a contribution to the Street Academy System of Springfield, Inc. (SASSI Prep).

Money will also be donated to UMass for placing raised numbers on elevators for blind students and for signs on buildings indicating accesses for the handicapped.

Senior Committee Chairman John Drane stressed that the handicapped gift was only a fraction of the money needed for a completely barrier-free campus for the handicapped.

"Our gift," Drane said, "is not meant to let the University and the Commonwealth off the hook from their responsibility to make public higher education accessible to all citizens. A greater committment from the University to provide for the handicapped is needed."

The other class gift is a contribution to SASSI Prep, an alternative school for dropouts and students turned off by traditional schools. SASSI Prep was begun in 1970 by Springfield, Ma. residents and UMass students.

UMass has always maintained close ties with SASSI Prep. In 1970, the Student Senate, the Southwest Assembly, and the Senior Class donated $3000 to it. UMass sends student teachers to SASSI Prep, and most recently, SASSI Prep has been one of the sites for the University Year for Action, a program in which university students work with community social action groups. SASSI Prep's headmaster, William Smith, is a UMass graduate, and many SASSI graduates go to the University.

Approximately $6000 taken from student fees will be available for the gifts. The amount is an approximation, because money raised from its traditional Senior Day celebration is not yet known.

Senior Committee Chairman Drane observed that the Class had "trimmed the Senior Day budget, making it possible to increase the class contributions to two worthy causes. This is typical of the Class of '73."

UMass has no class governments as such, so the gift decisions were made by the Senior Committee, a temporary committee open to all seniors.

SW To Present Pinter Play

The Dumb Waiter, by Harold Pinter, will be presented on May 3, 4 and 5 in the North Room of Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest. The production is sponsored by the Southwest Assembly through R.S.O. and is another effort by the Southwest government to promote student run activities in, and provide utilization of, the new Hampden Student Center.

The Dumb Waiter is the first in what student government representatives hope to be a continuing program of student run plays. This production of the Dumb Waiter has established a viable area for theatrical events in Hampden Student Center. Masking, staging, and lighting facilities will now be available for student use in the future.

The two character play is directed by Peter Ryan, assisted by Joyce Gillis. Ben and Gus, professional killers, are played by Mike Cataldo and Charlie Koro, respectively. Special design is being created by John Olbrych, with lighting by Floyd Bailey. In conjunction, there is being offered a Southwest Collquium in Technical Theatre.

Project-10 Plans Meditation Center

"People who attempt to practice in a serious way a meditative discipline are usually outnumbered where they live on campus, and as a result the noise and drugs are a real barrier to any spiritual pursuit," says Ron LaFrance, director of Room to Move, the campus drug and crisis counseling center.

"It's to meet just this problem that Project 10 will begin next fall a special corridor devoted to the various meditative disciplines, yoga, transcendental meditation, T'ai chi, bioenergetics, etc.," according to Dave Hoffman, Project 10 assistant director for academic development. Project 10 is the campus' "experimental college."

"I know it sounds a little crazy," Hoffman adds, "to think of the Project as the center for such an environment, what with the reputation the place used to have for noise, but alot of that has changed in the past year."

The proposed location for the meditative living-learning center is one corridor in the Project basement.

Hoffman, who is developing the idea together with Teresina Havens, Project faculty member in philosophy and religion, and LaFrance, Chris Singh, and Rick Taupier of the Room to Move staff, indicated both courses and colloquia devoted to the "ecumenical spiritual theme" of the corridor.

Chris Singh, a member of the Guru Ram Dass kundalini yoga ashram in Montague, speaks of the idea as requiring four commitments: 1) an intention to learn to live together, 2) a willingness to refrain from all drug use, 3) an effort in one meditative discipline, and 4) the agreement to participate in the work of the corridor.

One feature of the experiment is to join in food preparation and organic gardening with the adjacent basement corridor, planned as an "organic community" by a number of Project 10 members.

A large kitchen and food service capable of feeding over 50 people is scheduled for completion in Pierpont this summer. An effort to win exemptions from dining commons meal tickets will be made with Food Services, so as to facilitate the effort for a common eating environment.

Another plan, says Hoffman, is to apply for a grant to be used to finance a special conference focussed on the problems of integrating various spiritual disciplines in one living-learning center.

Because space is not large, interested people should apply this week, indicating a commitment to the four conditions of the center, and should expect an interview.

Application forms for Project 10 are available in the Project office (Pierpont) and in Room to Move in the Student Union. People with any questions should call Project Director Charles Adams at 5-0871. The application must include a short essay indicating the individual's meditative discipline and hopes for the corridor.

Final TM Course Offered

By BOB EATON

Dealing With Stresses

This is a stressful time of the school year, and the most valuable asset to a student or faculty member in dealing with that stress would be a mind stable and clear amidst the pressures at the end of the semester.

Transcendental Meditation, we feel, is such an asset. It is a technique of freeing the mind and body of stresses, and infusing greater intelligence and energy into activity. TM is very easy to learn, it takes about an hour a day for four sessions to become an expert meditator. TM is practiced for twenty minutes twice a day, sitting comfortably with the eyes closed.

Deep Rest

The benefits of TM have been scientifically verified. The Feb. 1972 issue of Scientific American described the changes in TM: reductions in oxygen consumption (about 17 percent, twice the depth of deep sleep) as well as in carbon dioxide elimination and the rate and volume of respiration. A slowing of the heartbeat, a fivefold increase in skin resistance, a decrease in blood lactate concentration, and a marked intensification of slow alpha waves in the brain, all demonstrate that TM produces an extreme and unique state of deep rest. Any human can awaken this capacity to take deep rest at will.

Clear Thinking

Developing clarity in the thinking processes as well as rest and stability in the nervous system are the primary' benefits of Transcendental Meditation. Because the mind and body are intimately related, as the activity of the mind decreases in meditation the body immediately settles down. Meditators report a feeling of restful alertness that remains with them throughout any activity. Clarity of the thinking processes is improved when a meditator experiences the deeper levels of the mind, where thought it more powerful. To experience these subtler, more energetic levels of thought strengthens our thinking, with the result that our activity, which is based on thought, becomes more dynamic and easier to accomplish.

Lecture on Thursday

The last TM course of the semester will be held at UMass this week, with the introductory meeting scheduled for the Campus Center, Room 903, at 8:00 on Thursday, May 3. The follow up lecture is scheduled for Friday the 4th at 8:00, Campus Center, Room 903, any questions about dates and times can be cleared up by calling the Center in Amherst at 549-6708. Instruction will follow on the weekend by appointment with an instructor.

This is an important time of the year to capitalize on this opportunity to learn properly the technique of TM.

Sociology Honors Offered

The following Honors program is offered in the Fall 1973 semester:

Soc. 101/Honors C-47 Introductory Sociology
Lect. 1—MW 11:15
Disc. sect. 10—F11:15
4 credits—Professor T. O. Wilkinson

The regular Sociology 101 is designed to explore sociologically the relationships between the individual and society. Honors students will have more independently assigned readings as bases for student report/discussions to class, and more written assignment which ask the student to apply concepts of the course.

Readings: Bergen, Invitation to Sociology; Brown, Manchild in the Promised Land; Roszak, The Making of a Counter Culture.

Soc. 390/Honors C-48 Sociological Theory; Critical Perspectives
Seminar—M 2:30-5:30
4 credits—Professor G. Platt

This course will read and compare works of the phenomenological and neo-radical attitudes toward sociology. We will read works by Garfinkel, Goffman, Birnbaum, Gouldner, Dahrendorf, Lucacs, Djilas, and others. It is important that the students have had some sociology courses and that they be interested in reading and criticizing theory. The specific works, course format and requirements will be discussed at the first meeting.

W.E.B. DuBois Schedule

The W.E.B. DuBois Center in Springfield, Massachusetts, the community contingent of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at the University, has scheduled a Cultural Series, open to the general public. The series events are held every Tuesday and Thursday at 7 p.m. at the W.E.B. DuBois Center, located at 80 Hancock Street in Springfield.

For further information please call 737-3515 or 538-2507.

HISTORY AND CURRENT ISSUES:

Tuesday, May 1 -- "Old and New World Africans: The Ties That Bind," Johnetta Cole.
Thursday, May 3 -- "The Meaning of Africa," Asa Davis.
Tuesday, May 8 -- "African History," Dovi Afesi.
Thursday, May 10 -- "African History," Dovi Afesi.

Rosemont To Speak

Professor Henry Rosemont of the Linguistics Department of the Graduate Center, City College of New York will be a guest lecturer at the Education School on Thursday, May 3 at 2:00 p.m. Professor Rosemont's talk will examine various models of human being presented in social science research and their implications for development of education research and programs. Professor Rosemont will contrast the work in behavioral psychology with his recent research in language development and acquisition.

Professor Rosemont received his Ph D. in Oriental Philosophy at the University of Washington and has been Post Doctoral Fellow and Instructor in Linguistics Department at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Professor Rosemont has been in the center of educational reform as both participant, researcher and teacher. He has been a professor at the experimental Oakland College of Wayne State University and University of Illinois, Urbana before joining the City College faculty.

Blood Requested

The University's annual spring blood donor days are here—Now! at the Campus Center, Lower Level. Today and Thursday the Red Cross bloodmobile will be in operation from 9:30 a.m. until 3:15 p.m. Anyone in good health, 18 and over, and weighing more than 110 is eligible. One pint of blood helps as many as five others when it is fractionated into components for use in the treatment of hemophilia and other diseases: Red Cross blood is never wasted. The Red Cross blood program depends entirely on voluntary donors who give their blood as a protection in times of emergency to their families and to help others who cannot give. Plan to visit Campus Center either today or tomorrow and join the 'life-line'. You may give as often as five times a year, not more often than every eight weeks. Thank you for sharing.

Too Friendly

Collegian supersleuth Charles Camelopard has done the near impossible.

Disguised as a mild-mannered FBI agent replete with badge and gun, Camelopard has managed to be assigned guard duty at the White House. He, along with other agents, is guarding the files of H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman from being stolen by investigators of the Watergate affair.

Camelopard has, of course, tried to get his hands on the files, but security measures have made this impossible. He did, however, take a letter from President Nixon's wastebasket that reveals the deep-reaching effect of the Watergate Affair on the American voter. Here reproduced is the letter sticky fingers Camelopard got hold of:

Dear Mr. President:

It is with deep regret that I resign my position as voter in the town of Northampton, Massachusetts. I realize that a voter loss in our state is meaningless to people who treat politics the way you do, but nonetheless I feel in order to protect myself from possible involvement with the growing number of people being implicated in the Watergate Affair this must be done.

The fear I have is founded on the fact that three years ago I rode the bus in Northampton while a student at Smith College. Your daughter was on the bus, too. I said hello to her and was immediately photographed and treated to a series of dirty looks from her entourage of Secret Service protectors. Apparently I was too friendly.

The trouble is that everyone who has been friendly with you (i.e. the Mitchells, the Haldemans, the Ehrlichmans, and the Deanz), have been pushed out of their jobs. I am very afraid that my connection with your family might cause me to lose my job as a checkout girl at the Big Y Supermarket in town. (It was all I could find after graduating with honors from Smith).

I realize that you are a busy man covering up all the hassle that Watergate has produced. I was proud to see you accept the responsibility Monday night...I know you think that it will make all the new discoveries anticlimatic, and I hope it works. You're sixty now and all this work is beginning to show its toll on your face. I really think you should quit. For you to stay on might bring impeachment proceedings which would not only set a dangerous precedent if your accusers are victorious, but would also be harmful to your health. Perhaps you could fake a heart attack and then resign, bringing peace with honor on a war-torn American society.

Sincerely yours,
Margaret Millipede

How To Get Freebies

I don't mind spending money on food. I know that it's kind of expensive at times but, then again, my stomach rules my brain so food prices don't really bother me. Except when I get ripped off.

Last night my roommate offered me some cheese crackers. You know, the kind with the peanut butter smooshed between two of them. Normally you get four sets of crackers in a package. Well, I got only three in mine. For some stupid unknown reason, it seems to be written into my Karma that I am to receive all the rejects from the mass production line. But things like this happen to me all the time so I know how to handle the situation. I write nasty letters to the company who makes the stuff.

When I was smoking cigarettes, somehow I managed to get a crushed one in a crush-proof box. I sent it back to the company with a note to the effect "shape up, or I'm shipping out." Three weeks later they sent me their apologies, along with a free carton of cigarettes.

Sometime later while munching on some canned pineapple, I spotted a dead fly floating in the syrup. As soon as my feeling of revulsion had passed, I sent the poor fly back to the manufacturer stating that I was a vegetarian and could do without dead flies added for extra flavor. Along with the letter of apology, the company sent me a case of canned pineapple.

Whenever I go home, my mother loads me up with all sorts of goodies from her cabinets. Once she gave me a box of sugar packets but the manufacturer neglected to put sugar in some of them. A quick note from me; a free box of sugar packets from them.

Enough examples, down to techniques. Getting freebies is really simple. So simple in fact that I thought it was common knowledge. But I was quite amazed at the number of people who didn't know about getting free merchandise, legitimately. Abbie Hoffman wrote about freebies in Steal This Book (which I didn't) years ago.

Letter writing is easy, painless, and once you get the basic idea down, you can probably mimeo up a bunch and send them off to a million different companies, depending upon where your conscience is at. This is my usual copy:

To Whom it may concern:

As a college student paying my way through school, I find the rising costs of consumer goods a tolerable inconvenience. That is until I find defective merchandise (such as I have enclosed.) This is unfortunate as I enjoy your product greatly. If this is to continue, then I will be forced to switch my brand.

It's the last sentence that gets them. Companies get really nervous when you threaten to cut them off. Anyway, type this up on thesis paper because it looks as if you actually do go to school. Also, make sure that there is at least one typing error (college kiddies aren't supposed to be able to type very well). One last important note: on the envelope write "Attention: Complaint Dept." in your angriest handwriting. Otherwise the letter will sit in the mailroom for a few months.

Remember the approximate date you send it, just in case they "forget" about you. It's doubtful that they will but if it does happen send off another letter bitching about them not replying to your first.

Up until now, all my excuses have been legitimate so I don't feel at all guilty when I send off my letters. Realistically, one lousy carton of cigarettes from the Marlboro people is nothing compared to the trauma of them losing a steady customer. I've used this not only for free food. This method is good for just about any small non-perishable item such as cheap pens, film, (Kodak's pretty good about replacing broken canisters and they refund you in stamps as well), and little odds and ends.

Right now I'm working on a way to get back at the ice-cream company who forgot to put the cone in with my "drumstick."

The Watergate Show

"And now, direct from the White House in beautiful Washington, D.C., the Watergate Show—starring Dick Nixon, with Ronald Ziegler!"

"And now, Heeerrrre's Tricky!"

Dick: "Thank you, folks, and let me say we have a good show lined up for tonight. We've got John and Martha Mitchell, and a new rock group, the Resignation Quartet, and let's see, have I forgetten about anyone, Ron?"

Ron: "Yes, Dick, I'm surprised at you. You forgot about Checkers."

Dick: "Of course, that's right. Checkers is coming on again tonight. My, we haven't seen that little rascal in quite some time. Oh, am I supposed to do a commercial, now?"

Dick: "Alright—Well, folks, this is the Pepsi generation. Do you know that people drink Pepsi all over the world? In fact, it's one of the favorite beverages in the Kremlin. Why, I was just talking to Leonod the other day, and do you know—he told me he likes Pepsi even more than vodka. That's right. So remember, you're in the Pepsi generation."

Ron: "That was very good Dick."

Dick: "Oh, it's easy. I've been plugging Pepsi for a long time. Who's our first guest for tonight, Ron?"

Ron: "Well Dick, John and Martha were supposed to be here, but they don't seem to have arrived, yet. But we do have James McCord on hand, to do his famous tap dancing routine, and—wait a minute, Dick. John and Martha have just arrived."

Dick: "Our next guest is well known as the former Chairman of the Committee to Re-elect the President. He is here with us tonight and he's brought his wife along. May I introduce to you, former Attorney General John Mitchell and his wife, Martha. Well John, why are you so late, tonight?"

John: "Well Dick, I didn't even know about the whole affair until just now."

Martha: "You knew about it, John."

John: "Well no, I didn't really know about it."

Martha: "Sure you did. You told me yourself that it was brought up at a few meetings earlier this year."

John: "Yes Martha, I said it was brought up, but I didn't know if it would actually happen."

Martha: "Well, you could have figured that out for . . ."

Dick: "I think it's time for another commercial . . . Ladies and gentlemen, in the type of business I'm in, I'm often asked to make long distance calls to practically every corner of the globe. And when I do, I'm sure glad that the International Telephcee and Telegraph Corporation is always on hand, with it's low rates and friendly service. Why, just last week, I was called upon to place a call to Chile, and I found that the rates were next to nothing. I'm awfully glad that IT&T is always there when I need it—aren't you?"

Ron: "Well, we appear to be running out of time, Dick."

Dick: "Yes, and it's too bad that we weren't able to hear the new song by the Resignation Quartet, but that's show biz. Good night, John. It was nice having you and I hope you'll be back soon. Good night, Martha.

"I hope you'll tune in tomorrow night, as we will bring you a special pre-recorded discussion between George McGovern and Thomas Eagleton, taped live at an earlier date from the Democratic National Headquarters. I guarantee that it'll be a show you won't want to miss. But for now, good night folks, and remember, I am the President."

"Transportation for Dick's guests was provided by the United States Air Force, which reminds you that the Air Force makes the going great. While Dick's guests were in Washington, they stayed at the luxurious, Watergate Hotel. Watergate—the most intimidating people in the world. Now, stay tuned for the Who, What, or Where Game, next on most of these stations."

Israel: A Home For The Jews

To The Editor:

I appreciate his want to enlighten me about our people, but if Eric Goldman has ever pretended to be a Jew, and I suppose he has, then it is the stench of self-hate that dissuades me from his argument. I can very well understand his feelings, however, because the society he grew up in (be it the Soviet Union, the United States or South Africa) has rewarded this tendency in him as it has tried to reward me.

Jews are exploited as a tool in most societies to work against themselves. A piece of societies frosted cake in exchange for the cooperation of Jewish skill and expertise. Its a deal you can't refuse at the offering and its implications are unseen on a day to day level. Soon, though, it becomes a deal you can't get out of without risking life, livelihood and family. What it amounts to is that the people who really control this country want us and like us exactly where we are. We are really totally dependant on the benevolence of these people and work to serve their technocracies. Its an easy situation to live with for the controlers because its so subtle yet as addicting as heroine. Jews are not the only people in this position in America either, and some of us have raised ourselves above it. But its not a new story either. It has been happening ever since Jews have been forced into the Diaspora, so I can understand Eric Goldman's unwillingness to bite the hand that feeds him.

Of course, history has also shown that when there is a need to give societies' ills a reason for being, these same Jews are the first to be burned in places like Dachau. What I am saying is that the mentality of his letter is Pre-holocaust German Jew.

I agree that the Jew must have a greater social conscience but this conscience has frequently displayed itself around the world, the history of which I will not go into. I will only say that Jewish conscience for whatever awareness needs to be realized will never be and should not be expected to be suicidal as well. Eric Goldman it seems, would like to indict the Jews with the total responsibility for Dutch and British colonialism; indict the Jews with total responsibility for racism and indict the Jews with total responsibility for the grave injustice done to the Palestinians. For someone who begins a letter "As a Jew," this seems to ring of a very poor self-image, indeed. I'm sorry for you but the world will probably never let you forget you are a Jew.

Jews have always wrestled with the problem of their identity. This is why, after 6000 years we are still one people. This is why every attempt to label Jews as Victims or Oppressors is fruitless. Neither Stokely Carmichael, Richard Nixon or Patricia Cutts has the competence to tell us who we are. With raw intellectualism they try. In bleeding ignorance, they fail.

Exploited, robbed and sucked in, most Jews find themselves in the same precarious position all over the world--except in Israel.

In a time when the rallying cry for oppressed peoples is that no people can survive without self determination in their own land, the advocates stand chilled at the thought of the Jews with this very same human right. Everyone in their own land but the Jews. It seems we will forever be expendable in some peoples' eyes.

As a Jew, (and I hope someday in the near future to say: as an Israeli) I will work in what every way I can to see the creation of a Palestinian land and state. But their plight is not solely in the hands of the Israeli government. In fact, their struggle shows them turning as much to the quasi-facist governments (which have exploited them perhaps far more than the Israelis) for many of their answers. I will never be suckered into defending Israel as a perfect nation, but I cannot and will not deny Israel to my children.

Soon Israel will celebrate its 25th birthday as a state reborn. In the wake of this celebration the questions I ask Eric Goldman to ask himself are, where else could the remnants of the Nazi holocaust have gone? Where else could the remnants of the Russian Pogroms goes if not for the dream of Israel? They were also refugees when the nations of the world shut their doors. Eric Goldman, where would you go? How can you speak of Jews and justice when you do not seek justice for Jews?

With a struggling population of three and a half million alive--six million dead, Israel serves as a home to all those Jews who feel there is a better way to live as Jews, and to those dead who wished there had been an Israel in the midst of their sufferings.

Please Explain

To The Editor:

Would not best kindly explain to us fascists how ROTC on this campus contributes to a passive attitude toward Pentagon spending, Cambodia, Wounded Knee, and Watergate? It seems that her attitude is more suburban than analytical--not in OUR neighborhood!

And what does she wish to imply by her statistics on food prices and the defense budget. Should the food price increase keep pace with the 56.6 percent rise in defense spending, or should the two figures be inversely proportional? Cute.

And speaking of food prices, she might do well to read something about farm economics and how the federal government spends money so that farmers can get 50 percent of the returns that a city worker gets for equivalent labor. That is your high cost of food.

Along her line, it might be all right if ROTC cadets occupied the School of Education demanding to work amidst an institution free from overt presence of hippies (please, no offense to the School of Ed. or hippies) as long as the sham of radical education, managing and training elitists in the air force (which was used in the taking over of Dickinson) and Consciousness III was exposed and resettled outside of the University. Or perhaps she just hates the sight of the uniform of the U.S. Air Force. Until she denies herself of all her personal benefits derived from the armed forces (an Eastern Hemisphere free from National Socialist domination?), then she had better not condemn that institution.

What has the pressure on ROTC done in its 10-month trial period anyway? The U.S. is still implicated in Southeast Asia and the Pentagon still throws money away. I know that 10 months is too short a time to expect results from radical change, but Ms. best has given me nothing else to refer to. Best seems to think like the State Department in dealing with Southeast Asia.

Maybe Ms. best does have an explanation for all this. Then would she kindly let us in on it?

Eric Jasik

Clarification

To The Editor:

Allow me to take this opportunity to point out what I assume must be an unintentional error in your report on the protest meeting of April 30. Mr. Campion is indicated as saying that "the money from parking would go into off campus buses but would rather be restricted to funding and on-campus shuttle". I believe that you meant to report that money for parking would not go into off campus buses.

Paul W. Shaldiner, Chairman
Parking and Transportation Council

Not All Jews

To The Editor:

In response to Eric Goldman's article of yesterday, I, as a Jew, have chosen to make this criticism. Many of the assumptions Mr. Goldman makes are true, but what he should realize is that criticism of all Jews on the basis of individual injustices is as senseless as a defense of all Jews on the basis of past suffering. In other words, although many of Mr. Goldman's points are well-taken, he should remember that discrepancy should be used in the treatment of any group of people. He should also realize that being born Jewish does not make anyone a Jew and that criticism, as well as defense, of Judaism should be aimed at particular Jews, rather than Jews in particular.

Reid Fishman

In Appreciation

To The Editor:

We wish to thank the several faculty of the University for their generous donation of materials with which to replenish the flood-ravaged library of Wilkes College, Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania. Through your contributions we were able to collect, pack and ship more than 1700 pounds of texts and periodicals to Wilkes College.

Why is it that men feel they have any understanding of women's oppression? Why do whites think they comprehend the plight of blacks in America? Why do white men think they have anything to teach on these issues? Shouldn't they sit back and listen?

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

More Than Money

To The Editor:

On Monday night the Central Area Council debated for over thirty minutes on whether they had the right as representatives of the Central Area Students to make a moral decision. The debate arose when three representatives from the American Indian Movement came to the Council to ask for both economic and moral support.

The Council voted in very short order to give AIM $500.00 of the area's money. Economically then, their obligations were discharged and their consciences were clear. (After all, what is money?) The respresentatives of the Central Area were then asked to vote on a second proposal which would morally support that which had just been so easily supported economically. The Council debated in very long order. Comments were "How can I morally make a decision when I am supposed to be representing the people in my dorm?" "Why should we condone the actions of those people who have broken a serious law?"

"I think we should table the proposal until our next meeting."

My answer to those students who did not feel up to making a moral decision, is that they should ask themselves what the $500.00 represented. Nobody felt the necessity to run back to their dorms and ask permission to make an economic decision. They just did it. Maybe without thinking fully. Next time--PUT YOUR MOUTHS WHERE YOUR MONEY IS AND YOUR CONSCIENCES.

Question The Fee Hike

To The Editor:

There has been talk that the average parking fee will be higher next year than it is now, and that the fee for an inner-campus parking space will be much higher than one for a parking space closer to Northampton. I would like to question both of these charges.

Will it cost the University more to provide parking spaces next year than it does now? Will there be an increase in service? Will parking spaces actually be plowed next winter? Will there be an increase in campus police to reduce the flow of illegal traffic through the middle of our campus, or to give pedestrians their right to cross streets at crosswalks? I mean, I can see all kinds of reasons for increasing service and therefore increasing parking fees. But before I'm asked to pay a higher fee, I'd like to know where my money is going and what I'm getting for it.

I really cannot see why an inner campus parking space should cost more than an outer one. The University does not have to obey the law of supply and demand. Putting a higher price on a better parking lot penalizes people for being poor, and the University already does enough of that. Would it not make alot more sense to punish people who ride to school one person per car, or to punish people who could walk or bike to school or take a bus, but who ride instead?

Give inner lots to people who live far from the University and its busses. Maybe inner lots should be given to cars that come to the University full. This system might be a little tricky to administer, but it would be far better to have a socially beneficial plan with a few flaws in it than to have a perfectly administered oppressive system. And it is surely oppressive to grant parking spaces on the basis of ability to pay or on status within the University.

Herb Koplowitz

Where To Go For Help

To The Editor:

If any students, staff members or faculty personnel are having problems (of any nature) and don't know where to go or whom to see, your search is over. The University Ombudsman, Mr. Jay Savereid is the person to see. If you do not know which administrative office to go to, or if you do go to what is thought to be the proper office and do not get the help needed, or if disagreement or misunderstandings arise between you and your instructor which cannot be resolved by direct contact, then it is the function of the Ombudsman's Office to try to help you. If you receive no satisfaction, he and his secretary, Phyllis Foster, will personally help pursue the matter.

The University Ombudsman's Office is located in room 919 Campus Center and the phone number is 545-0887. For those of you living in the different areas on campus, offices have been set up in the Quad, Northeast, Southwest, Central and Orchard Hill Areas. Hours are posted in your areas that have been set up so Area Representatives (students) from the Ombudsman's Office can assist you with your problems.

Only three weeks left of classes, why not leave campus with all your problems solved and peace of mind?

Another Way To Cut Down Cars

To The Editor:

I would like to make one thing perfectly clear:

I AM NOT IN FULL AGREEMENT WITH THE PROPOSED NEW CAMPUS PARKING POLICY! ! ! The practice of eliminating numbers of automobiles by making it too expensive to keep them is not generally fair (and the Parking Board may find out - in light of collective bargaining agreements - that it isn't legal). I do agree, however, that we need to achieve the end result of approximately halving the number of automobiles granted on-campus parking.

To be specific, I would like to suggest an alternate method to reduce the number of automobiles on campus. Persons requesting on-campus parking would be classified as follows: Group 1 - Faculty, staff and commuters who do not live along bus lines; Group 2 - On campus residents who work or practice teach off-campus, and; Group 3 - all others (to include faculty, staff, and commuters who do live along bus routes, and on-campus residents).

Parking lot assignments would be as follows: (1) for Group 1, assignment to lots nearest to work-place or classes up to the capacity of those lots; (2) for Group 2, assignment to lot nearest place of residence (these assignments not to be superceded by assignments to Group 1); (3) assignment of Group (1) and (2) overflows to peripheral (4) all request from Group 3 to be assigned to lots according to a lottery, up to the capacity of all lots on campus.

If this system were entered into in good faith I believe it would aid the problem while being fair to as many people as possible. I don't feel that it is a valid argument that this system is blatantly discriminatory to students. Students who feel that they 'are' the University (and that, therefore, they should be provided with a parking privilege) may be overlooking these aspects:

(1) students are expected to be here as an educative experience (sic), and keeping an automobile may not be an important part of that, and;

(2) this University turns down approximately three prospective students for every one it accepts. Therefore, if you feel that your attendance at UMass compromises your right to an automobile, and that compromise is not acceptable to you, then don't attend school here. It's relatively certain that your space can be adequately filled.

Finally, I would make this suggestion: Western Mass Bus Lines should be approached with a request to provide commuter service to University people at a reasonable rate. That is, allow those who buy a pass for, say, $1.50 each week, to take an unlimited number of passages between UMass and points along the route.

How's that sound?

Daniel J. Slosek

Robbery

To The Editor:

White musicians stole the Blues and the Jazz, a music of the Afro-American invention, and, via their capitalistic nature, made all the money and fame.

One would think that since the Afro-American musicians have been the victims of this sort of cultural robbery that they would not channel their thoughts in the same direction. However this is not the case.

Johnny Nash went to Jamaica sometime in the 60's and fall in love with the Reggae (Jamaican invented music) and now has made a number of million sellers - "Hold Me Tight", "Cupid", "I Can See Clearly Now," and more recently, "Steer It Up" - from which he has made great fame AND fortune - such that he is now acclaimed "King of Reggae".

He was immediately followed by The Staple Singers who practiced the same method in making their fame and fortune from "I'll Take You There."

Then there is Aretha Franklin and her hit "Rock Steady." Now Roberta Flack asserts that she wants to be the "Queen of Reggae". None of the above alluding to the fact that not only is the music not their inventions, but in most cases that the songs are written by Jamaicans.

I cannot comprehend how Afro-Americans can make so much noise about cultural imperialism and then turn around and practice the same thing. It is like the preacher who tells his congregation to do as he says, but not as he does.

How can Black people in America expect justice to be done to them when they are doing injustice to a people of the same race. Perhaps Afro-Americans do not realize that cultural imperialism is bad whether practiced by whites against Blacks or Blacks against B'acks.

Re: Richard Kaitz

Didn't anyone inform this naive person that Joe McCarthy told the truth and was smeared for it by our pro-Communist State Department? Didn't anyone tell him that it's the U.N. that got us involved in Korea and Vietnam? Since 1945, haven't the Russians been the REAL imperialists and exploiters?

What is happening is that Nixon wants to dismantle our Constitution and merge us into a one-world, Socialist, repressive and suppressive dictatorship.

There is no way to get a real, peaceful, democratic world unless we defeat the Communist enemy. The most essential part of achieving their goals is the use of the U.N. (with the MIDDLE CLASS taxpayers picking up most of the tab, of course). This is why we must GET OUT!

Wake up, Richard.

Thanks

To The Editor:

On April 18th, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project sponsored a live circus in the Curry-Hicks Cage. The two shows presented by the Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus brought cheer into the lives of hundreds of children from the local community, as well as to 260 residents of the Belchertown State School. In addition, ticket and concession sales yielded a profit of approximately $2000; all of this money will go directly to benefit the residents of the State School.

On behalf of the Boltwood-Belchertown Project, I would like to thank everyone who helped us make the circus the wonderful success that it was. Many hours of labor on the part of many persons went into the preparation and presentation of the circus.

No Liberalizing Effect

To The Editor:

The University is attempting to restore the credit to R.O.T.C. which was supposedly abolished last spring. Those students, faculty and administrators who think that R.O.T.C. has a liberalizing effect on the Air Force are living in a dream world. R.O.T.C. has been existing for years, but I am not aware of its liberalizing effect on the Air Force or the young men who enter into it. Where is there evidence to show that liberal ideas have filtered up through the chain of command from a lowly R.O.T.C. second lieutenant to generals in the Pentagon who make policy? It is my understanding that good soldiers and officers learn to follow orders, not to challenge them, or do our R.O.T.C. cadets believe that the U.S. high command is a democratic organization which is just dying to hear from liberal college boys who would like to reform its policy?

As far as I know, the UMass R.O.T.C. membership has not participated in any dissident activities on campus. Where were all the R.O.T.C. liberals when people all over the country were rising up in protest against the war in Indo China? The U. S. Army, with its headquarters in the Pentagon is the machinery by which the U. S. has participated in the economic wars of the last century, and by which a great American empire The blood and suffering and waste of resources and money resulting can never be calculated. Most of us have decided that we will oppose the continuation of this process. Who can show us that R.O.T.C. is not just an appendage of this war machine, and that it will join us in resisting the forces that are forever pushing us into war?

It is my view that policy comes from the Pentagon, and that R.O.T.C. will be the means by which this institution will distribute its propaganda onto the campus. We don't want that happening here.

Don't Finance Bombing

To The Editor:

It is urgent that people contact Congressman Silvio Conte on the House Defense Appropriations Subcommittee requesting that he vote "NO" on Nixon's request for $500,000 to finance the current bombing in Cambodia. If this appropriation is approved it could be another "Gulf of Tonkin" type of authorization that would involve the taxpayers money in another venture (doomed to failure as it was in Vietnam) which operates on the assumption that the Pentagon can bomb their way to victory over a people's struggle for independence.

There are currently F-111 and B-52 flights over Cambodia averaging 244 flights a day and by May 1, there will have been 54 days of constant bombing.

Pentagon officials have said that the March total of bombs dropped in Cambodia was 39,539 tons. If Nixon gets his $500,000 appropriation to pay for this mass killing, he will be back for more. How much more?

The decision will be made this week. Write or telephone a telegram to Congressman Conte to vote "No" for the $500,000 appropriation to finance bombing in Cambodia.

ATTRACTIVE OPENINGS FOR FIELD SALES ENGINEERS

Texas Instruments is continuing to pioneer advanced semiconductor technologies which will revolutionize the electronics industry. We need a rare kind of sales engineer who can interpret these major developments to customers well versed in the state-of-the-art.

This takes a strong technical electronics background. Enough to understand and stay in close touch with design developments at the home plant, and the technical ability to apply new semiconductor concepts to key customer influences at all levels, including top management. You will be responsible for managing one to two million dollars per year semiconductor business.

We will supplement successful candidates formal education with a training program at our facilities in Dallas or Houston, Texas. The majority of this time will be spent in real world work assignments learning Texas Instruments in general and semiconductor activities in particular. Upon completion of this 6 month program, placement will be in one of the major metropolitan areas of the United States.

Incident Of Injustice

To The Editor:

I think that I can add some perspective to those considering the article entitled "On Being Arrested: When, What and How" (MDC, April 30) by relating a personal experience concerning the law of search and seizure and its implementation under the American system of assumed innocence.

In March, 1973, I was apprehended by the police in Cave City, Kentucky, whilst eating a peanut butter sandwich in a designated picnic area. I had been hiking with two friends in the South, so we were necessarily equipped with backpacks. The police chief, Carl Walden and his lieutenant approached us and asked to see our I.D.'s, which we promptly turned over to him. He then asked if we had any objections to having our packs searched. I replied that I objected, saying that he needed a search warrant to search the thing, and that I had the right to refuse. He said, "Oh, I wouldn't want you to not have your rights," and proceeded to escort us to the police station. At no time was I informed that I was under arrest, and in no way did the officer have reason to believe that I had a weapon which might be used to harm him (it was he that approached me rather than the opposite). He called the judge down to the station to get the warrant. When the judge got there, he said that it was a long, involved procedure to get a warrant ('till 8:00 the next morning), and was I sure I wouldn't consent to having my pack searched? Would we only allow them to generally "feel around" the objects in their containers? The two other people I was with consented to this "surface search" because one of them had some bourbon and was underaged to be carrying it in Ky. (legal age is 21)-they figured that this kind of a search might not reveal the bourbon (they were right). So they were whisked out of the room, given cold coke and treated nicely while their packs were being searched. I still refused to have my pack searched without a warrant, insisting that it was a matter of principle, and that I had the right to refuse (incidentally, I had no dope, drugs or weapons). This refusal, of course, increased their suspicion of me. Behind closed doors, in bright light, separated from my friends and in a strange town in the middle of Kentucky, they began pressuring me even more to submit to being searched. Next I was informed that if I did not submit, I would be arrested for loitering (he showed me that I had been charged) and would be forced to spend the night in jail. My pack would be searched in the morning, anyway, they said, and I would probably have a fine for loitering (how much, they wouldn't say). So I was faced with the dilemma: should I stand up for principle and my right and be punished with a night in jail (and a fine) or should I submit to their pressure, which was now increasing, with verbal quips like "We just want to prove you're innocent", and I want to make sure you have your rights." So, after three hours of standing on the dry rock of principle, and after two phone calls, I consented to let them search my pack. My reasoning was this: These men, these zero's who were supposedly law officers, had shown complete disregard for me and for the law during the whole affair. If I spent the night in jail, I could be physically harmed, they could have planted something in my pack, and the judge had told the lawyer with whom I had spoken that I could be fined up to 100$ for loitering (I had only $40). Once I consented to the search, the officer replied, "I don't even want to–I just wanted to prove to you that I can search your pack if I want to–don't ever think you're above the law, kid."

The moral of the story is that the law of search and seizure, and rights protecting personal freedom don't mean beans in a teapot if those in power don't want them to. To be legally right in this kind of a situation does no good--one is powerless. And if so much injustice exists on this leve, what has been happening to political prisoners and with Watergate conspirators? Who works the law in American the free?

Powerful Bologna

To The Editor:

Guru Maharaj Ji is powerful bologna. His power comes from where power usually comes - support of people. A few things ought to be put up front before people consider joining this religious revival. One thing is that the guru club has different lines for those who "don't" have knowledge and for those who "do". The "don't" line is perfect peace, etc., without having to do anything but give up your powers of analysis for "faith" – a classic line of lots of churches and reactionaries like Nixon. The guru does your thinking for you. For the in-crowd however, guru is supposed to work miracles "turns paper into birds", and also, according to this, when the bomb falls (which it will they say) all the guru freaks live, all the rest die. Both these ideas are meant for the powerless, alienated people; people are given a nice father figure who holds all the power himself, supposedly, when in fact, it is only their support that makes this movement tick at all. It certainly is attractive not to have to deal with your own problems, isn't it?

This movement is also a white youth thing. Middle-class young people are the main force in it: just look at the list of ashrams. More than half of them are in the U.S. - pretty telling for a "world-wide" and "every donomination-race-religion" club. According to the line, imperalist America is going to be the torch-bearer for the world's salvation, (including the Vietnamese, I suppose). Seems to me that we, as white middle class people haven't learned much about our position in the world, if we still think we're leading the movement for peace in this world.

And one last thing is that, if you're wondering how India's rulers have maintained that heavy cast class system they've got going over there, this is one of the ways: it says "don't worry about your oppression on earth, you'll get yours in heaven" (either present or future). All you have to do is keep going the way you are - whether you're "untouchable" or Henry Kissinger. In other words, don't disturb the set-up, just ignore it, even when you're getting ripped off.

Emancipated Or Cohabiting?

By TONY GRANITE

NO COHABITING AT LSU is the message that cost a freshman $7 and probation, according to intelligence in the Daily Reveille.

Seems the lad had a gal in his dorm digs, while his roommate slept in the hall. The freshman's defense was that he and his roommate were "legally emancipated" and he questioned the right for the Review Board to punish him for "breaking a sexually prejudicial rule."

HEADLINES OF THE WEEK appeared in the Central Michigan U. Life over a review of television viewing: "Elvis and Ann on back-bo-back tonight."

And in the North Hennepin (Minn.) Junior College Northern Star, appeared this headline capping the review of the notorious movie about oral sex: " 'Deep Throat' chokes critic."

MEANWHILE, the Pirate's Log of Modesto (Calif.) Junior College used this headline over a piece by-lined by the school nurse: "VD: Who Knows What Evil Lurks Within?"

ADD CRUSADING EDITORS . . . The co-editors of the UMichigan Daily have teamed up with student government leaders to seek court relief from Regents' private meetings where "the most important decision are made."

The student groups went to court to force the school to reveal salary lists of all employees, in an attempt to check alleged sexual and racial discrimination.

A NEW POLITICAL PARTY emerged at Indiana University this Spring, when the annual student government elections came around.

"The Birthday Party" put up a pair of candidates who would not comment on their previous student government experience, according to the Indiana Daily Student. But they did claim they were both "well qualified for the offices" of president and vice-president.

CHIVALRY HAS BEEN REVIVED at UConn, where the Society of Creative Anachronism (SCA) displayed the lifestyle of 17th Century England, this month. Fifty jousters competed in a Sunday afternoon tourney, with displays of 17th century dress and utensils, and refreshments rounding out the day.

Linguistics Offers . . .

Linguistics 201, General Linguistics, will be offered by the Linguistics Department this summer. The course is a general introduction to the field of linguistics, the nature of language, and language universals. Students will be introduced to various aspects of modern language theory. Including phonology and syntax. By permission, this course may be counted for major credit in English, German, Romance Languages, Speech, and Psychology. There are no prerequisites. Class meeting time will be announced later in the semester. For information, call 545-0885.

PSYCHOLINGUISTICS IN FALL, 1973

The Department of Linguistics will be offering a new course, Linguistics 211/511 Psycholinguistics, next fall. Psycholinguistics forms one of the most important areas of linguistics at the present time. The experimental work being carried out in this field has great bearing on our views of linguistic universals, language learning, and perception of language. This course will introduce the student to the study of psycholinguistics: its theoretical foundations, methodology, and experimental techniques. Emphasis will be placed on the acquisition of language, child language and linguistic universals, and learning and perceptual strategies. 3 credits. Prerequisite: Linguistics 201/501, or permission of the Instructor. Scheduled meeting time: TuTh 11:15-12:30. Machmer W-25.

The Department of Linguistics would like to clarify the listings in the Fall, 1973 Preregistration Guide. Linguistics 202, Phonology, and Linguistics 209, Formal Foundations of Linguistic Theory, may be taken for Honors credit (by signing up for the appropriate Honors colloquium), but they need not be. Those wishing regular credit (3) should disregard the note in the Preregistration Guide and sign up only for Linguistics 202 or 209, as listed.

UMass Prof. Named To Assist Chancellor

Prof. Tim Bornstein, associate professor of law and industrial relations at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, has been named an assistant to the UMass Chancellor, for employee relations.

The announcement was made by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery who said Prof. Bornstein's appointment is effective June 1.

Prof. Tim Bornstein

As a consultant to the Chancellor in personnel matters, Prof. Bornstein will be involved with the development of employee relations programs and the structuring of an office to develop and coordinate these programs.

Since 1969 he has been an associate professor of law and industrial relations in the School of Business Administration at UMass-Amherst. He is the author of several articles about labor relations, and a new book, "The National Labor Relations Board," will be published in the fall by Praeger Publishers, Inc.

Prof. Bornstein earned his bachelor's degree in 1954 from the University of Louisville and his law degree in 1957 from Harvard University Law School. Before coming to UMass he served for two years as special assistant to the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, and before that, from 1958 to 1967, practiced labor relations law in Washington, D.C.

He has served as a labor relations arbitrator in the private and public sectors—including public schools and municipal government, and furniture, steel, gas, building construction and other industries. He has also served as a mediator and fact-finder in public school and municipal labor disputes throughout New England.

He writes a monthly column on legal and arbitration developments for a newsletter of the U.S. Conference of Mayors and National League of Cities.

The Chancellor's new assistant is a member of the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association and the Industrial Relations Research Association.

Richardson Third Person To Hold 3 Cabinet Posts

WASHINGTON (AP) - If Elliot L. Richardson is confirmed as attorney general, he will become only the third man ever to hold three different Cabinet positions in one administration.

Richardson, currently secretary of Defense, was secretary of health, education and welfare from 1970 until early this year. He was named by President Nixon Monday to be the next chief of the Justice Department.

Timothy Pickering was the first man to hold three different jobs in one president's Cabinet. He was secretary of state, secretary of war and postmaster general for George Washington.

George B. Courtelyou was postmaster general, secretary of the treasury and secretary of commerce and labor for Theodore Roosevelt early in this century. Commerce and labor was then a single department.

Treasury Secretary George P. Schultz was secretary of labor earlier in the Nixon administration and director of the Office of Management and Budget. Although the OMB job is considered Cabinet level by the administration, OMB is not officially a Cabinet department.

Walter Q. Gresham held three different cabinet jobs under two presidents. He was secretary of state under Grover Cleveland and postmaster general and treasury secretary under Chester A. Arthur.

Hubert Wort was postmaster general under Warren G. Harding and interior secretary under both Harding and Calvin Coolidge.

Consumer Program Announced

A Model Consumer Education Program to help residents of public and subsidized housing in the Springfield- Chicopee-Holyoke area has been announced by Arless A. Spielman, director of the Cooperative Extension Service at the University of Massachusetts.

The project will be under the direction of Marjorie M. Merchant, professor of management and family economics, assisted by county home economists and other Extension Service teaching faculty.

The immediate objectives will be to improve the home management practices and the attitude of new tenants in low-income housing toward their community, and to increase consumer knowledge. The economic and social effectiveness of establishing consumer information centers within low-rent housing projects will be demonstrated.

The long-range objectives will be to help reduce the economic and social cost of low-income housing through improving the home management practices of tenants and effecting attitude changes among the tenants toward their total community.

Demonstrations will be conducted on how consumer education programs of the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service can be more effectively carried out with disadvantaged consumers in relation to their total environment, and how the para-professional, trained as a consumer educator, can play a valuable role in low-income housing programs.

Four out of five doctoral candidates in physics get assistantships or fellowships, a University of Massachusetts professor told the national meeting of the American Physical Society in Washington, D.C.

Dr. Robert B. Hallock of the UMass physics department presented a paper summarizing a survey of 160 physics departments with Ph. D. programs in which a 90 per cent response was obtained.

The survey indicated that of those receiving support, 13 per cent get fellowships, 44 per cent teaching assistantships and 43 per cent research assistantships.

UMass Insights

Beating Food Costs

"The High Price of Eating and How to Beat It" will be the subject of "UMass Insights" four-part, public service radio show for May.

Hosted and directed by Dr. John Naegele, Director of the University's Suburban Experiment Station in Waltham, "Insights" will discuss the causes of the recent price hikes in food, some possible solutions and the steps the consumer can take to shop wisely and take advantage of real specials in the food market.

State Agriculture Commissioner Nathan Chandler will lead off the series with a discussion of Massachusetts' agriculture and food production.

"UMass Insights", a weekly, half hour public service radio show, is produced by the Public Affairs Department of UMass with the kind technical assistance of Boston Radio stations WCOP and WRKO.

You can listen to "U—Mass Insights" on these Massachusetts Radio Stations . . .

Lose For A Purpose

By CHRIS FLETCHER

This is the beginning of the third week of that crazy happening "THE DIET MARATHON." Progress at this point has been wonderful. Calls have been coming in during the last week and many people, especially the men are approaching a loss of fifteen or more pounds. One person has lost ten pounds and is "worth $7.50 per pound." (that's $75 already!) Most of the girls have lost six to eight pounds. All the people who have called in their progress, have commented on the MARATHON. "This is the best thing UMass has done since I've been here," said one of the top contestants. Most of the seventy contestants enjoy the fact that while they are helping themselves in losing weight which they've wanted to be rid of for a long time, they are also helping such an important cause. Even some of the contestants did not know what barriers the mobility disadvantaged faced, until this contest made them aware of the problems.

*As has been said before, "this DIET—MARATHON serves a three-fold purpose. One, overweight people will lose some ugly pounds before the summer; two, it is expected to raise $2,000 for the UMass Architecturally Barrier Free Fund; and three, some ten thousand or more people will become aware of the problems faced by the handicapped."

So keep up the good work, contestants, and good luck in the next two weeks to come.

UMass Wins $225,000 Grant

The National Science Foundation has awarded a $225,000 grant to the UMass at Amherst to establish a Materials Research Laboratory, the first in the country to stress fundamental research in polymer materials.

The award was announced jointly today by UMass and three members of the Massachusetts Congressional delegation: Senator Edward W. Brooke and Reps. Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield and Edward P. Boland of Springfield.

The laboratory's basic role will be research on the properties of polymers—large-molecule compounds such as plastics and rubbers—and the application of this research to materials technology, both in the development of new materials and the improvement of the properties of existing materials.

Materials technology is the development of synthetics, composites, plastics, alloys, and other solid materials for manufacturing and fabrication. The National Science Foundation supports 12 Materials Research Laboratories at universities throughout the country. The UMass lab is the first addition in over a decade and the first of the group founded to work exclusively in polymer materials.

UMass Amherst has one of the largest academic polymer programs in the country. The pioneering Polymer Research Institute, founded in 1961 by Dr. Richard Stein, is internationally known for its research into the properties of polymers and the quality of its graduate programs. A polymer science and engineering program, begun in 1966, now enrolls over 60 graduate students and visiting scientists.

The MRL at UMass is a joint project of the Polymer Research Institute and the polymer science and engineering program, under the administration of the Graduate School. It will be located in the Graduate Research Center. Its co-directors are Dr. Frank E. Karasz, professor of polymer science and engineering, and Dr. Roger S. Porter, professor and head of the polymer science and engineering program. Karasz and Porter spent over a year in the development of the proposal that led to the MRL grant.

The materials laboratory will support research in chemistry, engineering, polymer science and other fields at UMass. It is slated to begin operations on June 15. The grant supports the UMass MRL for the first year and is subject to renewal annually.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cycle is such that partnership change, are transformed and may shatter. This is a testing period. What is to last will have to prove durable. Other relationships, situations will melt or flow away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stress independence, original approach. Deal with Leo. Find out what was wrong in past—be sure error is not repeated in future. Accent is on finding out what goes on behind some closed doors. You will comprehend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Older family member may be kicking up heels. Means be ready for surprise requests. What appears eccentric could be natural, if viewed with sense of humor. Refuse to be forced into impulsive action. Heed caution signals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be flexible. Highlight versatility. Sagittarian could figure prominently. Some of your desires are fulfilled—you find that friends are undergoing changes. One close to you could be considering a significant move.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your creative abilities are utilized. You overcome what appeared to be a major obstacle. Aquarius and Scorpio persons may be in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be ready for change, possible travel, a variety of experiences, including intensified relationships. Gemini could figure prominently. Money situation should be reviewed with one close to you, including mate or partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What occurs is quick. Nothing is apt to drag. Be ready for direct action. Don't attempt to block progress. Streamline your own procedures. Taurus individual could play key role.

Accent is on coming to terms with one who holds opposing views.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight diplomacy. Be aware of voice tone. Avoid shouting, chiding. You can win what you need. Forcing methods prove fruitless. Emphasis is on gaining access to privileged information. You learn—and gain through added knowledge.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Older individual offers benefit of experience. Be receptive. Throw aside false pride. Friends who make promises may not be in position to fulfill them. Relative could "spill the beans." Have alternative at hand.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can find more efficient means of distribution. People express interest in your ideas, concepts. There is greater demand for your product. Aries is likely to be in picture. Build on solid base.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trip may have to be postponed or route changed. Relatives tend to argue. Remain neutral. Be aware of your own needs, interests. Let others know you do intend to live your own life. Leo may be in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Learn by teaching—share knowledge. You can rise above the petty. Aquarian could make surprise appearance. Money situation is not stable. However, there is room for optimism. Situation is subject to favorable change.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent and original, somewhat self-centered and a natural show person. You seem able to communicate with the public and could be successful in dealing with women. August could be your most significant month of 1973.

Smith Netsters Volley Past UMass

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY and AVIS YUNI

The UMass women tennis players returned to the courts yesterday afternoon as they welcomed the Smith College tennis squad to the Boyden Courts. The Smith team took over from there, as they handed the Minutewomen their first defeat by a 7-2 count.

The netsters picked up two points with only one victory, the other point coming by default at the #1 doubles position. Betty Londergan was the only bright spot in an otherwise cloudy day as she took to the court at the #3 singles slot and bested Laura Klann 6-1, 2-6, 6-2.

The outstanding performance of the day was turned in by the premier athlete on the courts, Smith College's Betsy Hanson. Betsy turned away the challenge of Ronnie Sanders at #2 singles in two-set fashion 6-3, 6-2. Betsy's powerful serve led the way to victory.

At #1 singles UM's Diane Green fell to Katrina Voorhees 6-1, 6-3. This was the first match to be completed and set the trend for the day's play. Shortly after Katrina claimed victory, Muffie Trafton came in with more bad news for UMass. She was beaten at #4 singles by Chris Rany 6-0, 7-5.

At #6 Nancy Powell defeated Beth Perkins of UMass after Beth had gotten off to a strong start while taking the first set. The count on that one was 2-6, 7-6, 6-1.

Both of the other doubles teams fought hard-nosed battles before succumbing. Iris Sanehoff and Karen Wesley went down in heartbreaking style losing the match on a tie-breaker, 5-7, 6-7.

The loss dropped the Minutemwomen to 2-1 overall.

They began their season with two impressive victories, topping Keene State in their opener 6-1, and then breezing by Northeastern 5-0.

"I think they're an excellent team," said Sally Oglivie after their first two matches.

Many freshmen are on the squad according to Miss Oglivie. The 15 or 16 members of the team practice regularly and as one women betters herself she moves up the "ladder" into competition.

On Saturday, May 5th, the women will travel to Dean Junion College for a clash with Dean's tennis squad and then they will come home to the Boyden Courts to face Mount Holyoke on May 9th.

Women Trounce Keene State Softball Team

By STEVE CROWE

Outstanding pitching backed by a solid hitting attack gave the UMass women a 12-3 softball victory yesterday over their toughest opponent of the year, Keene State College.

The Staters, who competed in the College World Series in Omaha, Nebraska last year, were not quick enough on the swing to meet the blazing fastballs of UMass' Vickie Pagel and squeezed only six hits on the day.

On the other hand, UMass banged out 14 hits, 13 of them singles, as they caught on early to the windmill style of Keene's Frannie Addoriso.

After the first inning, it looked as though the local team was in for a long afternoon as the Keene Staters got 2 quick runs and then held the Minutewomen scoreless. But the home team came back with 2 in the second and after Keene State got 1 in the top of the third) 2 more the next inning to clinch the win, making it UMass 4, Keene State 3.

From then on it was all UMass.

Nine UMass batters went to the plate in the hectic fifth inning and five runs scored. Then in the sixth, they added 3 more runs.

Sue Brophy, Barb Doucet, and Karen Dolphin led the UMass hitting barrage with three hits apiece; Brophy (no relation to the Collegian's baseball wiz, Mike Brophy) had the only extra base hit of the day-a line drive double to centerfield over everyone's head.

Coach Carole Oglesby credited the victory to the "fine pitching (of Pagel) and getting so many runs early in the game."

The women are now 2-1 on the year. They lost to Springfield, 8-3 on April 23rd and trounced Westfield State, 15-5 on April 18.

"Our whole team is rounding into shape," said Oglesby, "Our hitting has always been our strong point, but now our defense is getting stronger and our pitching is coming along."

The team travels to AIC tomorrow, and Dean Junior College Saturday. Their next home game is May 11 against Springfield College.

JV Hitters Win 4-3

By JAY LUPOLD

Bill Tremblay's smash over the leftfielder's head in the bottom of the tenth inning, brought home John Seed with the winning run, giving the UMass J.V. baseball squad their sixth win of the season over Worcester Junior College Tuesday afternoon 4-3.

W. J. C. opened the scoring off starting pitcher Dave Mucciarone in the first inning when Brian Blackney walked, and came around on Calvin Smith's long triple.

Pitcher Mark Kline held UM at bay until the fifth inning when Jim Black, pinch-hitting for Mucciarone, led off with a double to right and advanced to third on an error. Julian Pina singled him in to even the score at 1-1.

Jim Witherall relieved Mucciarone in the sixth and struck out the sides in the sixth and seventh.

UM went ahead in their half of the seventh to score two runs. Mark Fontaine homered and Bill MacDonald followed with a triple, and he came in when WJC second baseman Tim Daly booted Witherall's grounder.

WJC wasn't to be denied however. Calvin Smith led off the eighth with a home run to decrease the deficit to one run. Mark Kline then walked and went to second on an error and came in to score to even things up again on Dave Babbit's single.

Neither team was able to do anything in the ninth so the game went into extra innings and the stage was set for Tremblay's winning hit.

Pitcher Jim Bedard, who came on in the tenth, got the win. He is not 4-0 on the year.

The win increased the J.V.'s seasonal mark to 6-3.

THIS IS the lacrosse equivalent of taking your man to the bridge (hoop) in basketball. Frank Garahan (21) was tormented and harrassed verbally on the preceding sequence of plays by the Amherst defense. He retaliated by asking for the ball and then decimating three Jeffs on his way to the net and a score.

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Yesterday, at Upper Boyden Field, the sun shone for four-hundred sun-worshipping lacrosse fans and for the UMass varsity lacrosse team. Garber's Gorillas outplayed the Amherst College squad to the score of 9-2.

The Gorillas did not waste any time in putting points on the scoreboard as Frank Garahan netted his first goal of the day after only thirteen seconds had elapsed. Hirsch Seidman won the faceoff and took off in quest of the Amherst net where he passed the ball to Garahan, who promptly shot it into the net.

Less than a minute later, Amherst made a scoring bid. However, goalie O. J. Rutledge made the save and then cleared the ball to defenseman John McCarthy, who rushed the length of the field and finished by passing to Garahan for the goal.

Garahan scored his third straight goal of the day at 3:32 of the initial period. This score was the result of some good passing by the UMass squad. The attackmen worked the ball around from Peter Conolly to Fred Michels and finally to Garahan.

The next UMass tally made the score 4-0 in their favor. Bruce Sibson collected a clearing pass from Gene Hardiman and sailed upfield past the Amherst defenders for an unassisted goal. That score was the final one of the opening quarter.

The second period was no different than the first as far as the scoring went. The scoresheet again belonged to Mass. The Gorillas took advantage of a fastbreak for their fifth goal. Hirsch Seidman carried the ball up to the restraining line and passed off to Pete Conolly who relayed the ball to Fred Michels for the score. The Michels - Conolly combination was successful again at 4:55 of the second stanza. This goal came after another fast break with Michels getting the goal and Conolly, the assist.

Just thirty seconds later, Michels scored his third consecutive goal when he stole the ball from the Amherst goaltender in front of the crease and put it by him at 5:25 of that quarter. That tally closed but the scoring in the first half with UMass leading, 7-0.

Garber's Gorillas jumped off to another fast start when the second half opened. Eighteen seconds into the third period, All-American midfielder Dwight Blomquist made a quick pass to Jack Moran who shot a slow, bouncing ball past the stunned Amherst goalie. Moran's goal, which somehow eluded the Jeff's netminder seemed to take about four seconds to bounce into the net.

Jim Dunbar of Amherst scored the Jeffs' only goals of the game in the third period when he scooped up two loose balls in front of the UMass net. His second goal came at 9:38 of the third quarter. Frank Garahan netted his fourth goal of the game and his thirty-first of the season just one second before the end of that period Garahan's goal proved to be the final score of the game as both goaltenders posted shutouts in the final period.

The Gorillas gave it their best effort in the first half of this game. They got great goaltending from O.J. Rutledge and the defensive corps of Rich Lally, John McCarthy, Billy Blaustein, and Russ Incorvia, who covered their men well and threw some fierce body checks. The attack and the midfield also had a hand in the defensive play because they controlled the ball so well.

"Seven From Heaven" Meet Springfield Today

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Everyone on the UMass tennis team knows how badly the Springfield coach wants to win today's match. Which is precisely why the Minutemen are planning, with the utmost of confidence, to devour this afternoon's hosts and up their dual match record to 7-1.

Traditionally, the dual matches played soon after the Yankee Conference Championships are difficult to get psyched for. Everyone awaits the New England tournament.

Coming down from their tension riddled Conference win are the "seven from heaven." In Springfield the Minutemen will be facing a 6-2 squad, a team that has handled the likes of M.I.T. Tufts, UConn and even Amherst with ease (they beat the latter 7-2). Their two losses came at the hands of Harvard (8-1) and Dartmouth (6-3) so the netmen should be in for a trying experience.

Mental preparation will be the key for UMass. During last weekend's conference, the team's "psych" was excellent. Much of this had to do with the extraordinary meshing of personalities.

Ted Donchue—First singles man Donahue holds a 4-5 mark having faced the toughest competition all season long. Donahue, a quiet and reserved youngster, advocates a "wait and see" philosophy, often called a pusher's game.

Robert Schpeiser—UMass' second singles man had recorded a 6-3 record thus far, having moved all the way from sixth to second position on the club. Said to function best under pressure, "I can't play well without it," Schpeiser is well known as the most agreeable of all his teammates.

Steve Ferber—Playing captain this year, Ferber is the only southpaw on the squad. Still sporting a two-handed backhand, Ferber boasts a blistering serve and an overpowering game. His erratic play is perhaps his downfall. The third singles man holds a mark of 8-1 thus far.

Gary Ney—At fourth position, Ney is 2-3 in singles. Also among those with the "big game" Ney is by far the hardest hitter on the team. Known never to use his hands while talking, Ney's trademark is the absence of accolades in his speech.

Don Douglas—Having compiled a 6-2 mark, Douglas, at fifth singles looks no more like an athlete than Dick Cavett. His loosey-goosey attitude out on the court is his weak point, as time and again Douglas is known to lose his concentration and relax during a match.

Fred Braley—At sixth this year, Braley has come far in his tree years at UMass. With an 8-1 record going into today's match. UMass' number six man is known for his extraordinary concentration on the court. Never one to let down after winning a set, Braley compensates for his nervous tendencies by never allowing his opponents to stay too close during a match.

Mike Philipp—The most nervous individual on the squad, Philipp is presently caught in the famous shuffle. Mike's strong point is his consistent serve, which has aided him in compiling a 4-1 record. But like Donahue, Mike plays a pusher's game. Add to this his tendency to tense under pressure and you realize why Mike's sitting it out in singles.

MONTREAL (AP) - Speedy Yvan Cournoyer scored a pair of goals Tuesday night, leading the Montreal Canadiens to a 4-1 victory over Chicago in the second game of their National Hockey League championship playoff series.

The victory gave the Canadiens a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven Stanley Cup series, which now moves to Chicago for game 3 Thursday night and Game 4 Sunday.

Sox Lose Again

BOSTON (AP) - Pinch runner Tom Grieve stole the winning run as Jeff Burroughs singled home his fourth run of the game with two out in the ninth inning to give the Texas Rangers a 7-6 American League victory over the Boston Red Sox Tuesday night.

Grieve, running for Rice Carty who drew a one-out walk off reliever Lynn McGlothen, swiped second as Mike Epstein struck out and scored when Burroughs lined a single to left field.

Back To Fenway Park

Abner Doubleday--rejoice. Your number 1 prodigal son is returning to the fold, and he expects that several million more will follow shortly.

Yes, Abner, I left the grand old game in October of 1967 after my beloved Boston Red Sox had somehow, miraculously, won the American League pennant. I had discovered that my great love for the Sox was not predicated on the game of baseball itself, but rather on the attainment of a seeemingly unattainable goal--a pennant for the Sox.

So I turned to hockey with its speed, contact, and pace more suited for the zip-zip-zip life of the sixties.

Hockey was great while it lasted, but the watering down of talent brought on by expansion forced hockey to lose much of its speed and contact and I grew tired of the zip-zip-zip life of the sixties.

So March, instead of bringing my adrenalin to a boil with the excitement of the stretch drive races and the promise of thrilling playoffs, brought a strange desire to relax, enjoy some sunshine, and feel a little wind in my face.

Goodbye Providence Civic Center. Goodbye TV 38, Hello Payne Park, winter home of the Chicago White Sox, situated in Sarasota, Florida.

Spring training games are dull, duller even than regular season games. Yet baseball's tradition, one thing the other sports don't have, reached out and grabbed me when, for the first time in my life I saw Willie Mays in person.

I'd heard how old he had gotten, and how badly he had slowed down, but none of it seemed true when he took two straight called strikes before drilling an apparent waste pitch on a straight line over the wooden fence in left field.

Willie helped me back on the road to recovery, but the crowning moment came two days later when Bill Melton popped a foul ball into the parking lot in back of the bleachers where I sat.

The little kids converged on the spot like hungry buzzards, but couldn't find the ball, which I had seen roll under the right front tire of a Plymouth.

So when the inning ended I went down to the Plymouth, crawled under, and got myself the first foul ball I'd ever had in 14 years of going to baseball games.

I left Florida as a baseball fan, an abrupt turn of events considering that I didn't ever bother to go to Fenway Park even once last season.

I listened to the game on opening day while driving back on Route 9 from Worcester and every time any one of the Sox would get a hit (there were plenty), I'd yell "We're gonna go all the way." So I feel like seeing the Sox again.

It has still been 21 months since I've seen the inside of Fenway Park, and I hope it hasn't changed.

I hope that when I do go I hear a little kid ask his father how far away the Citgo sign is.

I hope the hot dogs will still taste better there than anyplace else in the world.

I hope the planes with the absurd advertisements still fly over the ballpark.

I hope I wave when I think a TV camera is looking my way.

I hope the Prudential building is still there so I can look at it between pitches.

I hope I see some little kid who still worships Carl Yastrzemski.

I hope the Red Sox win.

UMass 9 Seek Revenge

By MIKE BROPHY

Coming off a victory over Southern Connecticut yesterday, Springfield College will be coming to Amherst today to play the Minutemen in an ECAC game. Springfield sports an 11-1 record on the season including a 6-5 decision over UMass earlier this spring. That loss was the first UMass had been handed since returning from California.

Bert Barker started the previous game for Springfield and lasted seven innings in which he allowed seven hits and three runs, two of which were earned. In that effort he also walked two and struck out two Minutemen before being lifted for a pinch hitter.

Barker is a junk ball pitcher who will throw everything at a batter including the kitchen sink. Coach Archie Allen feels that his fast ball will not have the UMass hitters fooled at all and that "UMass is one of, if not the, strongest hitting team in New England baseball this year." The hometown team's batting average is a remarkable .317 while the pitching has held the opponents batting to .224.

Barker, a senior southpaw, has the lowest ERA of the Chief pitching staff at 1.12 and hopes to fool the UMass hitters by mixing up his junk with faster pitches.

Coach Dick Bergquist plans to go with southpaw Tom White who looked like the White of years past in his latest relief stint of two innings. "I was very pleased with Tom's performance against Maine. He had his fastball moving around like it should."

White is 2-3 but leads the staff with three saves. In 42 innings on the mound he has struck out 52 batters and surrendered 38 base hits.

"If White can come on strong going down the stretch it will help the team immeasurably. Tom is a team leader and he does not have a bad stick either," said Bergquist.

While White will be doing the throwing for UMass, it will be the batters who will need to finish off Barker. It has been these batters who have hammered out 78 extra base hits. A good number of those base hits have contributed to the run production of UMass as they have scored a total of 179 . . . 142 of which were scored without the aid of enemy errors.

The Minutemen now stand at 16-6-1 and will be looking to improve that mark today and in the upcoming weekend action against Yankee Conference rival URI.

One Photographer Still Charged

A 'Severe Deprivation' Of Rights

(Editor's note: Following is the latest report on the arrests involving Wounded Knee, filed last night by Collegian reporter Nathan Gorenstein.)

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN
(Fort Collins, Colorado)

Calling the FBI arrests last Saturday of 28 people on route to Rosebud, South Dakota on anti-riot charges a "severe deprivation" of first-amendment rights, an ACLU counsel predicted Wednesday quick dismissal of all charges.

The case has been complicated, however, by the arrest of a newspaper reporter and photographer travelling with the 28 to cover AIM activities at the Rosebud Indian Reservation.

This reporter, who was arrested with eight other persons in Cheyenne, Wyoming, had charges dismissed by U. S. Attorney Richard Thomas. However, a photographer from the Colorado State University's newspaper is still charged under Title 18 of the U. S. Code of Justice, better known as the "Rap Brown Act".

This law is the same the Chicago 7 were prosecuted under. It prohibits persons from crossing state lines to aid and abet, or conspire to participate in, a riot. There has never been a conviction under this law.

The student newspaper, The Rocky Mountain Collegian, has retained a separate lawyer for photographer Rebecca Tucker, and according to Rocky Mountain Collegian editor Patrick Noel, may file counter charges against the government.

However, the Justice Department does not recognize members of collegiate newspapers as legitimate reporters, according to an aid of Congressman Jim Johnson (R-Colorado), whose office is investigating the arrests.

The 27 still charged were all released Monday by the Federal Government. Eight arrested in Cheyenne were released on personal recognizance, while 19 persons were arrested in Valentine, Nebraska were released on $2000 personal recognizance bonds.

May 16 is the date set for preliminary hearings for the 8 still charged from Cheyenne arrests. The hearing date has not yet been set for the Valentine 19.

Both groups were part of the caravan travelling to the Rosebud reservation to support AIM activities. A call for support was issued by AIM national director Vernon Bellacourt on the Friday before the arrests.

Seven of those arrested outside Cheyenne on Interstate 80 were travelling in a panel truck, while the two others were hitchhikers arrested after the driver who had picked them up was stopped by the Wyoming State Police. The two said they were arrested after they told police they were travelling in the vicinity of Wounded Knee. The driver was not detained.

ACLU Regional Councel Joseph N. de Raismes said the government would find it difficult to prove probable cause for the two arrests of the two Cheyenne hitchhikers and a third hitchhiker arrested with the Valentine group, who contends he was travelling to Canada.

De Raismes, who will be representing the two groups through their preliminary hearings, said there are many questionable facets to the arrest of the 28, some of which included:

the fact that only three of the nine held in Cheyenne were allowed to make phone calls.

--that testimony received from FBI interrogation of those arrested in Cheyenne was used as probable cause for the arrest of both groups.

The use of testimony from the interrogation to prove probable cause was

Budget Storms Over

By STEPHEN FINE

The Student Senate's stormiest budget meeting of the semester ended last night with an overall increase of $11.88 in the Student Activities Tax.

This increase however has been offset by a $10.50 decrease in the Campus Center fee. The overall activities tax on students for next semester will be $97.38, an increase of $1.38 from last year.

In other business the Senate:

—Created a Food Services Governing Board to make policy decisions regarding the University Food Services.

—Voted not to endorse the decision of the Parking and Transportation Council to hike parking fees.

—Voted to authorize the Senate Treasurer to study a self-supporting campus newspaper and campus radio station.

—Voted to transfer funds to the Program Council to sponsor a concert for Wounded Knee

The vote to pass the budget with the increased Student Activities Tax (SATF) came after an initial move by the Senate's Budget Committee to chop money from Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) to make the activities tax balance at the same fee as it was last year. This was formulated in the committee two nights ago, with the 42 RSO groups divided into priorities for cuts. The priority cuts ranged from 2% to 9%.

Paul Hamel, Senate Treasurer explained that small groups could sustain the biggest cuts, while groups like the Collegian, could not.

Collegian Editor-In-Chief disagreed in an address before the Senate saying that the paper could not sustain a $1600 budget cut. He added that he was fed up with Senate's budgeting process, and if the cut was passed the Collegian would cease to publish after next Friday.

This was followed in a motion by Senator Mike Gregory to move all of the groups that had been categorized into different percentage budget cuts, into the first category where no cuts at all existed.

Debate then arose over the $24,000 increase this would incur on the budget.

Paul Doran, Chairperson of the Budgets Committee said the Senate had a responsibility to their constituents to keep the SATF tax down as much as possible. He favored passage of the original proposal.

S.G.A. President Nick Apostola said that the poor job the Senate had done in cutting the budgets during the regular process should be made up now by the cutting of group's budgets.

Gregory suggested that the time to make cuts in budgets was when groups were present. "It's easy to cut while groups aren't here," he said.

When the vote came to move all budgets in the first category, it was passed on a role call vote.

On the next role call vote the $856,373 budget act was passed by a 2/3 vote of 38 in favor, 18 against, and one abstention.

Watergate:

Agnew Given More Domestic Duties

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has added Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to his domestic policy apparatus and assigned staff veterans to fill temporarily vacancies created by Watergate-related resignations.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Wednesday that Agnew, whose role within the administration had seemingly been reduced as part of Nixon's second-term reorganization, has been designated vice chairman of the Domestic Council.

Ziegler said this would give Agnew "a broadened role. . .in domestic policy formulation."

This came at a time when a potential rival for the Republican presidential nomination in 1976, Texan John B. Connolly was switching from the Democratic to Republican Party.

Agnew is not to be regarded as assuming the assignment of John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's assistant for domestic policy, Ziegler said. Ehrlichman, White House chief of staff, H.R. Bob Haldeman and presidential counsel John Dean III resigned Monday.

Ziegler said "the President has made no decisions as of now regarding the way the staff will operate" in the absence of Ehrlichman, Haldeman and Dean.

However, it was learned that the President outlined at a Cabinet meeting Tuesday a stop-gap plan for permitting a continuation of normal administration business pending a rebuilding of his top staff.

Domestic policy matters once handled by Ehrlichman now are being coordinated by Kenneth R. Cole Jr., the 35-year-old executive director of the Domestic Council that Nixon heads. Cole, who joined the administration in 1969, has held his present post since last December.

Handling longer-range scheduling for Nixon is David N. Parker, 33, a special assistant who joined the White House staff in January 1971.

At the Cabinet meeting, Nixon said that, at least for the present, interdepartmental and personnel matters should be taken up with the Office of Management and Budget, an arm of the executive office of the President.

At his Wednesday news briefing, Ziegler acknowledged that Nixon had expressed displeasure at the Cabinet meeting over a Tuesday Senate resolution urging him to seek Senate confirmation of a nominee from outside the executive branch to serve as a special prosecutor to take charge of the Watergate investigation.

The White House spokesman said Nixon felt the action, taken by voice vote with only five senators present, might be regarded as reflecting ill on "the responsibility and integrity" of Elliot L. Richardson, the President's nominee to be attorney general who already has taken over direction of federal inquiries into the Watergate burglary and subsequent cover-up.

The press secretary said the files are private presidential papers and are being guarded to make sure that they are examined by the resigned men or members of their staffs only under supervision designed to safeguard the documents.

Asked if the files would be available to federal investigators, Ziegler replied "of course not." Another White House source said investigators could have access if they had reason to believe they contained documents relevant to the Watergate investigation.

Ziegler was asked if the President was aware at the time that Ehrlichman already had told the FBI he had learned after the fact about a burglary at the office of a California psychiatrist who had treated Daniel Ellsberg, defendant in the Pentagon papers case and had found nothing to inform appropriate authorities about the felony.

Keep A Leash on Them Dogs!

By ED FOGARTY

Dogs beward! A more stringent dog restraining law has been passed by the Amherst Board of Selectmen effective through September 30.

The law is part of Chapter 140 of the General Laws of Massachusetts and is invoked each year at this time. The law carries with it a $5.00 fine for the first offense plus payment of board fees which usually amount to $.50 per day. The fine for the second offense is $25.00.

The maximum penalty under the law is death to the dog. However, the maximum penalty has never been invoked according to the Amherst Dog Officer Sgt. John Tuttle of the Amherst Police Department.

"The chief reason for the law is to protect property of people during the spring when many people have outside gardens," said Officer Tuttle.

Officer Tuttle said any dog picked up for unrestraint would be placed in the Amherst Dog Pound where the owner could pick it up.

As long as the dog is under the voice command of the owner or within the property of the owner the dog is considered under restraint. If a dog is causing damage, he will be picked up.

Officer Tuttle said that the UMass Dog Officer Robert Ryan would have to decide what policy to take at the UMass campus. Ryan was unavailable for comment.

Each of the apartment complexes determines its own policy as to dog restraint, continued Tuttle.

"If an apartment owner or renter calls up to complain then I go down to see what the problem is. If I don't receive a complaint I generally don't patrol the complex areas for dog law violations," said Tuttle.

A spokesman for Britanny Manor said they would continue their present policy of a leash law and approval of any pets at the complex.

Other apartment complexes indicated they would continue their present policy toward pets.

Hampshire College Dog Officer Candy Lowe said she is working on a more efficient law to get the owners of dogs to bear more responsibility for the actions of their pets.

"For example we have divided up the campus into five or six areas and each dog owner is expected to clean up those areas for dog fesces on a regular basis—each owner has clean-up once per month," said Ms. Lowe.

In addition, a maintenance man comes to the room of each dog owner before the end of the year to assess damages done by the dog.

Ms. Lowe said that after three complaints the dog goes to the pound, and if the dog attacks someone it is put permanently off campus.

"The response to the program has been pretty positive so far," said Ms. Lowe.

School Days: All You Want

By JOAN FASSNACHT

With the end of the semester and finals almost upon us, it's practically impossible to thing of more school. Yet preregistration forms for the 1973 Summer School Session are now available at the Registrar's Office.

Mrs. Bertha Auten of the Provost's Office said in an interview that "3500 to 4,000 students are expected to attend school here this summer. Most will be living off-campus. However, those students under 21 will still be required to live in the dormitories on Orchard Hill."

Despite rumors to the contrary, Mrs. Auten emphasized that there have been no budget cuts in the summer school program. "Although there will be no swing-shift this year, this does not constitute a cut--it will still be the same budget."

At this time, faculty appointments are being processed. The number of positions is estimated to be several hundred.

Tuition for Massachusetts residents will run $12.50 per credit. For non-residents, tuition will be $42.50 per credit.

Selected courses in the College of Arts and Sciences, Business, Engineering, Education, Forestry and Wildlife Management, Home Economics, Nursing, and Physical Education will be offered. Students may obtain a Summer Session Bulletin at the Registrar's Office, which contains a more complete listing of specific courses.

Registration day is June 25. Classes begin June 26 and run for eight weeks, until August 17.

Take A Walk And Park Your Car

By BILL BALLOU

There are plenty of vacant parking spots on campus for anyone who is willing to look a little and walk a lot. However, if you're unfortunate enough to be stuck with a sticker for one of the few lots that are usually full, finding a space for your car could drive you to drink.

This reporter spent Wednesday morning from 10:00 a.m. until 11:00 a.m. driving around to almost all the major parking areas on campus and found that spaces were particularly plentiful in periphery lots like V lot near the Stadium and M lot near the School of Education. Parking areas in the Northeast, Central, and Orchard Hill sections of campus were filled to capacity.

At 10:00 the area to the rear of Machmer, which is the closest to the Student Union had two vacant spaces, while the areas around Dickinson Hall had several each. The lot closest to the barns was only about two-thirds full.

Boyden lot was quite full in the part of the lot near Boyden building, but as you got closer to the entrance spaces became fairly plentiful.

6 Lot, the big lot situated between the Campus Center and Marston Hall also had plenty of vacancies in the area directly in front of Marston.

Area 14, which stretches along Governors Drive in the area down by the baseball field, was crammed full in the lot directly across from the Physical Plant, but the lots in the area across from the entrance to 6 Lot were nowhere near capacity.

M lot near the School of Education was full at its entrance, but as you got farther from the School spaces became plentiful. The very back of the lot, which is close to the Sylvan Area, was about three-fourths full.

The lot along Eastman Lane, which is apparently called "No Parking--Tow Zone" was filled with cars as was Thatcher Way.

The area of small lots and streets extending from North Pleasant Street, to the rear of Morrill, up by the Infirmary and past Van Meter and Butterfield was a disaster area.

This area is serviced mainly by a conglomeration of small and medium sized lots, streets, and lots in front of dorms which are used mainly for parking by Heads of Residence.

There were a multitude of illegally parked cars here and almost no spaces for anyone who wished to park legally.

O Lot, which is the interior lot at Orchard Hill, had several spaces, but they were all in "Staff Only" locations. E. Lot, which is between the dorms and East Pleasant Street, was filled almost to capacity but did have several Volkswagen-size spaces.

Lots 10-13, the large, well-lit lots on the opposite side of Massachusetts Avenue from Whitmore all were pretty much full. There were maybe 10 spaces in the unpaved area of 13 Lot closest to Phillips Street and five or so throughout 11 Lot.

1 Lot, the high priority lot next to Whitmore, didn't have anything resembling a parking space in it. The one space was in a handicapped zone.

8 Lot, which encompasses the Southwest horseshoe and the upper portion of F Lot, was full in the horseshoe but only partially full in F Lot. F Lot itself was packed fender to fender all the way to the very last row near the entrance to V Lot. That row was about one-fourth full.

V Lot, the Devil's Island of Student parking, was about one-fourth full, with all the cars as close to the front as they could be.

There are plenty of places to park on campus. However, instead of being evenly spaced between the various lots and areas they are concentrated in certain seemingly undesirable lots.

But, from this particular day's experience, it also seems that anyone who wants to take a few minutes to do a little hunting can find a spot.

Leisure is... More Than A Sandbox

By DAVID SPARLING

The Department of Leisure Studies and Services majors at UMass will play a major role in the direction of American society in the future, according to the Boston Parks and Recreation Commissioner.

Commissioner Joseph E. Curtis, speaking to approximately 50 UMass Leisure Studies majors and faculty members last night in the Student Union Council Chambers, told the audience that over $250 billion, or one third of the Gross National Product, was spent on leisure activities.

Curtis said that society must stop thinking of leisure studies as "sandbox and playground people" and recognize that they have "the power to influence lifestyle."

The major problems of recreation agencies now was the lack of public money. Curtis noted the abundance of money available in the 1960's in the form of federal, state and private grants.

Under President Nixon, Curtis said, "bootstrap lifting" is in vogue and there is little money available for unproved undertakings.

Curtis spoke of two areas available to recreation officials to where resources could be found; first, "neofunding"—approaching private corporations for money for recreational purposes that would allow the corporations to make money and add to their image.

"This is one logical way to cope with the dearth of public funds and the huge amount of private funds available."

The other approach would be to urge cooperation between recreation departments and existing organizations like Boys Club, YMCA, and the Boy Scouts.

The future of Leisure Studies majors is wide open, according to Curtis. In 1976 the United State's bicentennial celebration will be a high water mark of opportunity for Leisure Studies majors.

Curtis told the listeners that their futures might hypothetically be one of running a ski resort in Maine or a cabana club in Puerto Rico with a full time school, old-age housing and a staff of hundreds. He saw the salaries of such administrators going over $100,000 in five years.

With tongue only slightly in cheek, Curtis told the audience that it would be worth their while to visit Disneyworld in Florida— even before going to Europe.

On a more serious note, he said that Boston's recreation department had recently been credited by the Women in Government organization with significant strides in the employment of women. His department in general was said to be progressive in their attitudes toward the serious social issues of the day.

Curtis said after his speech that it was his decision to move Summerthing, (Boston's summertime cultural and educational program) out of Boston Common.

The Summertime organizers, while independent of Curtis' department, used Parks and Recreation resources, bothered area residents with concerts and also were ruining the Common's grass.

After looking over sights in Brighton, East Boston, the Fenway, and South Boston, the Summerthing organizers decided on Suffolk Downs.

Curtis commended the move, adding that while the racetrack would not benefit financially, it was an integration of recreation and private business.

Trustees Extend ROTC, Parking Plan Postponed

By BILL DENSMORE

The UMass trustees yesterday voted to re-extend credit to the campus Air Force and Army ROTC programs, and postponed a decision on the controversial new parking and transportation plan until after the end of the semester.

(Trustees also took "under advisement" a proposal to gradually open the UMass-Boston campus beginning in July. For story, see below.)

Acting in support of a faculty senate recommendation, and in opposition to a close student senate vote, the trustees yesterday reversed their own decision of a year ago and decided to grant academic credit to ROTC programs on this campus. In addition, they voted to extend for one more year their ban on recruiting on the Boston campus, a move initially voted May 10, 1972 shortly after the mining of Haiphong Harbor.

Trustees originally withdrew credit in 1972, also at the time of Nixon's Haiphong mining, primarily because of campus criticism that ROTC programs were not sufficient "academic" to be considered for credit as well as the feeling that the course's curriculum was not under the control of the university faculty.

At the time, some observers felt trustees made the no-credit decision on the basis of a philosophical opposition to the war, and the feeling that support of an ROTC program would be construed as support of the Vietnam War.

The Trustee vote was not unanimous—a highly unusual occurence since most difference of opinion between Trustees is worked out during "boiler room" sessions before the public meeting.

Amherst campus student trustee Nick Apostola voted against restoring credit because "that was the way the Senate wanted me to vote."

Trustee Robert M. Abrams voted against restoring credit, and issued the following statement:

"I feel that a liberal arts education should not be infused with the military on a formal basis. ROTC is responsible to an external authority, and the faculty senate, administration, and trustees, to my knowledge, in the final analysis do not have control of course content or instructors.

If ROTC wants to be considered as an extracurricular activity such as an athletic team, I think this is justifiable. But the inclusion of ROTC on a credit basis, in my opinion, detracts from the humanizing elements I think a University should stand for."

A decision on a new parking and transportation proposal for this campus that would institute graduated parking fees of from $5 to $125 depending on the location of the parking place, was postponed by Trustees.

Boston Campus: To Open Despite Opposition?

It looks as if the University will open the new Columbia Point campus (south of Boston in Dorchester), by September, despite continuing opposition from community groups and at least one state senator.

University Trustees took "under advisement" at a meeting in Amherst yesterday a report from Boston acting chancellor William L. Hamilton for a partial opening of the campus in September and employment of some staff as early as July 1.

The trustee report was requested at the Board's regular meeting in March, and is almost certain to be approved at its regular meeting in June.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Joseph Timilty (D—Boston) chairman of that body's Committee on Urban Affairs, yesterday predicted "a disaster for the Dorchester Community" if the Columbia Point campus is allowed to open without student housing plans.

And Ellen Feingold, director of research for a report done by the Columbia Point Task Force, said a student influx would destroy the Dorchester community. Low income residents simply cannot compete with students for housing, she said.

She added she is afraid the campus "will drive rents up and families out."

The two speakers were commenting on a bill to provide aid to families that would be displaced by students moving near the commuter-type campus.

The University administration in Boston has been faced with constant criticism from groups who say not enough thought has been given to transportation and housing problems created by the new campus.

The critics charge that the university will be a disruptive force and will force Dorchester residents of a low-income housing project right beside the monolithic buildings to leave their homes because of incoming higher-paying college students and professors.

The Trustee report proposed that students return to the present UMass-Boston campus at Park Square in September, "with the understanding that many activities will be occurring at Columbia Point throughout the fall semester at a steadily increasing pace."

After yesterday's trustee meeting, President Robert C. Wood said a gradual move would allow time to solve any community or transportation problems before they become severe, and at the same time would protect the $135 million new complex from vandalism as a consequence of not being used.

There will be only 1700 parking spaces available at the Columbia Point site so the University is hopeful that the 5900 students and 370 faculty members will take advantage of public transportation.

The MBTA at a meeting in Boston yesterday approved the use of ten of its buses by UMass-Boston for getting students to and from the campus, but funding for the buses, their exact route, or how fares will be collected was not discussed.

Southwest Sponsors Spring Festival

Environmental Concerns Class 390, under the direction of Ray Werbe, is sponsoring a festival with the theme of "Spring Renaissance" to be held on Saturday, May 5th in the Southwest Mall. The affair begins at 5:30, and the evening includes games, continuous raffles, free "flicks," an arts exhibition, live entertainment, and international food.

The two bands featured are J. R. Mitchell and the Chris Rhoades Band from Boston. A portable television is the major attraction of the raffle; other prizes consist of free dinners, movies, gift certificates, and products donated by the following patrons:

Berniers Package Store, Jeffery Amherst Bookshop and Music Shop, Chopping Block, Leather Shed, Matthews Shoe Store, Russels Liquor Store, Faces of the Earth, Cronopios Books, Knowles Flower Shop, Over the Rainbow, The New Record Shop, Shoe Bin, Mercantile, Butler and Almond, McDonalds, Hardees, The Stable, Hadley Car Wash, Campus Pizza, The Walk, The Lord Jeffrey Inn, Blue Wall, Top of the Campus.

Raffle tickets are on sale now at both the Berkshire and Hampshire Dining Commons and Kennedy Tower Lobby.

The aim of "Spring Renaissance" is to make the Southwest environment a more enjoyable place to live. The festival is a non-profit event; its success and continuance depends on the support of the Southwest residents.

called "just an attempt by the federal government to boost themselves into a finding of probable cause," according to de Raismes.

De Raismes added that, after the release of the Cheyenne 9, the Federal Government conceded that all nine defendants should have been allowed telephone calls.

The other 19 were arrested at a Nebraska Highway Patrol road block near Valentine, Nebraska, five miles from the S. Dakota border and the Rosebud Indian Reservation. According to one of the Valentine defendants, Nebraska police said they were asked by the FBI to check cars going to S. Dakota for arms and ammunition. None was found in any of the three vehicles that carried the 19, which were last of the group of seven cars to reach Valentine. The other four were permitted through the roadblock by the Highway Patrol.

It is not clear at this time why the last three vehicles, two vans and a passenger car, were stopped.

Both groups were held in county jails until Monday.

Conditions in the Cheyenne jail were called "miserable" by the nine persons held there and a U.S. attorney in Cheyenne suggested to this reporter that an account of conditions of the jail be included in any possible stories.

The seven men from the van were held in a six cell block, along with two other prisoners, one county and one federal. The cell block, approximately 20 feet long, was lit by one unshaded light bulb in the far corner of a hallway immediately in front of the cells.

The only ventilation was a dozen half-dollar size holes and a steel plate covering a window opposite the cells. Some of the arrested found cockroaches in their cells, and the hallway in front of the cells, while the cells themselves were generally filthy. The prisoners were given a mattress and one blanket and fed twice a day. Each 6-foot by 5-foot cell held two prisoners and contained a sink and toilet. The wall and ceiling of the cells were steel, the floor concrete.

Conditions in the Valentine jail were varied according to the nineteen. The eleven men in the group who were held separately, said conditions were reasonable, while the eight women said they were held in one small room. The only ventilation, they said, was provided by the holes in the cell door.

Two Men Charged With Murder Of Smith Woman

By CINDY GONET

Two Connecticut Valley men charged Monday with the murder of a Smith College sophmore had pleas of innocent entered in their behalf in Northampton District Court by Special Justice George N. Beauregard of Holyoke during arraignment proceedings.

Charged were: Henry J. Bys, Jr., 23, a Chicopee sanitation department worker who was ordered committed to Bridgewater State Hospital for 20 days observation and Allen Lee Bilodeau, 23, a Holyoke laborer who was declared able to stand trial.

Found half-submerged in the OxBow off Island Road by three fishermen at noon Saturday was the partially clothed body of 19 year old Monica B. Tims, a honors music major at Smith, city police said.

A bloodstained vehicle belonging to Bys was found parked 3 miles from the scene which police described as Lovers Lane.

Bys reported to Northampton Police at 12 a.m. Saturday that his car had been stolen around 9 p.m. Friday, police said.

An autopsy performed on Ms. Tims of Washburn House, Smith and Austin, Texas by state pathologist Dr. George Curtis Sunday revealed that death by multiple fractures of the skull was caused by a blunt instrument.

She also suffered scalp lacerations, multiple contusions and facial abrasions, said Dr. Thomas F. Corriden, medical examiner.

Dist. Atty. John M. Callahan said she had been "brutally beaten". Ms. Tims may have been hitchhiking, but police at this time are not willing to indicate what circumstances led to her death.

Campaign Charged With Failure To Report $200,000 Vesco Gift

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department accused the Nixon re-election campaign today of illegally failing to report a $200,000 cash contribution from financier Robert L. Vesco.

The three-count criminal information carries a maximum penalty of a $3,000 fine against the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President. No individuals were named.

The information alleged that the committee received a $200,000 contribution April 10, 1972, and failed to report the money or its donor. This is the date a representative of Vesco delivered a briefcase full of $100 bills, totaling $200,000, to Maurice Stans, the campaign finance chairman.

Although the money was delivered three days after a new law took effect requiring disclosure of large campaign donors, the Nixon committee had argued that the gift had been pledged earlier and so didn't legally have to be reported.

The Justice Department information didn't name Vesco, but the date and amount of the contribution coincide with the Vesco gift, which government auditors had previously listed as an apparent legal violation to Justice Department.

The money is believed to figure also in a New York grand jury's investigation of Vesco, who is being sued by the Securities and Exchange Commission for allegedly looting $224 million from four mutual funds. The Nixon campaign returned the money two months after the SEC filed suit.

The first count of today's charges said Stans failed to report receipt of the money to committee treasurer Hugh P. Sloan Jr., as required by the federal Election Campaign Act which took effect April 7, 1972. A second count accused the committee of failing to keep records of the donation and the name and occupation of the contributor.

The third count accused the committee, acting through Sloan, of failing to report the contribution to the Office of Federal Elections of the General Accounting Office.

Neither Stans nor Sloan was charged. The maximum penalty upon conviction on each count is $1,000.

Nixon Displeased At Senate Move

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has added Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to his domestic policy apparatus and assigned staff veterans to fill temporarily vacancies created by Watergate-related resignations.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Wednesday that Agnew, whose role within the administration had seemingly been reduced as part of Nixon's second-term reorganization, has been designated vice chairman of the Domestic Council.

Ziegler said this would give Agnew "a broadened role. . in domestic policy formulation."

This came at a time when a potential rival for the Republican presidential nomination in 1976, Texan John B. Connolly was switching from the Democratic to Republican Party.

Agnew is not to be regarded as assuming the assignments of John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's assistant for domestic policy. Ziegler said Ehrlichman, White House chief of staff, H.R. Bob Haldeman and presidential counsel John Dean III resigned Monday.

Ziegler said "the President has made no decisions as of now regarding the way the staff will operate" in the absence of Ehrlichman, Haldeman and Dean.

However, it was learned that the President outlined at a Cabinet meeting Tuesday a stop-gap plan for permitting a continuation of normal administration business pending a rebuilding of his top staff.

Domestic policy matters once handled by Ehrlichman now are being coordinated by Kenneth R. Cole Jr., the 39-year-old executive director of the Domestic Council that Nixon heads. Cole, who joined the administration in 1969, has held his present post since last December.

Handling longer-range scheduling for Nixon is David N. Parker, 33, a special assistant who joined the White House staff in January 1973.

The White House spokesman said Nixon felt the action taken by voice vote with only five senators present, might be regarded as reflecting ill on "the responsibility and integrity" of Elliot L. Richardson, the President's nominee to be attorney general who already has taken over direction of federal inquiries into the Watergate burglary and subsequent cover-up.

Bloody Clashes, More Strife

Flare-Up In Lebanon

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Lebanese soldiers fought with Palestinian guerrillas yesterday in bloody clashes that threatened to plunge the country into more inter-Arab civil strife.

An army communique reported 12 soldiers were killed and 40 were wounded. The guerrillas reported more than 100 casualties. Civilian dead and wounded also were believed to be numerous, particularly in a refugee camp that caught fire after shelling by heavy army cannons.

The fighting erupted about noon after a breakdown in negotiations for release of two Lebanese corporals captured Tuesday by the guerrillas. The two were turned over to a pro-Palestinian Lebanese politician after the afternoon-long battle, and by nightfall the gunfire died down.

The army commander-in-chief, Iskander Ghanem, ordered a curfew from 7:30 p.m. until dawn in Beirut and three other major Lebanese cities. He told his soldiers to shoot anyone ignoring roadblocks.

The crisis was the most serious between the guerrillas and the army since 1969, when repeated clashes left Lebanon without a government for several months until an agreement was signed in Cairo in January 1970.

About 300,000 Palestinians live in Lebanon, most of them in 15 refugee camps scattered through the country. The various guerrilla groups are estimated to have 15,000-25,000 members, many drawn from embittered youths who grew up in the camps amid recollections of how Israel's creation forced their families from Palestine.

Wednesday's fighting broke out near the Sabra-Shatila refugee camp on the road to the airport, which tanks and personnel carriers had surrounded early in the morning.

By late afternoon the clashes spread to the nearby Burg El-Barajneh and Jiar El-Bacha camps. More than 13,000 Palestinian live in these camps.

Clouds of black smoke ballooned over the Sabra camp after the army tanks fired into it with 75mm and 100mm cannons. Some of the shells appeared to be white phosphorous incendiaries.

Attacks Continue On Peace Copters

SAIGON (AP)—Two peace-keeping helicopters were fired at over Viet Cong-held territory Wednesday and American bombers pounded enemy troops in Cambodia for the ninth straight day.

The helicopter incident in northern South Vietnam generated charges that the Communists have failed to guarantee security and adequate working conditions for the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

The helicopters were not hit and there were no casualties.

But an exchange of civilian prisoners between the Saigon government and the Viet Cong was suspended and some members of the four-nation peace-keeping commission proposed closing down three field observation sites.

A Viet Cong communique on the helicopter incident acknowledged that Communist forces fired on an aircraft below the demilitarized zone in the same area that the two peacekeeping helicopters were shot at.

But the communique said the Viet Cong target was an American reconnaissance aircraft flying through a newly [illegible] set aside for the peacekeeping helicopters.

There was no immediate comment from U.S. officials, who have, however, acknowledged American reconnaissance flights over South Vietnam since the cease-fire went into effect Jan. 28.

The helicopters, each with two men American civilian crews under a commission contract with Air America, returned to Quang Tri City about five minutes after takeoff.

They were on their way to pick up one of two commission helicopters that was forced down west of Quang Tri city in a shooting incident April 1 and the survivors of that crash who had returned to unpack the wreckage. Nine persons were killed in the earlier crash.

The U.S. warplanes in Cambodia struck at an estimated 140 anti-government guerrillas entrenched on the east bank of the Mekong River opposite the capital, Phnom Penh. They made no reported progress in dislodging the Communists, some reported as close as three miles to the capital.

Nixon Tightens Price Controls

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon imposed tighter price controls on the nation's largest companies Wednesday in an attempt to restrain rising prices which the government now says will increase by 4 per cent this year.

Nixon said in a statement on the economy that prices probably will keep rising for "some months" although not at the rate of recent months.

The new controls require major companies with more than $250 million annual sales to notify the administration's Cost of Living Council 30 days in advance of plans to raise average prices more than 1.5 per cent above Jan. 10 levels.

The council can suspend the increase or take other action which it feels justified, the President said. If it does not act against the increases, they can take effect at the end of the 30-day period.

Nixon's statement also said that the nation's largest firms will be asked for detailed reports on price changes since the beginning of the Phase 3 anti-inflation program in January and that the council "may order reduction of increases that have exceeded the standards."

But while the administration's measures sounded tough, Treasury Secretary George P. Schultz, who announced the actions at the White House, indicated their immediate impact might not be very significant.

He said the price performance for most major firms during Phase 3 has been "quite good" and that the new anti-inflation steps are "an insurance policy against the future."

The President had bad news for consumers, saying inflation has not yet run its course and "price increases will probably be higher than we would like for some months."

The President announced four new steps under the Phase 3 anti-inflation program:

—The Cost of Living Council will obtain reports on price changes made by the country's largest firms since the beginning of Phase 3 "so that it may order reduction of increases that have exceeded the standards."

—If a major firm intends to raise its average prices more than 1.5 per cent above the Jan. 10 authorized level, it must notify the Cost of Living Council 30 days in advance.

—Firms not exceeding the 1.5 per cent limit still will be required to report their actions quarterly so that their conformity to price increase standards may be checked.

—"Additional resources will be assigned to insure that these strengthened efforts are carried out fairly and effectively."

The requirement that big corporations must get approval for price increases above 1.5 per cent is similar to Phase 2 regulations for the so-called Tier I companies.

The Phase 2 prenotification requirement, as the procedure is called, stipulated that so-called Tier I companies, which were defined as companies, with $100 million or more in annual sales, had to get approval of the Cost of Living Council for increases in prices.

Prenotification requirements were maintained for the food industry in Phase 3, but the definition for Tier I companies was raised to $250 million. The requirement was re-imposed after the start of Phase 3 on the oil industry, also for firms with $250 million in revenue or more, for price increases exceeding 1.5 per cent of the level on Jan. .1.

Mass. House Repeals Racial Imbalance Act

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts House, after a long and spirited debate, Wednesday voted 131 to 97 to repeal the nation's only racial imbalance act.

The victory for opponents of the 1965 law which mandates equal numbers of minority and white students in the state's schools, was a surprise to many of its supporters who had regularly beaten back repeal attempts during the last eight years. If the vote stands up in reconsideration and in the Senate, the measure could face a veto from Gov. Francis Sargent.

All through the battle, the galleries were jammed with partisans. Several hundred persons had demonstrated earlier in the day. A roar of approval went up when the roll call results were posted.

Twenty six representatives participated in the debate. Five black representatives from Boston, unanimously in opposition to repeal, unsuccessfully attempted to head off a showdown by forcing a vote on a pending bill to modify the imbalance statute.

The imbalance law declares that a school with an enrollment in excess of 50 per cent non-white is racially imbalanced and requires school committees to correct the racial mix. Both sides conceded that the number of "imbalanced" schools in Boston has nearly doubled since the law was enacted.

A signal of the impending vote came when Rep. Harrison Chadwick, R-Winchester, a past supporter announced he had "reluctantly" reversed his position. "I have come" Chadwick said, "to the slow, painful and sorrowful conclusion that the law is a failure."

That was the theme for those seeking repeal: That the law has been ineffective. The other side agreed that the law has not worked well but blamed administrators and not the statute for the situation.

The bill automatically goes back to the House Ways and Means Committee. It was not known when the next floor vote would come.

Connally Switches To GOP

Goal: White House? 'Solutions In The Middle'

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) - Since Lyndon B. Johnson's death, John B. Connolly has straddled Texas politics like a rich range boss surveying a limitless demain.

An old friend and political partner of Johnson and equally a confidant of President Nixon, Connally according to friends, has [illegible] political ambitions before his president at the United States.

Despite his shortcomings, his [illegible] Wednesday from the Democratic to Republican party appears the beginning of Texas millionaire Connally's big move.

"I seek no office, political or appointive," he said tersely, but the Texan may a quest of the presidency outside.

Friend of the White House would say a political career that began when Connally was a student at the university of Texas in the late [illegible].

Associates say Connally believes that race will be a central social situation if he is serious about wanting to occupy the White House.

Connally's politically astute [illegible] has outlined in 1962 when he shied away from national [illegible] policies in leading Texas Gov. Price Daniel, Atty. Gen. Will Wilson and a Kennedy liberal, Jim Wright, for governor. Even then, Yarborough returned to Connally as a Republican.

As governor, Connally tailored through as his promise to try to put Texas colleges on a par with the quality schools across the nation.

His support of higher faculty salaries helped him chip support from Texas' liberal blec, and his objections to the increasing power of the federal government kept conservatives on his side.

His emergence as a prominent national figure was the result [illegible] President Kennedy was shot down in Dallas aboard and Connally was wounded. His popularity, gained by the successful reaction to Kennedy's death, soared higher than any other Texas politician.

Connally became liberal early in his second term as governor, in 1966, and he ran for a third term only after his supporters begged him.

Mentioned as a Democratic vice presidential candidate in 1968, he became angry at Hubert Humphrey of the Chicago convention because he thought the Minnesota liberal owe he won a purported pledge to support Texas on the unit rule. But he remained in the closing days to campaign for Humphrey against Nixon. Nixon wooing Connally with filling the Texas vote for Humphrey.

Some hope Connally's sharp division with the Democratic party in the 1968 national convention where the Texas delegation, associated with Johnson at the height of the anti-Vietnam sentiment, was especially sound.

HOUSTON, TEX. (AP) - John B. Connally, friend and advisor to three presidents, formally levitched from the Democratic to the Republican party Wednesday. But he skillfully maneuvered around speculation he wants to be a candidate for president in 1976.

"I seek no office, political or appointive," said Connally, adding the [illegible] White House or Cabinet vacancies with President Nixon.

"I must say that I don't want to go to the point of going up there [illegible] Washington again," he said, "a farmer's term out of there long enough to earn an.

Connally, 56, said the Democratic party he had supported all his life "has moved so far left that it has left the majority of Americans who occupy the great middle ground of political thought in this country."

He said he found middle ground that we're going to find the solutions to most of the problems that we have."

There had been speculation about a possible Democratic presidential nomination for the former Texas governor even after he served some 18 months as Nixon's secretary of the treasury.

The speculation switched to the Republican party when he took the reigns of the Democratic for Nixon [illegible].

A protege of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, Connally served as secretary of the Navy under the late President John F. Kennedy. He was governor of Texas when Kennedy was shot in Dallas. He was wounded while riding with Kennedy in the presidential car.

Despite a denial that he seeks an office, Connally was personally questioned about his plans for 1976.

Connally called the Watergate affair a "sordid mess" but said there had been no pressure for him to make his party switch now.

"It was a silly, stupid, illegal act performed by individuals. The Republican party didn't do it. One of the things that needs to be put into perspective is that the acts of individuals ought not to be attributed to the mass of the members that belong to the party."

Connally, now a senior partner in one of Houston's largest law firms, said, I feel very strongly about Watergate.

McGovern, 'Watergate Not Typical'

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George McGovern Wednesday accused President Nixon of implying that the Watergate case is typical of American politics and called it the worst campaign scandal in modern times.

"The Watergate scandal is not, as the President implied, typical of the political process," McGovern told the American Society of Newspaper editors. "Our politics is better than that."

"And Watergate is worse than the tactics of any national campaign in my memory or modern times," last year's Democratic presidential nominee said. "What was wrong with Watergate was not just that the President's associates got caught, but what they did."

"The standard of conduct set by the Committee to Re-Elect the President was simply unprecedented," McGovern, D-S.D., said.

"I have no doubt that the ethical standards of American politics can be improved," McGovern added. "But we must wonder about Mr. Nixon's reference to 'campaign excesses that have occurred on all sides.'

"I emphatically reject the notion that I or my colleagues or my party in the presidential election condoned or would have countenanced activities of a criminal nature."

Earlier, J. Edward Murray, associate editor of the Detroit Free Press and president of ASNE, said that Watergate "looks like President Nixon's Waterloo in a long war with the free press."

Murray said it was persistent investigative reporting which broke the Watergate case despite resistance from the administration.

McGovern called on the country to help the President "restore fully the credibility and capacity of the government he leads."

"These are difficult days for President Nixon," McGovern said. "He is the elected leader of the nation, and he is struggling to restore his leadership. We must help him for the sake of the office he holds."

McGovern said there is no direct evidence to implicate Nixon in the planning of political espionage, sabotage and subsequent coverup. And he said he believes Nixon's denial of involvement.

McGovern also said Watergate should not be held 'against Republican candidates running for office next year.

Freedom Of Info Tested

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secrecy flourishes in executive branch of government despite a seven-year-old Freedom of Information law, a House subcommittee was told Wednesday.

A panel of newspapermen said the law is such a cumbersome and expensive weapon in the anti-secrecy fight that the press often chooses not to use it.

They endorsed proposed amendments designed to speed and expand access to government records.

But a former president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors said the problem lies as much with the public as with the law.

"The public tends to accept government secrecy as good. That is the problem," said Herbert Brucker of Windsor, Vt., former editor of the Hartford, Conn., Courant.

The executive branch, especially the White House, was the prime target of complaints but Congress came in for criticism as well.

"What we have is total secrecy at the White House," Clark Mollenhoff, Washington bureau chief of the Des Moines Register-Tribune, told a Government Information subcommittee.

Subcommittee chairman William S. Moorhead, D-Pa., suggested that most newsmen have allowed the law to languish in disuse. "If you could use it a few times, even though it's expensive, I think it would be very beneficial to do so," he said.

Richard Smyser, editor of the Oak Ridger in Oak Ridge, Tenn., and vice president of The Associated Press Managing Editors, said many editors cite the expense of time and money for lengthy court proceedings as reasons for their reluctance to employ the law. But he said the more existence of the law has served lift some secrecy lids: "It has put out some fires before they get too big."

Ireland: New Flareup

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland (AP) - Two Roman Catholic churches and a school were blasted by explosions and a man was shot to death yesterday amid a fresh upsurge in Northern Ireland's sectarian warfare.

Four bombings hit this predominantly Catholic city, the second biggest in the province.

Late Wednesday, Protestants and Catholics alike were out in the streets cleaning up the rubble from the explosions. There were no casualties.

The body of an unidentified man was found on the outskirts of Belfast.

He had been shot in the head, the usual method of killing in the silent clandestine struggle between the province's Protestant and Catholic communities.

He was the 780th known victim of almost four years of violence in Norther Ireland and the 99th slain so far this year.

12 Arrested At BU Demonstration

BOSTON (AP) - Police arrested 12 persons after a demonstration marked by some egg throwing outside the Boston University administration building where a Marine Corps recruiter was conducting interviews.

One student had a shirt ripped off his back as he pushed his way into the building, police said.

Most of the arrests were made as a crowd of demonstrators headed for a patrol wagon in an apparent attempt to free one person already in custody.

It marked the third attempt by the Marine recruiter, Capt. Michael Collier, to hold interviews at BU. He managed nine interviews after the protest was broken up.

Riot-equipped city police stood by at nearby Fenway Park but did not move in until Chief Paul Bates of the BU campus police asked for help.

Those arrested, four of them women, were charged either with assault and battery on a police officer or being disorderly.

The university estimated the number of demonstrators at "about 200," but added in a statement that many "were not students at the university." It said that of the 12 arrested, nine were BU students.

Daniel J. Finn, BU vice president for operations, who is in charge of security, commended the Boston police "for their disciplined response to a difficult situation."

Robert S. Weiner

P-10 To Discuss Watergate Affair

Robert S. Weiner, a prominent staff memeber of the Democratic National Committee during the 1972 Presidential campaign, and John D. Lawlor, Jr., who was a delegate to the 1972 Democratic National Convention in Miami, will address the Political Campaigns Seminar in Project 10 tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Weiner, a 1969 graduate of Oberlin College in Ohio, has worked in a number of campaigns. He canvassed for mayoral candidate Carl Stokes in Cleveland during the 1967 primary and general election. In 1968 he was a member of the Don Pease for State Representative Committee in Oberlin, Ohio. In 1970, he served as Western Massachusetts student coordinator for Senator Edward Kennedy's re-election campaign. In 1971, Weiner was Hampshire County coordinator for Massachusetts Youth Voter Participation. He was an early supporter of Senator George McGovern's bid for the Presidency in 1972. Weiner is a member of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee and an elected Amherst Town Meeting Member. He is presently a candidate for an M.A. at UMass in Recent American Political History.

Lawlor, who holds a B.A. in history from St. Michael's College in Vermont and an M.A. from UMass, has been active in Democratic politics for more than 20 years. He supported Adlai Stevenson for President in 1952 and again in 1956. He backed John F. Kennedy's Presidential bid in 1960, and was an early supporter of Robert F. Kennedy's Presidential candidacy in 1967-68. Lawlor was the first elected offical in Hampshire County to announce publicly his endorsement of Senator George McGovern's Presidential candidacy in 1971. Lawlor is a member of the Northampton City Charter Commission and the Ward 6 Democratic City Committee in Northampton. He is a member of some two-dozen community and civic organizations. Lawlor presently teaches history at Hopkins Academy in Hadley.

Both speakers tonight will offer their perspectives on the Watergate scandal and its effect on future Presidential campaigns in the United States.

Tonight's presentation is the last in a series of appearances by local political figures for the benefit of Seminar participants.

Previous speakers have included peace activists Henry Bubar and Frances Crowe, artist-historian John Gnatek, Amherst selectman candidate George Scheurer, and State Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst).

Old Ironsides May Grace New Bedford Waters

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP)- The city of New Bedford has offered the USS Constitution a home if the 176-year-old ship is to be moved from the Boston Naval Shipyard.

Mayor John A. Markey has written Gov. Francis W. Sargent asking him "to do whatever is possible to have the port of New Bedford considered by the United States Navy as a port of docking" for the 44-gun frigate.

Markey expressed concern about reports that the ship, known as Old Ironsides, might be moved to another state from its berth in Boston Harbor after the closing of the shipyard.

Philosophy Dept. Releases Correction

A course correction is announced for Fall 1973 classes. Prof. Ann Ferguson Brentlinger will be giving Philosophy 242 and Philosophy 290A as one course, under the course number Philosophy 290A. The accurate description of the course content will be that in the Course Description Book now listed as Philosophy 242. The course will not meet MWF at 9:05 A.M. as originally scheduled, but will meet instead MWF at 2:30 P.M. in Webster Main Lounge on Orchard Hill.

The course will be an examination of the connection between key American philosophical ideas and values and the socio-economic realities of the time, in particular the role of women. It will be taught from a feminist perspective and will involve the use of two or three resource people in a teaching collective. It is open to everyone, but not recommended for freshmen. There is the possible option of doing additional work for the course for credits in independent study on permission of the instructor. Those who wish to register for this course should sign up for Phil. 290A now or at Course Change day in the Fall.

Women In New England

Age Is Wisdom

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

SHEFFIELD, Mass. (AP)—A 63-year-old woman psychologist is teaching the "now" generation all about the birds and the bees.

Dr. Eleanor Hamilton, a widow and mother of four, has been instructing a series of sex-counseling workshops which started in January at the Hamilton School.

Dr. Hamilton and her psychologist husband, the late A. E. Hamilton, founded the school 40 years ago.

Dr. Hamilton says the school is answering needs that would otherwise go unmet.

First, it serves as a school for children who are well-adjusted and whose parents want them to stay that way. In the summer the children can attend a camp on the school grounds.

The school also serves as a center for guiding a family through its emotional problems and as a place where couples can receive marriage and sex counseling. Dr. Hamilton, an Oregon native who graduated from the University of Oregon and received her doctorate in psychology from Columbia University, caused a mild flurry here three years ago when she told the Pittsfield Area Council of Churches that she advocates pre-marital sex.

She says she has had no trouble getting men to accept sex guidance from her.

"Men will come of their own accord and bring their wives or their girlfriends," she explained. "Men want very much to give women a good sex life and are concerned if they don't."

Dr. Hamilton says that when she was a girl her generation was "very liberal, but it was still considered a virtue to be a virgin."

Today, she said, "We are suspicious of a 24-year-old girl who has reached that age without having sex."

"People want to marry a healthy sexual person," she said. "Men today are very worried, not flattered, if their fiancees have not had any sex life.

Dr. Hamilton said the common range of sex problems she has encountered run from women who cannot achieve orgasm to premature ejaculation or impotence in men.

She said another common problem is one partner's feeling that the other person's sexual preferences are perverse.

When necessary, she said, she sends people for medical checkups, or recommends psychological counseling.

Sometimes, she said, she teaches people exercises, including the right way to breathe during sexual relations.

Jamal Killing Termed Execution By Police

BOSTON (AP) - Police said Wednesday the shooting death of Hakim A. Jamal, international president of the Malcolm X Foundation, "appears to be an execution," and Jamal's white wife, Hane, said her husband was killed by "racists."

Jamal, 42, was shot to death Tuesday night in his Roxbury section apartment, while Hane and three friends looked on. Four men burst through the door and fired a barrage of automatic weapon and rifle bullets into him as he rose from an armchair.

William Johnson Jr., 23, Enfrid Brown Jr., 23, and John Clinksdale, 25, all of the city's Mattapan section, pleaded innocent in Suffolk Superior Court Wednesday to murder charges in connection with the shooting. They were held without bail and their cases continued to May 17.

Complaints against two other men booked on murder charges were denied.

One of the persons present when Jamal was shot, Kidogo A. Jamal no relation to the dead man, refused to identify the killers but said, "Of course I knew them. They dined at my table, slept on my floor."

Neither Kidogo Jamal nor Jamal's widow would elaborate or provide specifics on a possible motive for the murder.

Hane Jamal said her husband of four months was killed by black "racists. Men who to his face called him brother."

"We pray that people all over the world will learn from this wise and beautiful man's death what they refused to learn from his life," she said.

Homicide Dt. Sgt Robert Hudson said the shooting was apparently an "execution" by other blacks.

He said the men charged with the murder described themselves as members of a group called De Mau Mau, which he said originated from Chicago. He could offer no further explanation or description of the group.

The Dumb Waiter, by Harold Pinter, will be presented May 3, 4 and 5 in Hampden Dining Commons. The play is sponsored by the Southwest Assembly and directed by Peter Ryan.

Sarge And Plates

See My Smilin' Face

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Every Massachusetts resident who licenses an automobile will receive a picture of Gov. Francis W. Sargent in the mail between now and election time next year.

It will cost the state about $46,000 to provide 600,000 envelopes bearing the pictures of Sargent and Registrar of Motor Vehicles David J. Lucey. The envelopes will be used to mail out license plates.

The pre-election years coincide with the registry's heaviest period of business. With license plates good for five years, the registry will not have a major mailing of plates until 1978—another election year.

On "off years" such as 1972, the registry mails out some 30,000 plates.

The back of each new envelope shows a black and white photo of Sargent and Lucey, a replica of their signatures and their respective titles.

The photos are an innovation this year. Previously the envelopes included only a highway safety message and the registrar's name.

According to a registry spokesman the envelopes cost $77 per thousand, but a lower bid of $67 per thousand already has been received for the next batch to be ordered.

The purchase does not go through the registry but has in the past been made by the state prison where the plates were being made. The bill is paid out of the highway fund.

The only bidder on the contract last time was Massachusetts Envelope Co.

South Braced For More Rain

By MIKE DUFFY
Associated Press Writer

Heavy new rainfalls are expected to bring another series of crests to northern sections of the flood-swollen Mississippi River. Southern areas are braced for the onslaught of high waters already headed down the river.

Almost two months of high waters has shut down the upper Mississippi to commercial traffic, flooded an estimated 11 million acres in seven states and caused some $322 million in damages, not counting future losses to farmers unable to plant their crops.

Eleven flood-related deaths have been reported, and an estimated 35,000 persons are homeless in Wisconsin, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Illinois and Missouri were both drenched with thunderstorms, and the National Weather Service Wednesday said preliminary reports indicate new crests can be expected along the Missouri and Mississippi rivers within coming days.

The bad weather also brought gusting winds and waves, and a Corps of Engineers spokesman said it was "genuinely concerned" about wind erosion damage to the already battered levees.

The Mississippi has been above flood stage for 53 days at St. Louis and the new rains are almost certain to keep the river above flood stage beyond the 58-day record set in 1844.

The latest of three crests this spring passed St. Louis on Saturday at an historic record of 43.3 feet. The river had been falling since then as the crest traveled downstream, but officials said Wednesday the new rains had the river on the rise once again northward near Rock Island, Ill.

The new crests, however, were not expected to approach the record levels of last week.

The Weather Service said six inches of rain which fell in Iowa and two inches in northeastern Missouri "will definitely affect the river situation." More than two inches of rain were also reported in Southern Illinois.

The crest was not expected to reach Louisiana and Mississippi for more than a week, but there was concern there too about the weather.

Forecasters predicted three more inches of rain for Arkansas and north Louisiana.

Fund-Raising Meeting To Support Wounded Knee

There will be an important fund-raising meeting of the Committee to Support Wounded Knee tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Council Chambers, SU. The situation remains grave at the South Dakota Reservation and the need for money is critical. Members of the Oglala Sioux tribe, members of American Indian Movement and their supporters face an ongoing need of food and medical supplies if they are going to continue the occupation.

Here, at UMass, as part of the effort to support the Wounded Knee occupation, a massive fund-raising, canvassing drive is being organized. Canvassers are needed to work in all the Residence areas of campus; they will be supplied with all necessary information and leaflets. If you can help, in any way, with this fund-raising you are urged to come to tonight's meeting. If you would like to help, but cannot attend the meeting, please call the Draft Counseling Office (545-0813) days, or Maureen (546-8429) anytime, leaving your name and phone number. We will get back to you.

Postponed

Yesterday's trustee decision to postpone until May 25th a final vote on a new parking proposal is too late for nearly all the students who will have finished finals and won't be able to respond to a decision—whatever it may be.

But the postponement was necessary, because it allows added time to give the entire community—non-professional staff, students, faculty and administrators—a chance to really toss around the merits of a new parking system through the faculty and student senates, their appropriate bargaining unit and through conversations with administrators, who have pledged to be receptive.

Every campus power bloc was represented on the Parking and Transportation Council which recommended a plan after a year of study. But the two campus employee unions removed their representatives from the Committee last fall because of a personality clash with a Whitmore administrator.

Nonetheless, the Collegian feels that the 2,000 low-and moderately-paid, truly hard working and dedicated employees of this University are right in claiming that increased fees under consideration may not produce measurable benefits. But we also feel something has to be done about the present situation.

Therefore, everyone who is concerned about getting from one place to another on this clogged campus should vigorously and fully discuss any new plans—thus taking advantage of the valuable time the Trustees have allowed.

'I WOULD LIKE TO TALK TO YOU TONIGHT ON THE WATERGATE AFFAIR...'

I have seldom had as much cause to be disgusted with a group of people whose political views correspond closely to mine as I now am with the leftovers of the radical left movements of the late 60's at UMass. In the last couple of months I have seen these groups, especially the Young Socialist Alliance, The Young Worker's Liberation League, The Poverty Committee, and the Committee to Support Wounded Knee, pull off some really inane things.

First of all is the attitude of the people involved. These are the people who walk around campus telling everyone how oppressed they are and how the media distort the truth and are one sided. But these very same people come into the Collegian office and tell the Executive Editor that Bob Estelle's editorial columns (Estelle is a member of the John Birch Society) should be excluded from the pages of the Collegian because Bob Estelle is "dangerous."

Well, I have some news for them. Bob Estelle thinks THEY are dangerous, too, but at least he acknowledges the fact that they have as much right as he to speak. While I certainly am a lot further from Bob Estelle idologically than I am from them, I can say most certainly that I have a hell of a lot more respect for him than I ever will for them. It would give me great pleasure to exclude them from the paper because of their views toward other people's rights, but I am not a hypocritical fascist draping myself in the colors of "the people," as they most certainly are.

Another thing that really gets me about this gang is their attitude toward what they constantly refer to as "the struggle" (to be said with heads bowed reverently). "The struggle" is the great holy war of the Left-overs, and it goes everywhere from the battlefields of Vietnam to the plains at Wounded Knee.

While these battles are certainly instrumental in the lives of the people fighting them, the input that the Left-overs have in it borders on the absurd. For instance, a group of UMass Left-overs went out to South Dakota about two weeks ago to possibly help the people occupying Wounded Knee by bringing them food (this cannot be accomplished without running a federal blockade). The Collegian sent a reporter out there to cover it. Last Saturday he was busted by the FBI at the Colorado-Wyoming state line and charged with conspiracy and crossing state lines to incite a riot. While he's something of a hero among the Left-overs, the incident points up the stupidity of defiantly walking up to Uncle Sam's cannon armed with a pop gun. If they really want to fight for something, it's going to be damn near impossible to do from a jail cell. They ought to wise up and start raising people's consciousness. The real battle is there.

Which leads me to my final point. The Left-overs are constantly talking about the revolution in the U.S. This is a glorious event where the "people" will rise up and crush their oppressors. I have some news for the Left-overs. If the "people" in the U.S. of A are faced with a disturbance, they'll rise up and liberate themselves from the Left-over brats in the biggest right wing backlash since the Greek colonels got off their cans and decided to get rid of King Constantine.

At which point the Left-overs will come to the realization that their revolution was revolting to those who they thought were their friends. Where will they find the "people" then?

Watergate Woes

Watergate. A word that makes Republicans cringe and Democrats drool like Pavlov's pooch. The self-appointed oracles are ascribing to the scandal the title of "seventh crisis," and are bucking to see that this one has a more devastating effect on Nixon than the first six.

To the liberals, and other perennial Nixon detractors, the Watergate controversy has become a blessing from heaven. Failing miserably in their attempts to remove Nixon by means of the Democratic Process, they are now hoping to neutralize him by subverting the credibility of the office of the Presidency. They are right in assuming that without the confidence and trust of the American people, Nixon cannot serve effectively as President.

Nobody can say that the President's credibility hasn't been tarnished. But the liberals are dead wrong if they think that the bugging incident itself is the cause of the loss of confidence in the President.

When the news of the break-in at the Democratic Headquarters first hit the front pages, the opposition exploited the issue for every cent it was worth. They had hoped that the news of the break-in would substantiate their charges that the Nixon Administration has been secretly conspiring to impose a 1984-style of totalitarianism on the American people. Unfortunately for them, the tactic didn't work. The American electorate considered the caper just a wee bit too James Bondish, and not a sufficient enough reason to foresake the President and vote for Mr. McGovern, whose pie-in-the-sky collectivist notions implied more totalitarianism, albeit subtle, than the shenanigans of Liddy, Hunt, and McCord.

Even after the landslide repudiation of liberalism at the polls in November, the vanquished persisted in their attempts to directly implicate the President. Right up to this very day, with all the subsequent revelations, it is highly unlikely that the American people buy such an implication. But the role of the President's most trusted advisors is quite another thing.

Obviously, there was an attempt to cover up the entire affair.. And it is this, not the caper itself, that is the cause of the loss in confidence.

It is quite evident now that either the Haldeman-Ehrlichman-Magruder faction or the Mitchell-Dean faction of executive advisors had either prior knowledge of the caper or attempted to deceive the President about the exact details of the entire affair. The behavior of both factions, in attempting to cover up or incriminate the other faction, has been nothing short of childish and irresponsible.

The behavior of the White House aides, along with the pressure from the irrespressible Senator Sam Ervin and the appeals of concerned Senate Republicans, led the President to take a second look at what had previously been considered a mere caper.

Despite the continued accusations from the opposition, the President acted decisively and appropriately. Whether or not there was an attempt, on the part of his aides, to whitewash the entire indicent, it would have been a tragedy for the President if he were to prolong the skepticism of those who had placed their faith in him.

Now that he has purged the White House of those whose reputations are tainted, the President should go one step further and order his new Attorney General, Elliot Richardson, to appoint an independent, disinterested individual to head up the forthcoming investigation of the controversy. It is imperative, at this crucial stage in history, that the President restore the credibility of his administration. If he doesn't those whose principles were repudiated by the American people will no doubt profit from the continued crisis in confidence.

Street Fight

By KEVIN MACK

"Why don't you men do something to break it up!" a woman screamed to the spectators.

A crowd had gathered outside of Berkshire Commons in Southwest. The crowd was watching a violent fight that was going on between two men. One of the men was white, one black. No one seemed to know what the fight was about, but it was obviously for real. And whether it started that way or not, the fight was racial.

"Do you know what this is all about?" someone asked me. I shook my head, "No." The person continued, "That Motherfucker is really hurt. Look, he's bleeding!"

The black man was bleeding in the mouth. He kicked the tall, red-haired, white man in the balls. In street fights, anything goes.

"That black bastard brought his friends around for protection," I overheard a white man say to one of his cohorts. He was referring to the group of five or six black men standing just outside of J.Q.A. tower, watching the fight.

I was on my way to a late afternoon class when I stopped to watch this confrontation in black and white. I have no idea of how it started, but by the time it was over, I'd come to realize that even in a "liberated" place like UMass, a fight between a white man and a black man brings out racist reactions in people.

"The Pigs are coming!" someone yelled. But it was unnecessary because we all heard the sirens.

The two men fighting broke it up just before two UMass police cars pulled up in front of Washington Tower. One of the cops went briefly into the lobby of Washington and within two or three minutes both cars had left.

I was twenty minutes late for class.

Letters To The Editor

SDS Is Alive And Kicking

To The Editor:

Political activity may be in a slump here at UMass., but all around the country, radical students are making their voices heard. Unfortunately, the news media has chosen to censor such activity, for fear of giving other sincerely dissatisfied students any ideas of rebellion. To publicize its activities and tell people about the march on Washington last inauguration day, SDS tried to put an add in the New York Times. At first, this "liberal" paper refused, even though SDS had the money. When about 40 people from SDS went to the Times to find out why, the paper quickly changed its mind.

However, during the inauguration march, most of the publicity (which wasn't very much) was given to the sell-out National Peace Action Coalition demonstration, with its fine-feathered crew of priests, mayors, and senators. When the camera men got tired of that comic scene, they would focus in on those frustrated, ego-boosting anarchists, the Yippies, Zippies, and other assorted dippies. How many people knew that there was another demonstration? SDS was there, marching through the black ghetto of Washington in their campaign against racism. They wouldn't lower themselves to licking the asses of politicians. Being more choosy about who their friends are, they preferred to keep better company—the oppressed black workers of Washington.

Did anyone hear of the May Day march in New York last Saturday? Since the Chicago general strike of May 1, 1886, May Day has been chosen as a rallying point of international workers' solidarity. Several thousand people, including members of SDS, marched through New York in an impressive display of worker-student alliance. With almost two and a half pages of Monday's Collegian devoted to Wounded Knee, plus more of the same on Watergate, one would think that room could be found for something as equally impotant as this march in New York. Maybe even the Collegian didn't hear about it. Congratulations to the capitalist media for a good try at blocking out the truth! Too bad you can never fool everybody, because there are always those who see through your lies, and are determined to spread the truth no matter what the sacrifice. The capitalists have never been able to exercise total control over the workers, a fact that by itself spells their doom.

At most of the major college campuses, SDS is now involved in fighting the racist, anti-working class "theories" of genetics, taught by the new breed of Nazis-Banfield, Jancks, Shockley, and friends. These phony "scientists" are trying to push the lie that poor people, expecially blacks, are genetically inferior. They claim that it is a waste of time trying to improve the inadequately supplied, crowded, underfinanced schools these workers are forced to send their children to, since poverty indicates a lack of intelligence, and intelligence is transferred genetically from parents to their children. Not only is this scientifically unsound, it is used to justify racism by trying to prove that blacks are genetically inferior. Supposedly this can be measured with I.Q. tests, which prove nothing about intelligence, but are merely measures of cultural assimilation. The culture of people is determined by their economic cultural environment, so that most workers live in a very different cultural environment than the fairly upper class "experts" who make up those tests.

Professors who teach these lies often wind up with government jobs, doing studies about national education or urban "problems", i.e., militant rebelling workers. This racist filth, promoted by the government, is just as scientifically sound as the nonsense of Hitler's corps of racist theoriticians—and just as dangerous.

Although smashing racism is the major campaign, in recent months SDS has also battled with police to kick out military recruiters from college campuses. SDS has had actions in support of Wounded Knee, the United Farm Workers, and other striking workers. But the media prefers to keep all this a Big Secret—the reverse of Hitler's Big Lie. To the disappointment of the ruling class, SDS is alive and well. As for those egotistical, self-proclaimed political experts, who have been gleefully predicting the death of radical student activity, they'd better open their eyes, or else they may find themselves caught in the crossfire!

Waiting On The Hill

To The Editor:

The following letter is addressed to Leigh Short, chairperson of the Orchard Hill Evaluation Committee:

On February 5th of this year, when the Orchard Hill Community was informed of the formation of your committee, it was told by Dr. Gage that the evaluation would be submitted by April 15, 1973. It is now May 1, and no official statement has been made.

Students have gone through room-choosing for next year but they have no knowledge as to whether the living-earning program they have signed up for will exist next September. Students are in the process of pre-registration for courses for the fall, but they can be given no information on Orchard Hill courses because we have no definite courses. Why? Because we have no budget for an academic program for next year, and thus cannot pay anybody to teach courses.

The students' needs seem to be expendable. They have yet to be informed of any proposals for the future of their community. All too often, changes in universities are implemented without any consideration for the students. We see the possibility of that occurring on Orchard Hill and, suffice it to say, we are discontent. We, the students on Administration recognize them. We have the right to know what is being proposed and whether or not those proposals are accepted by the University Administration before we become involved in final examinations and depart for the summer.

We urge that your committee accept the invitation to attend a special meeting tonight in the Webster Main Lounge, and that you bring real proposals that you will have presented to the University Administration.

We demand that the students' right to know what the University Administration's perceptions and proposals are for the future of the Orchard Hill Residential College be recognized and that these proposals and perceptions be clarified in time for students to react and plan accordingly.

MDC Sports Pages Suck

To The Editor:

Your sports pages are the worst one that I have ever read. My main objection with this paper's sports pages is that you have not printed any articles on the N.H.L. Stanley Cup Playoff games since the Boston Bruins were eliminated in the quarter-final series with the New York Rangers. I see this as no reason to eliminate the Stanley Cup from your sports page. I am sure that if you set your mind to it you could find some way to get these results from the other games played and squeeze them into your sports pages. You might even shorten your Red Sox Quiz a few lines to print something as unimportant as the Stanley Cup results. Would this be asking too much of your paper, or any other paper?

Maybe you are just not interested in any other professional team but Boston, or more than likely, you are just prejudice and your sports pages suck.

Gross Insensitivity

To The Editor:

Patricia Cutts and others who oppose the State of Israel typically show a gross insensitivity to the historical forces which have once again given Israel geographical reality. She remarks in passing, "The Jewish people have been victimized through much of history . . ." and goes on from there to villify the State of Israel and its policies.

What you don't seem to realize, Ms. Cutts, is that Israel was not created in a vacuum. The history of the Jewish people in Europe left no alternative to that of an autonomous state. All over Europe, Jews were set apart culturally, ethnically, and linguistically. They were forced to live in overcrowded ghettos which were locked at night, were denied many types of employment, and were even prohibited from wearing the same type of clothing as did native Europeans. Some of these locked ghettos existed up until the nineteenth century, when Jews achieved political emancipation in most European countries.

However, Jews were still perceived as outsiders on the European scene, and still perceived themselves as such. The devastation of whole Jewish communities often depended on the whim of a ruler or the mood of a crowd. Sometimes Jews could escape to the nearest border and find refuge for awhile.

However, thirty years ago when the last border had been crossed and Jews requested visas to allow them to immigrate no country would freely take them in. The nations that could have helped were silent in condoning the murder of Jewish women, men, and children in the most brutal ways imaginable.

The only group of people who were willing to allow free immigration were the Jews of Palestine who themselves had escaped pogroms by coming to the single place on earth which they could call home. (American Blacks, whose cultural, linguistic, and to a substantial degree, racial (rape of slave women) ties to the African continent have been tragically severed, are encouraged by Stokely Carmichael to immigrate to Africa, while at the same time he would deny to Jews the right to immigrate to Israel.)

Through the bitter experience of their own oppression many Israeli Jews are sensitive to the plight of the Palestinian Arabs. Some everyday Israeli facts of life you are probably unaware of: Arabic is one of the official languages of the State of Israel; Israeli Arab schoolchildren are taught Arabic language, literature, and history; Israeli Arabs are allowed to visit relatives in neighboring Arab countries while these same countries do not permit their Arab citizens to visit their relatives in Israel; Arabs are represented in the Israeli government; there is no death penalty for Arab terrorists, even when their actions have resulted in loss of life. These are just a few facts conveying the tone of Arab-Jewish relations within Israel. Ms. Cutts, is this the type of treatment your rhetoric would unblushingly have going "beyond oppression into the realm of terror"? Why not instead mention the treatment of the unfortunate Jews in Iraq, Syria, and Egypt if you want to talk about terror?

It does seem odd to me that you, Patricia, are so very worked up about the conflict in the Near East, an area of the world with which you probably have no connection, and of which you obviously have no first-hand knowledge. There is so much real malice and injustice in the world, and so much oppression to overcome that, in perspective, it seems ludicrous (and ulteriorly motivated. Check out why the idea of a Jewish State really bothers you) to spend time attacking a small beleaguered nation that has been and is the only hope for a dispersed people.

Using the term "occupied Palestine" is not helpful to either Arab or Jew. Its use is a denial of reality, and, as such, an impediment to viable solutions.

A Constructive Measure

To The Editor:

I write this letter in support of the transportations council's attempts to restrict vehicles on this university campus.

I was shocked at the conduct exhibited by a crass minority of the spectators which witnessed the public hearing held in the S.U.B. last Monday afternoon. With catcalls and boos they crudely protested each and every constructive measure offered by the council to remedy the existing, critical vehicular situation. No suggestions were offered by the audience--only criticism.

Whether the inhabitants of this university wish to recognize it or not--car, roads, parking lots, and exhaust emissions promise to smother this campus and community, lest immediate corrective action be taken by the proper authorities. Even where this asphalt-it-all malignancy has not spread, tire tracks mire the mud.

The U. of Wisconsin, a campus which facilitates over 60,000 students alone, recently found its campus being similarly smothered with pavement and cars--and concluded that radical corrective measures had to be taken. Without so much as a public hearing they cut the number of available parking spaces by approximately one-half, they substantially increased their existing parking fees (which retrospectively make UMass's look like an infinitesimal joke), and then they dispatched an unconquerable body of meter-maids who saw to it that existing laws were strictly enforced.

For about a week people moaned and groaned (and it might be noted that it was the University faculty and employees which screamed the loudest, just as they did in the S.U.B.). The people who needed permits most, saw to it that they were first in line. Those who didn't, either used existing mass transit facilities or organized car pools with surprisingly little difficulty. The parking space curtailment worked and no one dropped out of school or quit their job for lack of a place. Now Wisconsin students find it hard to imagine their campus catering to anything other than pedestrian traffic.

I would again like to voice my support of the Council's goal to make UMass into a campus (rather than a huge slag of smothering asphalt).

I would also like to thank the Collegian for their nausiatingly subjective, typically narrow sighted reporting. Yell about ecology, scream about how badly you hate cars and all they stand for-and then wallow in your hyprocisy.

Support The Oglala Sioux

To The Editor:

I headed for Wounded Knee on Friday, April 20th, 4 a.m., with 7 other men and women. We moved in response to Vernon Bellecourt's plea to support the beseiged Indians at the Pine Ridge Reservation with a march through the gov't barricades bringing food and medical supplies.

The Oglala Sioux of Pine Ridge Reservation are occupying Wounded Knee and re-establishing their sovereignty as a Sioux nation. Independence was declared by six of the eight districts on their reservation (the 2nd largest in the country). The Oglala Sioux Civil Rights Organization then called upon the American Indian Movement for assistance.

Various Indian leaders and defenders of Wounded Knee informed us that their orders are to fire only when fired upon and that when one hears of a gunfire exchange of 20,000 rounds; 99% of that barage is spewed out by the U. S. military machine. The Oglala will not disarm as a precondition to negotiations because the gov't has proven untrustworthy and expedient on previous occasions when the Indians laid themselves defenseless.

In conversations with: Fools Crow, the head chief of the Sioux nation; Crow Dog, their spiritual leader; John Fire, medicine man; Vernon Bellacourt, co-founder of A.I.M.; a number of local leaders and dozens of local Oglalas, we found that the foremost grievance was the ruthless corruption of their sell-out tribal president Dick Wilson.

When this 1/2 white, non-Sioux speaking puppet of the B.I.A. and local white ranchers, became President, he began to divert tribal funds for personal enrichment and is recently using $59,000 in tribal money to pay his armed goon squad $4.50 an hour to suppress and harass those on the reservation seeking change.

Related to this is the incredible leasing of 95% of Sioux lands at $1.60 an acre per year, to white ranchers. The authority to lease Indian lands is not in the hands of Indians but B.I.A. officials. The U.S. gov't provides protection for the local capitalist class, knowing that their favor will be returned by financial backing at election time. The Oglala power elite combine with wealthy white ranchers and well paid-off gov't administrators to suck the life giving land away from the Oglala and force them to sell their labor to white capitalist exploiters.

Marshall law exists in Pine Ridge. Oglalas walking around in twos have been arrested for unlawful assembly. The jails are crowded with political prisoners arrested illegally by a sell-out Oglala elite working hand in hand with the U.S. gov't Wounded Knee supporters and sympathizers are too terrified to act or speak out.

A public outrage at gov't oppression is the politically indispensable phenomenon which is preventing a 2nd total massacre. The administration and its agencies are already in hot water, and are reluctant about boiling to death. Expressions of support for the Oglala of Wounded Knee must now be channeled and magnified to an intolerably high pitch.

Unhealthy, Disgusting, Greasy Food

To The Editor:

Last semester I wrote a letter to the Collegian about the Worcester Dining Commons It was titled "Who's Responsible?". In it I stated how they were constantly running out of catsup, silverware, napkins, glasses, etc. I stated how I thought the food was poor, how they were running out of certain foods and a lot of other things. I asked who was responsible for this incompetency and what could be done about it.

To my surprise I got quite a response. The manager talked to me and even set up a meeting between her, myself, and the head cook. They admitted that there was no excuse for running out of silverware, catsup, etc., but that in other respects they were doing the best they could. They said they were running on a low profit, and that considering the amount of people they were serving the food was as good as could be expected. I asked why it was that a meal ticket was mandatory. They said they had noting to do with that policy. I suggested some improvements they could make as far as floor layout and serving procedures go. These were ignored. In general, by talking to me, and by making token improvements they were able to reduce me to a state of pathetic apathy.

Recently, however, the dining commons has been a little too much for me. It is becoming a real "drag" to eat there, an unpleasant experience. Why is this?

I'm not sure there is any point to listing all the faults of the dining commons. But just for flavor, here goes:

1. Too many people. Enought to make it unpleasant. You have to wait in line five minutes. (Big deal, but who likes to wait in line at all?) After you have gotten your tray you have to search for a place to put it. Avoid bumping people, who are running around like ants on their way to salad, drinks, etc. Again this isn't a big deal, just a pain.

2. Food. I don't care what anybody says. The food is disgusting. Try squeezing a pizza burger and watch the grease pour out. French fried potatoes, more grease; grilled cheese, more grease. Tasteless, disgusting, unhealthy grease in three fourths of the meals they serve. And you wonder why the U. S. leads the world in heart attacks? And the brands they buy! Armour veal patties are 99% grease and 1% veal. (I actually found a large chunk of hair and flesh in one of them.)

3. Drinks. The soda is warm, fizless, and sweet. It's disgusting. The punch is poor. I asked if they could buy ice machines. They claimed it cost too much. What shit. Somebody just wants more pocket money. In Worcester east they have three punch machines. Worcester west has one punch machine located in a position such that one line can't get to it unless they want to run an obstacle course. It's ridiculous.

4. General. The food isn't usually cold, but once every couple of weeks it will be. They don't usually run out of catsup, but once in a while they will. Its always something.

5. Incompetency. Its everywhere, from the management on down. There are some people who just don't belong. But it's inhuman to fire them, right? Besides, why bother, it's a monopoly, we'll still have to pay. Nobody loses, except the students. But the management, it's atrocious. Whoever designed the floor layout of Worcester west should be shot. Give me a year to learn the ins and outs of the food business and I could get that place working a hundred percent more efficiently. Give me one day, and the authority to do what I wanted and I could make the floor layout of Worcester west seem like heaven compared to what it is now.

So what can be done? Nothing. The whole system is too bedded in bureaucracy and incompetence. Complaining will only result in token improvements. The truth is that as long as the dining commons is a monopoly, as long as people have to buy a meal ticket no matter what, there will be no improvement. Why is the dining commons a monopoly? Because somebody's making a shit load, and whoever is wants to keep it that way. But it just isn't fair. I don't want to have to pay three hundred dollars to eat unhealthy, greasy, disgusting food, in a disgusting dining hall. Just because somebody built all these dining commons is no reason for anybody to have to eat there. I am not going to blame anybody for the poor state of the dining commons, because it is not their fault. It is human nature. Why do a good job, when you can do a bad job and make just as much money. Why not become fat and lazy if it won't hurt you. I don't blame them. When you don't have pressure you don't have to produce. The whole problem is that the dining commons is a monopoly. Make meal tickets optional and you'll see, people will start moving there asses, they'll have to, or they'll lose their wallets. I want to know why the dining commons is a monopoly. Who's responsible for this decision in policy? What are the reasons? I don't want to eat disgusting greasy food in a disgusting dining commons. And nobody else should have to either. Again, who responsible?

Plastic Pens

To The Editor:

It does still write on the first try. It is still a nice-looking pen. But the new Bic Clics and their refills are not the same as before our lovely Spring vacation (at the end of March?!).

Do you know why this great pen we're all so desperately hooked on is so different? Because all but the very tip of the refill is now plastic instead of meat! Just think about that and act immediately!!!

Gail Wilson demonstrates typical action that will be featured at the third annual Intercollegiate Horse Show.

UM Horse Show Ready

By LINDA JASKIEL
Special To The Recorder

AMHERST - The third annual Intercollegiate Horse Show will be at West Springfield's Eastern States Exposition grounds Saturday and Sunday.

The event is sponsored by the Veterinary and Animal Sciences Department of UMass.

There are a total of 39 classes in five divisions from beginner walk-trot through advanced jumping. Sunday the riders who have qualified for the championship classes will ride for the Grand Champion titles for the academic year. The University's Equestrian Drill will perform prior to the championship classes.

This year the University is the President College for Region I.

Bertalan de Nemethy, the U.S. Olympic Jumping Team coach, and Wendy Willett, the director of riding at Smith College, will be the judges. The ringmaster is Thomas Flynn of Southampton, and the announcer, Dr. Russell Smith of the Veterinary and Animal Sciences Dept. will rounded out the list of show officials.

Championship trophies have been donated by Cartier Jewelers of New York. Fitch Investors Service of New York, The American Horseman Magazine, Kauffman & Sons of New York and Mrs. Barbara Cattogio Kullen of Long Island.

Trophy presentations will be made by Robert C. Wood president of the University for the High Point College; Arless Spielman, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources for the High Point Rider; and Dr. Thomas Fox, chairman of the Veterinary and Animal Sciences Department for the High Point Jumping trophy.

The puplic is invited and there will be refreshments available.

Free Lead Testing Service Offered

For the last two weeks of school, a free lead testing service will be offered in Room N233 of the Public Health wing in Morrill Bldg. Any ceramics used to eat or drink from will be tested to see if they present a health hazard to the users. During the past semester, some pottery items tested showed high lead counts. These were either homemade or else ones purchased out of this country. The test will in no way damage or deface the piece and takes only about two days to do. Samples may also be left at the Amherst Town Hall in the Health Dept. office between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Dance Workshop Presents Concert

The University Dance Workshop will present an informal concert at the WOPE Gym, Thursday, May 3, at 7:30 p.m. The performance will include modern dances, some jazz, a song-dance, and for the first time on the WOPE stage, a fire and sword swallowing dance. The University Dance Workshop is a traditional place for fledging choreographers and dancers to gain experience before working with the Concert Dance Group. According to director Dan Peterson "This year's workshop group is outstanding, and includes beginners as well as more advanced dancers and choreographers. I'm very pleased at how imaginative and energetic they are. The dances offer such a variety of themes, that I'm sure there will be something for everyone to enjoy." Admission is free.

Two Feminists Speak About Labor, Capitalism

Two Feminists, Selma James and Mariarosa Dalla Costa will speak Friday, May 4, 1973 at Herter Hall Room 227 at 8 p.m.

Selma James was born in Brooklyn and has been active in the extra-parliamentary left since 1945. She left the United States in 1955 and since then has lived 5 years in the West Indies and the rest of the time in England. One of her main interests is women within the labor forces, and has written much on the subject, most notably, A Woman's Place. Ms. James has been writing and speaking about women since 1949.

Mariarosa Dalla Costa was born in Treviso, Italy. In 1967 she began to work as a lecturer in the Institute of Political and Social Sciences at the University of Padua. A major focus in her research has been an analysis of the place of women within a capitalistic structure. In Women and the Subversion of the Community she talks about the need for women to break the role of housewife which keeps women divided from one another. Ms. Dalla Costa has worked with Selma James in her association with the Women's Movement, and is presently active in the group of Lotta Feminists.

Jules Axelrod

Nobel Laureate To Speak At Scientific Honorary Society

The Nobel Laureate Julius Axelrod will be the guest speaker at the annual meeting Friday, May 4, of the University's Chapter of the scientific honorary society Sigma Xi.

Dr. Axelrod, who won the Nobel prize in physiology and medicine in 1970, will speak on "The Pineal Gland: A Nerochemical Transducer" at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. The public is invited.

At the preceding banquet, five UMass professors emeriti who have been in the chapter 50 years or more will be honored. They are: Charles A. Peters, 73 years; Charles P. Alexander, 60 years; William G. Vinal, 56 years; Jay R. Traver, 54 years; Arthur P. French, 52 years; and Helen S. Mitchell, 52 years.

The banquet and lecture will follow a 5 p.m. ceremony for initiation of new chapter members.

Dr. Axelrod has been chief of the pharmocology section of the Laboratory of Clinical Science of the National Institute of Mental Health since 1955. Before that he held research posts with the National Heart Institute and other research institutions. His work in drug and hormone studies, enzymology and the pineal gland has won him more than 20 international awards and honors.

Strikers Speak On Farah

Two Chicano workers from Texas, Rosa Flores and Margaret Quesada, will be speaking tonight about the struggle with the Farah Manufacturing Co. Farah, which is the largest manufacturers of men's pants in the country, is currently being struck by 3,000 Mexican-American workers who are fighting for their elementary rights to a decent living and freedom to have a union.

In support of this struggle a national boycott of Farah pants has been called. As Dennis Regier, a local worker for the boycott has said, "a local show of support for the boycott by attending this meeting will put an additional pressure upon McCallum's of Northampton, the primary display of solidarity is important in winning this struggle." The Strikers will speak at 8 p.m. at the Unitarian Church of Northampton on 220 Main Street next to the City Hall.

Conference On 'International Role Of The University' To Be Held

Amherst, Mass.—A major conference designed to set priorities for the UMass in the international field will be held at the UMass Campus Center May 17, 18, and 19, International Programs Director Barbara B. Burn announced today.

"The International Role of the University in the 1970's," a conference with workshops, will bring some 200 persons from industry, labor, government, foundations and higher educational institutions to UMass. The broad theme will be the University's responsibilities in the international field in the Commonwealth, nationally and internationally.

Three areas will receive special emphasis: how the University can respond to the needs of the Massachusetts economy; ethnicity and the University; and the responsibilities of the University in the field of international education.

Registration at 4 p.m. Thursday, May 17, will begin the conference. UMass President Robert Wood and Mr. Leonard B. Tennyson, director of the European Community Information Service, speaking on "The Western European Experience With Economic Development" will be the dinner speakers that evening. The Friday session will open with a major address by Congressman John Brademas of Indiana on "The International Role of Universities."

The other Friday morning speaker is Professor William Wilson on "The Role of Ethnicity in American Life." Dr. Wilson, now with the University of Chicago sociology department, was formerly at UMass.

Six workshops will be held Friday afternoon, May 18, on the topics: Labor and Foreign Trade; Technology and Foreign Trade; New Directions for Foreign Area and Language Studies; Toward Greater Utilization of University and Five College International Studies Resources; Black Studies: Current Problems, Future Prospects; and The Future of Ethnic Studies-Directions for Development.

Discussions of workshop results will take place at a 9:30 a.m. session Saturday, May 19. The final session will be a luncheon meeting Saturday with a panel discussion on "The International Role of the University of Massachusetts in the Decades Ahead." Panelists will be UMass Professor Adam Yarmolinsky; Dr. Robert Leestma, HEW's associate commissioner for international education; and Francis X. Sutton, Ford Foundation International Division deputy vice-president.

The conference is partially supported by a grant from the International Council for Educational Development (ICED). Enrollment is open to a limited number of students, faculty and other interested persons. Registration forms, information on fees and other details are available from the International Programs Office, Whitmore Administration Building, UMass, Amherst, 01002.

Lecture: Baha'i Faith And The Native Americans

On Friday, May 4th, Donald and Carolyn Cruikshank of Rochester, Vermont, will speak on "The Baha'i Faith and the Native Americans," at 7:30 p.m., Converse Assembly Room, Converse Hall, Amherst College.

The Cruikshanks combine years of teaching experience with their background as administrators of programs designed to bring about an understanding of the oneness of mankind. Donald Cruikshank is President of the Institute of Human Understanding, and together the Cruikshanks direct High Rise, a unique program for youth of widely diverse backgrounds to become aware of the spiritual lessons of the native arts and traditions of this continent, and to live together in an active outdoor program in unity and friendship.

In their presentation Friday, they will draw upon their wealth of knowledge of the spiritual teachings and heritage of the Native Americans, as well as the teachings of Baha'u'llah, Founder of the Baha'i Faith.

Contemporary Music Series To Begin

The first Contemporary Music Festival at UMass will be tonight, May 3, through Sunday, May 6, under the auspices of the UMass Fine Arts Council and music department.

Three major events will begin with an all-contemporary program by The Juilliard String Quartet Thursday, May 3, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program for this occasion has been especially chosen to coincide with the Contemporary Music Festival and will include the first area performance of Elliott Carter's most recent String Quartet No. 3 and will continue with Charles Ives' String Quartet No. 2 (1913), and conclude with a performance of Bela Bartok's String Quartet No. 2.

Reserved tickets for the Juilliard Quartet's concert are availalbe at $1.50 for UMass undergrads and $3 for all others, through the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone (413) 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert.

The UMass Contemporary Music Festival will continue Saturday, May 5, at 8 p.m. when a program of chamber music will be offered in Bowker Auditorium. The program will include Robert Stern's "Three Chinese Poems," songs by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy, and Anton Webern as sung by Donna Harler; and "Contrasts" by Bela Bartok featuring Joseph Contino, clarinet; Julian Olevsky, violin; and Estela Olevsky, piano. This event is free to the public.

Sunday, May 6, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the Festival will conclude with a concert by the University Wind Ensemble, John Jenkins, conductor, and Joseph Duchi, assistant conductor. Included in the program will be Philip Bezanson's recent work "Sinfonia Concertante" which was commissioned by the University of Iowa School of Music for the opening of a new hall on that campus, and works by William Schumann, Jerry Bilik, Paul Hindemith and Warren Benson. This event is also free.

Donna Harler will sing songs by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy, and Anton Webern on Saturday, May 5 during the UMass Contemporary UMass Contemporary Music Festival.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn persons are noted for their "long memories." If you want to know where something is, where it has been filed, check with a native of this zodiacal sign. Some astrologers claim the Capricorn person is a genius when it comes to locating lost objects. Try it and see. Ask a Capricorn to find something that is missing!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on collecting, consolidating gains, enhancing financial potential. You can build for security. Family member who worries about money can be placated. Explain and do it in diplomatic manner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Have faith in basic abilities. Refuse to be discouraged by one who is proverbial "wet blanket." Shake yourself free from emotional rut. Dine out. Expand mental horizons. Check travel folders. Plan ahead.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What you seek is available. But you will have to look in out-of-the-way places. Means change procedures. Do some tearing down in order to rebuild. Message should become increasingly clear. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could be involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on friendly persuasion. Many around you seem intent on making changes and including you—whether or not you happen to agree. Be receptive without being weak. Let others know you want promises in writing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Road to progress now must be paved with diplomacy. Outbursts, actions based on impulse would defeat your purpose. Utilize showmanship but sprinkle with tact. Taurus, Libra persons could be featured.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with journey, special educational project. You reach beyond what appeared to be a limitation. You perceive what other desire. You sense who is telling truth or otherwise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study investment procedures, potential. Opportunity exists to cash in on talents, assets. You are rewarded for past research, special efforts. One you respect pays meaningful compliment—and backs it up with something solid.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Maintain low profile. Don't insist, push, cajole or chide. You can finish important project. You gain goodwill. More persons become aware of your abilities. You discover better means of distribution.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent is on health, work, special services. Improve relations with co-workers, those who share beliefs and interests. Relative seems to be in writing or calling mood. Take what you hear and read with proverbial grain of salt.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You know what should be done and you gain cooperation in doing in. You are especially successful now in dealing with women. Cancer individual plays key role. Young persons respond to your style, efforts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Highlight the basics, the rudiments. If you are thorough, there is more chance for success. Message from a distance could be encouraging. But don't count too much on one who dreams. Get facts and base actions on valid information.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check directions in connection with any journey. Some relatives feel restricted and they are likely to let you know about it. Key now is to mend fences, to build bridges of goodwill. You will need backing for future project.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have sense of humor which often is regarded as your trademark. July should be one of your most significant months of 1973. You draw to you many born under Sagittarius. You are a natural entertainer, love to eat and can laugh at your own foibles.

Annual Marketing Planning Seminar Today

The second annual marketing planning seminar, sponsored by the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the American Marketing Association (AMA) and the department of marketing at UMass will be held today at the UMass Campus Center.

Economic conditions, technology, the international situation, social change and other factors that affect marketing planning will be discussed. "Prospects for the 70's," by Robert J. Eggert, RCA Corp. vice-president and AMA division vice-president, will open the conference.

Among other speakers will be: Edwin H. Sonnecken, vice-president of corporate business planning for Goodyear; M. E. Ziegenhagen, Babcock and Wilcox director of advertising and PR; W. Stanton Halverson, Jr., chairman of the board and president of Narco Scientific Industries; Chilton Co. senior Vice-President John Kofron; C. W. Smith, Nabisco distribution planning and research director; and AMA Vice-President-elect Seymour Marshak.

A wrap-up session chaired by Bernhard S. Kalb, vice-president of Massachusetts Mutual, will end the all-day program. The dinner speaker will be Dr. Milton Hollander, vice-president of technology for Gulf and Western Industries, on the topic "The Place of Technology in Marketing Planning."

Information on registration, fees and other details is available from Professor Gordon Paul, Department of Marketing, School of Business Administration, UMass.

Michels Bolsters UM Gorillas Title Quest

By BOB ESTELLE

Some athletes are born, so they say. Others are made. These are the kind that are found on today's college campus. A personification of the "made" athlete is Fred Michels, star attackman of the '73 edition of Garber's Gorillas.

Fred came up the hard way. He played high school lacrosse in Rochester, New York through his junior year but his parents moved to Wilmington, Delaware which forced him to spend his senior year at a high school that did not have a program.

His coming to UMass was strictly by chance, you could say. He chose to come here because of the excellent reputation the School of Engineering has as well as the rural location of the school.

As a frosh, he met Ron Dumont who, at that time, was the varsity backup goalie. Dumont convinced Fred to come out for lacrosse.

Fred did not have success right away. He was a starter for the Chimps that spring (remember, there were only frosh on the JV's then), and played regularly for the JV's as a soph.

As a junior, Fred moved up to the Gorillas but saw limited action behind Hardy, Nagle and Ritch. But he scored 12 points and earned his letter. He says that he learned quite a lot from watching those guys and that they formed the best attack line he's ever seen.

But now, those guys are gone but their place has been taken over by Michels on one side, Frank Garahan in the middle and Peter Connolly on the right. And Fred Michels has made himself known to UMass' rivals. He is currently tied for team leadership in scoring with 36 points (21 goals and 15 assists).

Coach Garber attributes Fred's success to hard work. He's one of the hardest workers on this year's squad. Garber further stated that it is his physical condition and his stickwork that makes him a star.

Fred has this to say about his current success, "This season, I've been able to put everything together. This is the greatest bunch of guys I've ever played with. We stick together on and off the field. If something seems to be going wrong, we try to work it out ourselves. I really feel I belong to something."

Fred is in his last semester now, and has accepted a job with DuPont in East Chicago, Indiana which he starts in July. He feels that he has gotten what he originally came to UMass for, "I feel the School of Engineering provides a good chance to get a good education. You have to take advantage of the opportunities that are there."

But the one thing that amazes people is the consistent respect that the Gorillas have for their coach. Fred says it all right here, "I feel that Coach Garber has done a great job in developing latent and raw talent into a great lacrosse team. He has an attitude and a philosophy about the game, and about life in general that is as good as anyone has ever come up with."

Fred hasn't had it easy here. But he has gotten out of lacrosse what he has put into it. Four years of hard work, in school as well as lacrosse, have paid off for him in the form of being a star attackman on the Northeast Divisional Champions and an engineering job with DuPont.

He spent his time in purgatory with the Freshman team. A year later the Gorilla in training paced the Junior Varsity in scoring. After a year on the Varsity bench, Fred Michels got his calling this spring. And the kid from Wilmington, Del., has responded in magnificent fashion.

OUT AT THIRD—Third basemen, Karen Fruzetti, is shown putting the tag on a Keene State Player in yesterday's Women's Varsity Softball game. The Minutewomen upped their record to 2-1 with a 9-2 victory. They are facing A.I.C. today in Springfield at 3:30.

Chamberlain: Knicks "Rally A Booster"

By JACK STEVENSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Towering Wilt Chamberlain believes his Los Angeles Lakers could have been helped by the spectacular rally of the New York Knicks that fell just three points short.

As the National Basketball Association finalists looked ahead to Thursday night's second game in the best-of-seven championship playoffs, the 7-foot-1 Chamberlain looked down and said:

"You just can't be complacent about the Knicks. It might have been bad for us to have beaten them by a big margin. I'd rather be scared of them."

The Lakers led the opening game at the Forum on Tuesday night 93-73 with just 1 minute 12 seconds to play in the third quarter. Then the Knicks rallied behind the shooting of Dave DeBusschere and Bill Bradley and lost by only three points at 115-112. DeBusschere scored nine in the final period and 25 overall, Bradley eight and 24.

Jerry West led the Lakers through the first three quarters but committed his fifth personal foul with 5 minutes left in the third quarter. From then on he saw limited duty, going back into action midway in the fourth period before fouling out. West last had fouled out of a game in 1970.

For the second game, another capacity throng of 17,505 will be at the Forum before the series goes to New York for Sunday afternoon and Tuesday night games.

Bucyk Signs Multi-Year B's Contract

BOSTON (AP) - Veteran left-winger John Bucyk has signed a multi-year contract with the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League, Bruins Managing Director Harry Sinden announced Tuesday.

It is the 17th contract with the Bruins and the 19th in the NHL for Bucyk, who will be 38 on May 12. The multi-year contract is a departure for Bucyk, who has previously signed one-year pacts.

Bucyk, known as the Bruins' "elder statesman" was acquired by the Bruins from Detroit in 1957. He has played in 1,103 regular season games with Boston, scoring 424 goals and assisting in 615 others.

His 51 goals in the 1970-71 season put Bucyk in a group of only seven players in NHL history who have scored 50 or more goals. That same year, Bucyk set a league record for most assists 65 and most points 116 by a left-winger in one season.

Bucyk has played in 342 consecutive league games since Jan. 23, 1969.

Kentucky Derby-Another "Citation"?

LOUISVILLE (AP)—The 99th Kentucky Derby stacks up as a two-horse race with Secretariat and Sham the best of a rather lacklustre group of contenders, said the man who helped saddle eight Derby champions.

"It doesn't measure up as a good field," Jimmy Jones commented.

"There are some good horses running, no great ones. No super stars."

Jones and his father, the late Ben Jones, trained for the great Calumet Farm, which produced such thoroughbred giants as Pensive, Citation, Ponder, Hil Gail, Iron Liege and Tim Tam.

Citation was the last horse to capture the Triple Crown—the Derby, Preakness and Belmont—in 1948.

It's a feat Lucien Laurin, who saddled Derby winner Riva Ridge a year ago, is seeking to duplicate with Secretariat, Meadow Stable's 1972 Horse of the Year.

"I don't know about Secretariat," Jones mused. "He has good breeding and his record was good coming into the Wood Memorial. But he ran in the Wood as if something was pinching him.

"I keep hearing reports that there is some heat in his leg somewhere and he is being treated with ice packs, but Lucian denies it. Some people around the stables insist it's true."

An odds-on favorite in the Wood, Secretariat ran a disappointing third behind his stablemate, Angle Light, and Sham. Railbirds attribute the defeat to the race's slow pace.

"It's been my experience," said Jones, "that a great horse will win under any conditions—slow track, fast track, mud, slow pace, fast pace. Citation was that kind of a horse.

IM Wrist Champs Announced

The Intramural Wrist Wrestling season has ended-I bet many of you never knew it began-and the campus champions have been named.

The Women's Team Champs are none other than the Crampton Koalas, while the Chadbourne Maroons captured the Men's Team title.

In the men's individual competition the winners and their weight class are: Wayne Turnberg, Phi Mu Delta-under 155 lb.; Mark Redding, Independent-under 175 lb.; Frank Bostanke, Chadbourne Maroons-under 195 lb.; and Dave Lynch, McNamara Magicians - over 195 lb.

The women's individual champions are: Red Division - Lynne Zoino, Crampton Koalas; White Division - Maureen Woodward, Alpha Chi; Blue Division - Gretchen Schafer, Wheeler Trojans; and Green Division - Denise Beaudoin, Crampton Koalas.

LA Hangs On

Without a doubt, the Lakers enjoyed that long layoff and perhaps were just that much more elated watching the Knicks destroy the Boston Celtics in the seventh game in Boston Sunday afternoon. The Lakers were just barely able to shake the cobwebs Tuesday night at the Forum, as the defending world champs overcame a stirring New York comeback in the final 1:12 seconds, as the Knicks stunned the hosts with a 17 point run that fell short in a 115-112 opening loss to Los Angeles.

A little bit of patience and the opportunity to play has propelled Steve Newell into one of the brightest light in New England college baseball today. Newell hammered three hits yesterday afternoon in raising his average over .400.

White Returns To Form As Diamond 9 Edge SC

By MIKE BROPHY

Tom White has looked like the White of yesteryear in his two most recent outings on the mound and yesterday turned in a five hit performance in eight innings to defeat Springfield 3-1. Home runs by Pete Backstrom and Mike Koperniak were major contributors to the offensive efforts of the Minutemen yesterday in the muggy heat at Earl Lorden Field.

Backstrom, hitting at a .254 clip going into the game, put Bert Barker's third pitch of the game well over the right field fence. Steve Newell followed with a double but the first inning ended with no further scoring.

John Healy walked to lead off the second and moved to second on a single by Dan Kelly. Koperniak then put down a Sacrifice Bunt that moved the runners to scoring position and a fielding error by Paul Herdemian of Springfield allowed Healy to cross the plate.

In the top of the second, Springfield mounted its most serious threat of the arly innings when Carl Ohlson singled to center. A pop fly to third baseman Mark Palau retired the next batter but Ohlson moved to second when Ed Jalbert hit back to the mound. A double steal backfired for Springfield as Ohlson charged home while White still had the ball. He threw to the plate where Healy easily put the tag down.

White continued to put on a great show for scouts such as Bill Monbouquette and retired ten men in a row before walking the second batter in the sixth. The UMass 6-4-3 combination of McMahon, Koperniak, and Beaurivage turned a timely double play to clear the boards for the inning.

In the eighth frame White issued a walk that was to cost him a shutout when he walked pinch hitter Don Edgar. Tow singles followed and Edgar crossed the plate on a Bill Howard single. "My arm began to tighten up towards the end and I couldn't get the curve over," said the 1973 co-captain. "Before that I felt great though and was pleaseu with my control."

Craig Allegrezza came on to finish the game for White and got some more throwing in for the fast recovering arm. "Both pitchers look to be on the road back and it will be nice to have them coming down the stretch," said pitching coach Arlan Barber.

Coach Dick Bergquist was greatly pleased with the overall performance of the team and commented, "This will put us in great shape to take the Conference this weekend in Kingston (URI). Our defense looked excellent today as we finally turned that double play in good form. McMahon is proving his ability at short, too, and that is a necessity."

The games that could make or break UMass' chances at a title are on the schedule for this weekend when UMass travels to Rhode Island on Friday and the Rams make a return trip Saturday afternoon. Mike Flanagan has been announced as the starter for Friday and either White or John Olson will hike the hill on Saturday.

It's Williams Today In Gorilla Cooker

By MIKE ELLIOTT

The champion of the Northeast Division of the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association will probably be decided today as UMass and Williams College, who are currently tied for first place, battle in a game at Boyden Field beginning at 3 o'clock. UMass now has a record of 6-2 while Williams has a 5-2 record. For Garber's Gorillas, this clash, along with the one with Brown next week are the two most important games on their schedule.

This game was originally scheduled for last Saturday but was postponed because of rain. The Gorillas have had a game with Amherst to tune up for this one. Williams will also come prepared for this one. Their goalie, Mat Levine, is highly rated by their coaching staff. They also have two fine attackmen in Andy Harper and Phil Hartigan. UMass' coach, Dick Garber said: "Harper is a good attackman and Hartigan is big and has a wicked underhand shot. Bob Pinkard is the other attackman and the rest of the Williams lineup reads as follows: Chris McGavin, Bob Koegel, John Gallagher-midfield; and Myron Kellogg, Steve Hein, and Jay Nawrocki-defense.

An interesting note about Williams is that they rotate midfields much like a hockey team rotates lines. They use four sets of midfielders and rotate them in order for about two minutes each. This allows them a fresh midfield every couple of minutes which is able to go all out for the interval which it is on the field. Coach Garber commented that "Williams will be able to keep the pressure on because their midfielders won't have to stand around catching their breath."

One can be mistaken about Williams' potential by just looking at their record. They were upset by Yale, 7-4 but they also beat Connecticut, 15-7 (UMass beat UConn 12-6). Coach Garber saw the Williams-Yale game and assistant coach Charlie Hardy witnessed the Williams-UConn match; both coaches were impressed.

Garber's Gorillas are also a high-scoring team, averaging over twelve goals per game while their consistent defense has only let up an average of five goals a game. In the Amherst game they worked on their running and their fast breaks. They are now ranked eighteenth in the nation and will be looking forward to improving their record today.

HC Visits Llewelyn Today

By EARLE BARROLL

Tony Pendleton and company--You're on the spot. Your opponent is Holy Cross this afternoon at the Llewelyn Derby track. They've beaten Springfield by 12, they recently lost to Boston College by only six and your coach says "that was an unexpectantly close margin."

They have a seven foot high jumper in Fred Rom; a nationally ranked hammer thrower in Dave Morrison and an NCAA finalist in the 600 yard run in Rich Comeau. Your coach says that barring some flukes, wins in the discus, shot and javelin and break evens in the field and middle and long distances by your teammates will set the stage for you.

Yes, Tony Pendleton--you and your brother Marshall and Tommy Beland and Dennis Busa will get the chance you've been waiting for to decide this afternoon's meet (2 p.m.). "These are the important events of the meet, the 100 and 220," insists your coach Ken O'Brien.

"We'll know exactly how the trend of the meet is going by the halfway mark when the 440-relay and 100-yard dash are run," he says. "And this will or will not set us up for the 220 later-on that should also be our race."

O'Brien's rationale is based on times being the cross sprinters have run at best 10.1 in the 100 and 22.6 in the 220 while his Minutemen have run in the vicinity of 9.6-9.8 and 21.5-22.5. Mathematically it's a sure bet.

"But," the crafty O'Brien interjected, "I've seen enough on-paper meets go completely in the opposite direction. That's why it's a must for our sprinters to have good days and at the very least get no less than first, preferrably sweeping."

Not that the sprinters are the only ones to be concerned. Bill Gillen, who last week this time ran his best career mile (4:12) but finished third will move up a mile to face Holy Cross's freshman two-mile heavy Neil Coleman who has run 9:11. Randy Thomas is the mile favorite.

Commentary: "The Ship Wouldn't Sink"

By MARTY KELLEY

From the Boston Globe—Al Flanders, Billy Moran, Peter Berg—collectively you guys have a goddam big mouth . . . And if any athletes have a right to talk on this egotistical campus, you do . . . I heard you bitch at 8:53 yesterday morning . . . and when I picked up the Boston Globe shortly thereafter, I knew why . . . Keep talking . . . Soon someone will hear you . . . You've been crying for a decade.

Yes, aggravation on this campus comes in all shapes and sizes. You can flunk an exam, leave your girlfriend at seven a.m. for the last time, blow lunch at the Blue Wall, or find out after all that you really didn't cheat that computer with your 11th hour pass-fail bid . . . And if you really want to get shit on . . . like Flanders, Moran, and Berg, you row for the Crew team.

You know if you really want to find out just what an amazing job this unknown coach by the name of Mike Vespoli is doing on the waters of the Connecticut River, you have to read the Boston Globe to find out . . . And if you're Vespoli and you're trying to put a winning program together, you look elsewhere for financial assistance . . . The Boyden (White Elephant) won't help you . . . They have too many other Athletic priorities. And Frank McInerney is dead right. He just doesn't have the money for Vespoli . . . But that hasn't stopped Vespoli who in my mind is a real hard ass . . . But you got to love him for it . . . He doesn't say no . . . neither will Flanders, Moran, or Berg . . .

In the words of the stubborn Vespoli . . . "We're a little coaching and a lot of money away from the big time," said the first year coach. "I can't even go out and recruit oarsmen. Hell, I don't even have a program to offer them. And what really hurts is that the Boyden people don't even know what we're doing" . . . Well, Mike, why don't you send the White Elephant one of those "Friends of UMass Rowing" newsletters that your rowers send out right by the unassuming nose of Sports Publicist Dick Paige.

I'm sure Dick doesn't know that for a club sport (subjugation by the Athletic Department) that Vespoli and his crazed athletes who practice sometimes at 6:15 a.m., almost bumped off last year's national champion UPenn the other day. Now Paige should know what this team is doing. He like anybody else should be able to pick up the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and read about the dedicated rowers near national fame. But all the info these days seems to come from the Boston Globe of yesterday . . . front page sports . . . "UMass crew makes its own splash" . . . Crowe, Kelley and the duty of the Collegian Sports Staff . . . Get off your ass . . .

With no reporter, hardly a photographer, no money, but a helluva lot of desire, the UMass Crew "Club" has made some waves. Believe it or not the Club gets more coverage from the Associated Press than it does from the Collegian. Just like any sport journalist you'll meet, an athlete is as egotistical . . . They want their product marketed, their voice heard, their bills paid . . . Well, the crew club gets little support from the Athletic Department, pay for trips mostly out of their pocket, and for the forty diehards in Vespoli's program, the only exposure they get on campus is from the shirts they wear . . . Steve Crowe . . . Isn't that a shame?

Steve has done a commendable job (better than Ballou, Kamal, or Barroll—yes Earl's been cutting classes for years now) before him . . . But when Steve and I saw the Globe piece we both looked at each other as if to say . . . "You gotta' be shittin' me" . . .

In '66 Endicott Peabody asked John Lederle (then Aggie prexy) for some bread for the program . . . Seven years later Mike Vespoli asked for some ink and some recognition . . . I think a possible national champ deserves at least that . . . If not more.

Proposals Made On OH's Future

Preliminary engineering reports indicate that the cement resins in the Campus Center concrete assume an unusual degree of elasticity when wet.

By DAVID SPARLING

The preliminary draft of recommendations of the Committee on Orchard Hill and Residential Colleges was made public to the students of Orchard Hill last night in Webster Main Lounge.

Committee chairman Leigh Short, professor of Chemical Engineering, stressed the interim basis of the proposals saying that the main recommendation was that of the appointment of an Interim Director, for a period of not more than two years, who could work effectively with the Administration, the Faculty Senate and Orchard Hill students.

The Interim Director would have three staff assistants who would specialize in Administrative Service, Academic Affairs and Student Affairs, according to the draft. (Text of draft appears below).

There will be two committees under the Director, Personnel and Curriculum. These committees would be comprised of current faculty, staff and students of Orchard Hill. The Curriculum Committee will be made up of four O.H. students and four O.H. faculty with the Interim Director as an ex officio member. The Personnel Committee will be formed according to present personnel policy and procedures.

There would also be an Advisory Committee composed of five faculty members from the university as a whole and four O.H.students. Short emphasized that this committee would serve to "represent and support Orchard Hill" in university-related matters.

Committee member Dr. Fred Preston, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor, said that the committee's role will be "to bolster the credibility (of Orchard Hill) across campus."

The draft was presented Wednesday night to Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Robert L. Gluckstern; Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert W. Gage; and Provost Robert L. Woodbury. They will either accept or reject the Preliminary Draft, if they accept, the Committee will submit a full written report to them.

Short foresaw the main problems to be solved as the future recruitment of faculty and budgeting.

Money for Orchard Hill will come mainly from the state's 03 account. Short reminded the audience of approximately 130 people that there was competition for those funds from other programs, notably Project 10 and Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC).

Questions from the listeners centered on how much input by Orchard Hill students and staff would be allowed in the selection of the Interim Director.

That point underscored the main objection of the students—that from the selection of the Committee on, what was called by one student the "first priority", participation by students and staff currently on Orchard Hill, took a back seat to other considerations e.g. administration acceptability and logistical feasibility.

This lack of input was considered in some cases to be a legitimate complaint but Short and Preston both were of the opinion that, considering the time element and the already full workloads of the committee members, they had done what they could.

Short noted that a University of Michigan study used as a guideline took eight months to develop and the Committee had only fifteen weeks. Earlier in the discussion, Short had mentioned his disappointment with the "relatively small number of people who came to talk with us on their own initiative."

Short emphasized that this was a two year proposal and the students would have ample time to air differences with the Interim Director, and a director who cannot adapt to these differences "is not worth his salt".

"What about the present staff of Orchard Hill?" asked one member of the audience.

Short could not reply in full on the subject but he did say that it was an involved process to fire university employees and that he expected their participation and assistance if their proposal was accepted by the Administration.

Short again emphasized that the two most important policy making committees, the Personnel and Curriculum, would be made up of people internally involved in Orchard Hill.

As the Collegian went to press spirited discussion of the issues was continuing.

Committee on Orchard Hill and Residential Colleges
Preliminary Draft of Recommendations for Orchard Hill

1. Recommend appointment of an Interim Director (possibly call him/her Planning Officer) who will serve for not more than 2 years. He/she reports directly to the appropriate Vice Chancellor at Whitmore.
2. Recommend that there shall be reporting directly to the Director, 3 staff assistants, one in charge of Administrative Service, one in charge of Academic Affairs, and one in charge of Student Affairs.
3. Recommend two committees, one for personnel evaluation (the Personnel Committee) and one for curriculum (the Curriculum Committee). Both report to the Director. (see #6) (also see #7)
4. Recommend that Orchard Hill has a Planning Period that corresponds with term of Director (not more than 2 years).
5. Proposed Charge—Orchard Hill Advisory Board
   a. To advise the Director of Orchard Hill and the respective Vice Chancellors on matters relating to the educational and environmental quality of Orchard Hill.
   b. To advise on and assist in formulation of major goals for Orchard Hill.
   c. To represent and support the interests of Orchard Hill faculty, staff, and students before the various governing bodies of the University.
   d. To assist in the review and assessment of Orchard Hill programs and activities.
6. We strongly recommend that there be a Personnel Committee to evaluate regularly and systematically performance of faculty and professional staff at Orchard Hill. The composition of which is to be determined by all of above, in accordance with currently existing personnel policy and procedures.
7. We recommend that there be a Curriculum Committee made up of 4 faculty and 4 students with the Director ex officio.
8. Composition of Advisory Board: recommend 5 faculty (4 from the campus at large, one from Academic Matters), 4 students from Orchard Hill
9. Recommend that the Administration take a classroom in a conveniently located building near Orchard Hill and turn it over to the Director.

Library To Open June 26

By ROBERTA MARTONE

By the end of June, students will have a reason to frequent the library, if only to say they have been inside the world's largest one. The move is being made and the new University Library is scheduled to open June 26, 1973.

The main concern presently is the movement of the books from Goodell to the new library, said Gordon Fretwell, Associate Director for Public Services. The "move" will begin May 24 and continue for approximately four weeks. During these four weeks, Fretwell said access to the various libraries on campus will be limited. However, Fretwell said that there would be an attempt to provide as much service as possible. This limited use of the libraries is primarily because of safety reason, said Fretwell. Fretwell also said he felt this inconvenience wouldn't affect too many people as the moving would be done after final exams and prior to the opening of summer school.

When commenting on the size of the new library, Fretwell said: "We know that certain parts are larger than needed at this time but, they will be utilized when it is necessary to expand." The new library is going to combine books from Goodell library, the SBA, Education and Landscape Architecture libraries, and also the reading materials now located in the music room of the Campus Center.

Fretwell said, "We are consolidating a number of collections. We are not getting any new books but, they have been acquiring over the years and space will eventually be used." Currently, Goodell library which is build to hold 600,000 books is now shelving over 800,000 said Fretwell.

The first floor of the 28 story library is primarily an information area. Located here will be an information desk and a circulation desk. This circulation desk will offer only limited service, as there is a circulation department on one of the upper floors.

A volunteer from the crowd drew the winning name, Gail Morin, of the Sailing Club's 10-speed bike. Suzanne Devoe, Karla Knutson and Chris Brown drew for the 3 prizes the Rugby Club offered.

WFCR on Amherst's Land?

(Courtesy Amherst Student)

An Amherst College junior has discovered while examining Pelham land title records for a field project that the antenna and transmitter of FM radio station WFCR is located on property that appears to belong to Amherst College, the Amherst Student reported.

The one-half acre of land on top of Mt. Lincoln in Pelham, east of Amherst road, had been thought to be included in 1200 acres of land donated to the University in the late fifties.

But it now appears the facilities of WFCR, which is licensed by the Federal Communications Commission to the UMass trustees, is actually on a one-half acre tract donated to Amherst College in 1935 as a gift from the widow of local realtor Frank Cadwell, the Amherst Student reported last night.

Amherst College Director of development John Callahan checked records yesterday and found a tax return indicating that the College has filed the appropriate tax exemption forms for the property from 1937 to the present, the Student said.

The discovery, if upheld legally, could mean that a long awaited upgrading of the Amherst College student radio station facilities can be completed.

There are three non-commercial FM radio stations in Amherst; two run by the University, and one run by students at Amherst College. WMUA is the student run station at UMass and broadcasts at 91.1 FM. Also on the UMass campus is WFCR, a high powered, primarily classical music station operated with the advice of the five college community.

Finally, Amherst College has for many years operated a low power, student station at 89.5 FM, but reception of the station at UMass has been hampered by a weak signal.

The Amherst College station has hoped to build transmitting facilities on the same site as WFCR on top of Mt. Lincoln but has been frustrated in the attempt for over a year, at first because of inadequate communications between administrators involved, and recently because the University believed a statue of the Mass. General Laws prohibited a private organization (such as the Amherst station) from using public land (such as that thought to be owned by the University on top of Mt. Lincoln).

Student officers of the Amherst station have voiced dispair and annoyance at the inability of what they termed "the UMass bureaucracy" to allow improvements for their station.

But if the land on which WFCR's equipment stands is indeed found to be owned by Amherst College, the tables will be turned.

If that is the case, the University will have to ask permission of Amherst College to keep its equipment on top of Mt. Lincoln and continue broadcasting.

University Treasurer Kenneth Johnson, who handles land transfers and related matters for UMass was not available for comment yesterday afternoon or evening.

But Public Affairs Director Daniel Melley, who was contacted by the Amherst Student on Wednesday expressed surprise at the newly discovered deed.

And last night, he told the Collegian that the Cadwell will and deeds will be checked today in Northampton probate court.

McDonald's Corp. Saves WGBH-TV's 'ZOOM'

BOSTON (AP)-The hamburger has come to the rescue of ZOOM, the children's program starring children that is produced for Public Television by WGBH.

The station said Thursday McDonald's Corporation, which operates fast-food stands that specialize in hamburgers, had presented WGBH with a grant of $565,000 which will enable the station to produce 39 programs in the 1973-74 season.

A cutback in supporting funds from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, announced in February, had threatened cancellation of the program, the station said.

WGBH went directly to the children to gather support to get the money to keep the program on the air. The station received 190,000 letters from children as a result of that campaign, dubbed ZOOM alarm.

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting also is supporting the program, but at about half the money required to put the program on for a full year, the station said.

Fac-Sen Proposes Fall Grade Delay

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Grades for the Fall 1973 semester will not be due in the Registrar's Office until the fifth working day of Jan. 1974, according to a motion passed during yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

In other business, recruitment of undergraduate and graduate student by industries and businesses seeking employees was referred back to committee for further study. A motion calling for procedural methods whereby degree programs could be recombined or eliminated was passed and the matter of increased parking fees was again brought up.

A change in the deadline for fall semester grades was called for by Senator Dean Alfange.

"Exams would still be scheduled before Christmas," stated Alfange, "but final semester grades would not be due until January."

Since the fall semester is now one week shorter than the spring semester, Alfange felt that teachers as well as students should not be severely rushed to complete all their academic work in December, before Christmas recess. However, faculty were encouraged, in the final working of the motion, to submit their grades to the Registrar at the earliest possible date.

In a written response, Ralph D. Jones, UMass Registrar, stated the following arguments for the defeat of the Alfange motion: 1) this procedure would interfere with the January term, 2) students would have difficulty submitting late work, because classes would not be in session, 3) fall semester grades could not be finalized until after spring semester schedules were mailed, 4) graduating students could be delayed in applying for jobs or graduate schools, and 5) complications would result in the registrar's office due to the processing of grades and schedules at the same time.

Most of the above dissentions were cleared up when the deadline for grades was proposed to be early in the month, on Jan. 5.

Two motions regarding on-campus recruitment were referred back to committee for further study. In the first motion, all recruiters at UMass would have to consent to discuss and debate their corporate and/or personnel policies in an open forum, if they were so requested in a petition containing at least 100 faculty and student signatures.

Open, on-campus recruiting by corporations and businesses seeking employees from among the student population would be maintained in its present manner, in the second of these motions.

A questionnaire of those students interviewed by prospective employers would be developed by the Career Planning and Placement Service.

Senator Joseph S. Larson proposed that procedures be set up so that changes in degree programs could be regulated, under the Academic Matters Committee of the Fac-Sen. The Larson motion passed.

Maintainance of the parking fee at $5.00 was proposed in a motion by Senator David W. Biddle, who contended that the Parking and Transportation Council, which has recommended parking fee increases of up to $120, needed restructuring.

UMass Board of Trustee action on these parking increases has been delayed until May 25. Due to the recess of the Fac-Sen, this parking motion will be considered next week.

Springsteen Sunday

The Concert Committee announced last night that Bruce Springsteen will be the opening act of Sunday's free concert in the Stadium.

Springsteen, who the committee calls, "a breaking talent," has been signed to tour with Chicago this summer and has received rave reviews from many of the trade papers of the music industry.

His album, "Greeting from Asbury Park" identifies him as one of the future stars on the seventies; combining the styles of Van Morrison, Bob Dylan, a bit of Richie Havens and a large dose of Springsteen himself.

Springsteen will be performing at 1:00 Sunday afternoon and will be followed by Cold Blood and It's a Beautiful Day. Several busses will be running regular routes throughout the day (see page 29). There will also be concessions selling hot dogs, hamburgs, cokes, and munchies, as well as ice cream.

Parking regulations are as follows:

Police will be stationed at the entrances to all parking lots in Southwest and no cars will be permitted to enter those lots adjoining dormitory areas during the day, V Lot, the Stadium access roads, and Rockey Hill Road (which will be a tow zone) will be closed to parking and traffic.

Parking will be allowed in the following areas: F Lot, 1, 2, 5, 11, 12, 13 and 14 lots, Haigis Mall and outlying areas.

The committee has made the following requests:

"No glass containers should be brought to the Stadium for the environmental safety of all concert-goers.

Trash barrels will be placed throughout the Stadium and should be used. The committee has enough cleaning up to do.

Remember the peace and safety of everyone depends on individual responsibility and maturity. It should be a beautiful day."

Dance Ensemble In Smith Concert

The New Africa Theater Dance Ensemble, under the direction of Diana Ramos, dance instructor in the W.E.B.B. Dubois department of Afro-American studies, will be appearing in a 5-College Spring dance concert at Smith College's Theatre 14 Saturday and Sunday night.

Admission for the concert, which will be held at 8 p.m., will be $1.50 for five college students, and $2.00 for non students.

Library's Empty Spaces Allow Expansion

The next time you see the sun rising on the new library might just be next semester. If it is, the library will be open for use.

The Reference service area and the card catalogue will be located on the lower level of the library. Fretwell said, "This is where we expect the bulk of the people to go because it will also be an area of consultation." The lower level will also contain the college catalogue collection and have a special room used for micro-film reading, along with a copy machine to duplicate the micro- film. Also included on this level, said Fretwell, will be a separate room for newspapers and reading tables. Fretwell said there will be a special lounge section on this floor that will contain the Kennedy Memorial Browsing collection.

The second floor of the library will be the "Hub of Activity", according to Fretwell. This will be the main circulation area and include the reserve books.

The subsequent floors will be divided into a tree catagory pattern, said Fretwell. One floor will be a shelving area with individual study tables. This type of floor will seat 56 people. The next floor will be a study area with two large study areas and four smaller study rooms used for various special purposes. Also on this floor will be two study rooms geared for the handicapped. Small, individual study rooms with built-in desks will be included on this level. Coin operated typewriters will be made available.

On the average, these study floors should be able to set 84 people. There are six of these levels throughout the library.

The third floor in this sequence will again be a shelving floor. The three floor pattern repeats throughout the remaining floors.

An exception to this three floor pattern is found on two levels which are generally study areas similar to the fourth floor of Goodell library, said Fretwell. Level 26 is another exception. This floor will be known as the Colloquium level, and will be used for meetings relating to the library. Fretwell said eventually they hope to use this floor for audio-visual equipment. Level 25 will be used for rare book collections and University Archives.

Fretwell said the two major differences in the new library will be the stacking of 90% of the magazine periodicals. Although some will remain on lower levels. "A more convenient set-up will be that the location of books, and periodicals etc. pertaining to the same subject will be located on the same level," said Fretwell.

After the novelty of the new building wears off, he projected a 25% increase in the use of the library facilities. It is not known as yet what the building of the old library will be used for.

Book Transfer To Begin May 24

The scheduled move of books into the New University Library will begin May 24, 1973. Goodell Library, the Education Library, the Landscape Architecture Library, and the School of Business Administration Reading Room will close at 5:00 p.m. Wednesday, May 23, to begin the move to the new University Library building, which will open for business Tuesday, June 26. During this four week period, only the following limited library service will be available. Reference: Requests for information must be telephoned to 545-0150; if material is required, it may be picked up in the East Lobby of the new University Library beginning Thursday, May 24, between 9:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Circulation: Book requests may be telephoned to 545-2622, and material may be picked up as for Reference, above. Books in circulation will not be due until after the start of Summer School. Interlibrary Loan: May be arranged by telephone to Reference (545-0150). Study Space: Department Heads are asked to make as much study space as possible available in their departments for those who need it during the four-week period. Special problems should be brought to the attention of Gordon Fretwell, Associate Director for Public Services (545-0466). Users of the Library are strongly urged to make every possible effort to satisfy their library needs before May 24.

Martha Mitchell Speaks On Watergate

By HARRY ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Martha Mitchell says if her husband, John, had advance knowledge of the Watergate bugging "I didn't know—or he wouldn't have been in Washington as long as he was."

Clutching a worn family Bible, Mrs. Mitchell said, "I trust and pray to God" that her husband wasn't involved in what she's called "this dirty business."

The wife of the former attorney general was in a cheerful mood after nearly two hours of giving pretrial testimony under oath in the office of a lawyer for convicted Watergate conspirator James W. McCord Jr. The deposition was in connection with a series of Watergate-related civil suits, in which the Democrats charge the President's re-election committee with invation of privacy and the re-election committee accuses the Democrats of libel.

Mrs. Mitchell declined to talk about the coolness that reportedly has developed between the Mitchells and President Nixon. Asked their relationship, she said, "It's the same as it's always been."

The Mitchell and Nixon families were the closest of friends and at one time the President was a partner in the Mitchell law firm.

Mitchell ran Nixon's 1968 campaign and was campaign manager last year until July 1, two weeks after the break-in at the Watergate.

Since Mitchell's involvement in the Watergate became known, a coolness reportedly developed between the President and the man he made his attorney general.

Correction

Correction: In yesterday's Collegian it was incorrectly reported that the payment of board fees for unrestrained dogs would amount to $.50 per day. The amount is $2.50 per day. Robert Ryan, UMass dog officer said that he would invoke the same penalty for campus dogs as now exists for unrestrained dogs in Amherst.

Walk For Medical Aid To Indochina

There is going to be a walk for Medical Aid to Indochina this Sunday in Northampton, beginning at noon on Main Street right in front of the City Hall. It is being sponsored by The American Friends Service Committee, Catholic Charities Appeal and the Council of Churches.

Each walker must find people to sponsor him for a sum of money/mile. There are two routes mapped out—a 15 mile route and a 20 mile route.

Mass. Big On Pizza

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts is big on pizzas, according to a report from Auditor Thaddeus Buczko.

Buczko's accounting of the Bureau of Nutrition Education and School Food Services commented in pizzas that are made, in part, with donated commodities. This Education Department agency, he said, contracted with the Cheese Corporation of America for pizzas at $1.05 per dozen.

In a six-month period last year, the company supplied 148,362 dozen, Buczko noted.

In an audit of another agency released Thursday, Buczko also reported that the state is charging some prisoners $24.50 per week for room-and-board. From other sources, it was indicated some convicts are looking for a rent reduction.

Prisoners paying for their keep are on work-release programs from the Prison Camp run by the Department of Correction in Plymouth, Buczko said. Inmates within 18 months of parole or release are eligible to be considered for a job outside the institution.

Fighting Spreads In Lebanon

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Palestinian guerrillas fired at Beirut's international airport late Thursday night as heavy fighting between the guerrillas and government troops raged on.

Lebanese air force jets earlier rocketed and strafed guerrilla positions near the airport.

In the second day of fighting in and around the capital, army tanks blasted at guerrillas holed up inside apartment houses. Reports reaching Beirut said the clashes had spread to other parts of the nation, near the Israeli border.

Lebanon is a reluctant host to Palestinian guerrillas because of Israeli strikes inside its territory in retaliation for Palestinian attacks.

Reliable sources said guerrillas also had begun infiltrating into Lebanon from Syria, in response to appeals from the guerrialla command in Beirut.

On the political front, Prime Minister Amin Hafez of Lebanon threatened to resign unless there were "positive developments or changes" in the current crisis. He declined to elaborate.

Sources said President Suleiman Franjieh of Lebanon had been in telephone contact with Yasir Arafat, leader of Al Fatah, the parent guerrilla organization.

The Lebanese army command said its losses in the two days of action were 14 soldiers killed, one missing and 51 wounded. Police reported they lost three men killed and eight wounded in Thursday's fighting. The guerrillas said they lost 47 men killed and 100 wounded in Wednesday's action but gave no casualty figures for the second day of battles. Civilian casualties were reported by officials as 10 to 13 killed, all on Wednesday. Civilian casualties for the second day were unknown.

Fighting was heavy throughout the day, especially around the Camille Chamoun sports stadium near the airport.

An American housewife living in an apartment house in that area told The Associated Press by telephone: "We're on the floor. Bullets are flying all over the place. Every window is broken. The guerrillas are surrounding the place."

Life in Beirut, a Middle East tourist and financial center, came to a virtual standstill. A 24-hour curfew was in effect. Residents watched the battles from apartment balconies.

Richardson To Name Prosecutor

WASHINGTON (AP)—Atty. Gen. designate Elliot L Richardson promised Republican senators Thursday he will name an independent prosecutor in the Watergate case "in the next day or two," Senate sources said.

Richardson was reported to have asked senators about naming of such a prosecutor and they were unanimous in saying one should be appointed, the sources said.

Richardson in turn promised he would name one before the start of his May 9 confirmation hearings, the sources said.

They quoted Richardson as saying he will call a news conference in the next day or two to name his choice.

Senators said previously that Richardson had made no commitment and he himself told newsmen: "I have the whole question under deliberation."

Richardson's choice was not learned. Speculation centered on Philadelphia lawyer William T. Coleman, 52, a former member of the now- defunct Price Commission.

Coleman, reached at his office in Philadelphia, declined to comment on whether he had been asked to take on the task.

Earlier, Sen. Birch Bayh, D—Ind., a member of the Judiciary Committee which must pass on Richardson's nomination, said he believed approval should hinge on Richardson's cooperation with the Senate Watergate investigating committee.

"The nomination should be made contingent on all members of the committee getting access to the FBI Watergate files," Bayh said. "The worst thing that could happen," he said, "is the appearance that not all the relevant information is coming out."

In another development, Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson, D—Ill., circulated a letter for signature by all senators telling Richardson the qualifications and powers a special prosecutor would be expected to possess.

The letter called for a "relentless" investigation and appeared to accept the speedy appointment of a special prosecutor as inevitable.

The Stevenson letter called for the appointment of a prosecutor of highest ability with powers broad enough to investigate "all illegal conduct arising out of the conduct of the President's recent campaign and the growing evidence that justice has been obstructed . . ."

Earlier this week, Sen. Charles H. Percy, R—Ill., won Senate consent for a resolution proposing that President Nixon name a special Watergate prosecutor immediately.

The Percy action became controversial because only five senators were on the floor when it was approved and other senators later called it a "slap in the face" to the President.

Meanwhile, Rep. Peter Rodino, D—N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, introduced a bill that would require the appointment of a special Watergate prosecutor.

Unlike the Senate's Percy resolution which urges the appointment of a special prosecutor but has no legal effect, Rodino's bill would make the appointment mandatory if it became law.

College Girl Joins Vatican Study On Women

A 20-year-old college woman from Atlanta is the youngest member of a new Vatican commission to study ways to liberate women in the Roman Catholic church.

Deborah Schellman, a sophomore at the two-year Marymount College in Arlington, Va., will go to Rome this summer for a seminar on such controversial questions as whether the church should open the way for women deacons and women priests.

But Pope Paul VI has reserved the right to make all final decisions himself.

The 26-member commission, which has a majority of women, was asked Thursday to study what makes women "happy or unhappy, their aspirations and frustrations."

Haldeman And Ehrlichman 'Confident Of Acquittal'

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Presidential associates H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman began testifying before the Watergate grand jury Thursday. Their lawyer said they are confident of acquittal if indicted.

Both men resigned from the White House staff Monday after news accounts and other sources linked them to an alleged coverup of the Watergate wiretapping. Ehrlichman has been tied to two other scandals as well, an alleged burglary in the Pentagon papers case and a Lebanese bank deal promoted by accused mutual fund looter Robert L. Vesco.

Haldeman, who had been Nixon's chief of staff, and Ehrlichman, his chief domestic adviser, spent the morning talking with chief prosecutor Earl Silbert.

They began giving testimony in the afternoon. Ehrlichman went first. Their lawyer, John J. Wilson, said neither would claim any protection against self-incrimination.

Wilson was asked by newsmen if his clients fear they will be indicted. "I don't know about that," he said. "But they have no fear of being convicted."

Meanwhile Thursday reports, rumors and speculation mounted from many sides, saying that Elliot L. Richardson, named by the President to be attorney general, is about to select a special prosecutor to take over the case. Richardson said only, "I have the whole question under deliberation."

One of Ehrlichman's former proteges, Egil Krogh, was reliably reported to be preparing a complete statement about his involvement with Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy, who are alleged to have burglarized the office of a psychiatrist treating Daniel Ellsberg, defendant in the Pentagon Papers trial.

Papers Judge Demands Hunt's Testimony

By LINDA DEUTSCH

LOS ANGELES (AP) - E. Howard Hunt's testimony before a Washington D.C., grand jury about an alleged burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office was ordered turned over to the Pentagon papers trial judge Thursday.

Chief U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica in Washington ordered the action after Judge Matt Byrne in Los Angeles demanded the government tell him anything Hunt told the Washington grand jury about the alleged burglary.

Prosecutors told Judge Sirica during a brief hearing in Washington that Hunt, a convicted Watergate conspirator, had testified about the burglary. Sirica ordered relevant portions of the grand jury minutes forwarded to Judge Byrne.

In Los Angeles, defense attorneys told reporters outside court their sources have told them Hunt told the grand jury that there was a burglary of psychiatrist Lewis Fielding's office and that Hunt and another Watergate conspirator, G. Gordon Liddy, "participated in the burglary and were in Fielding's office."

Byrne, who has repeatedly ordered the government to tell him everything about Watergate and White House involvement in the prosecution of Ellsberg, was obviously angered by a memo from Watergate prosecutor Earl J. Silbert in which Silbert refused to give the judge new information.

Silburt, who broke the news last week burglarized Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office, said his information came from a "confidential source" he couldn't reveal.

"Silbert can't say this is a confidential source," Byrne said. "If it's a grand jury source, I want to know that." The Silbert memo was written prior to Judge Sirica's ruling.

Byrne previously voiced suspicions that the Watergate probers in Washington were keeping information from him.

Nixon Warns . . .

N. Viets Risk War With U.S.

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—North Vietnam risks renewed war with the United States unless it lives up to the Vietnam ceasefire and withdraws its forces from Cambodia and Laos, President Nixon said Thursday.

He also indicated the chances of improved U.S. relations with the Soviet Union and China are threatened by what he said was continued North Vietnamese aggressions.

This fourth and strongest warning over claimed Communist violations of the Jan. 27 settlement came in Nixon's annual State of the World message to Congress.

He indicated American tolerance has been tested to the breaking point and Hanoi now has two choices.

"The first is to exploit the Vietnam agreement and press its objectives in Indochina. In this case it would continue to infiltrate men and material into South Vietnam, keep its forces in Laos and Cambodia and through pressure or outright attack renew its aggression against our friends."

By picking this path, Nixon stated, Hanoi "would endanger the hard won gains for peace in Indochina. It would risk revived confrontation with us." This was the plainest language Nixon has used in dealing with North Vietnam since the war was supposed to have ended more than three months ago.

"The second course is for North Vietnam to pursue its objectives peacefully," he said. This would mean total observance of the Vietnam settlement, including full accounting of missing American servicemen and a removal of all North Vietnamese troops from Laos and Cambodia.

"If North Vietnam chooses the peaceful option, the United States remains committed to better relations," Nixon said. This includes the U.S. economic aid he said is essential to a lasting peace.

Vietnam was only one of the sections covered specifically in Nixon's 232-page report. Henry A. Kissinger in briefing newsmen pleaded that they give the other sections attentions:

Efforts to improve relations with mainland China should continue, even though he realizes there will be continuing frictions over ideology and views of history.

—The United States and the Soviet Union have taken the "essential first step in freeing" themselves from Cold War confrontation.

This means, Nixon explained, that the obstacles are cleared for long-term, substantive agreements on limitation of offensive nuclear weapons, trade, troops cuts in Europe and in efforts to solve the Middle East conflict.

—Western Europe has to realize its otherwise welcome drive for economic regionalism cannot be at the expense of the American trade position.

While Nixon pledged the United States would "never compromise the security of Europe or the interests of our allies," it is time for the Atlantic Alliance members to stop debate and get one with new programs.

—The inevitable recovery of Japan and its immense new economic strength means a new Washington-Tokyo relationship.

Wholesale Prices Continue To Rise

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Wholesale prices of industrial goods rose sharply last month, but some farm and food prices declined for the first time in six months, the Labor Department said Thursday.

Meat prices dropped 2.9 per cent in April, presumably reflecting the nationwide consumer meat boycott and the price ceilings imposed by President Nixon late in March.

But prices of industrial commodities including raw materials and finished manufactured goods, jumped 1.4 per cent in April, the steepest monthly hike since the early Korean War Year of 1951.

The industrial prices are considered a better barometer of inflation than volatile food prices.

The over-all Wholesale Price Index rose eight-tenths of one per cent, following a record 2.2 per cent increase in March. The rate of advance was considered sharp, though not as steep as in previous months.

President Nixon's chief economics adviser, Herbert Stein, attributed the rise in industrial commodities to "the strength of the worldwide boom" and the recent devaluation of the dollar.

Stein said the imposition of tighter controls on price increases of major corporations, announced Wednesday by Nixon, "should also slow down price increases and in some cases may bring about price reductions."

As for wholesale prices of farm products, he predicted they would continue to fluctuate in the coming months but was confident they had reached their peak.

According to the Labor Department's report, prices of farm products, processed foods and feeds on the wholesale level declined seven-tenths of one per cent in April following five consecutive months of sharp gains.

However, consumer foods ready for sale in retail stores rose 1.4 per cent seasonally adjusted.

AFL-CIO President George Meany said the latest figures prove prices "are completely out of control."

"It is obvious that the President's meager action of yesterday will not meet the problem," Meany declared. "Americans can expect the usual crop of optimistic forecasts from administration spokesman, but what the nation needs is effective across-the-board prices controls, not more rhetoric."

The over-all price rise in prices pushed the Wholesale Price Index from 129.7 in March to 130.7 last month, meaning that it cost wholesalers on the average $30.70 more for goods worth $100 in the 1967 base period. This was 11.2 per cent above a year ago.

Cambodian Positions Overrun By Antigovernment Forces

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Communist forces in Cambodia overran two government battalions near the South Vietnamese border, reports from Phnom Penh said Thursday. The Viet Cong and South Vietnamese held another round of their deadlocked political talks in Paris.

Sources in Phnom Penh said antigovernment troops killed 20 Cambodian soldiers and captured 580 others when the positions were overrun on Monday near Neak Luong on the Mekong River.

Fighting raged Wednesday and Thursday between insurgents and three government battalions south of Neak Luong, but there were no immediate reports of casualties.

The Cambodian government identified the antigovernment forces as Vietnamese Communists. Government censors prohibit use of the term Cambodian insurgents, but diplomats believe the bulk of the Communist forces are Cambodians.

Insurgents occupy the 28-mile eastern shore of the Mekon River north and south of Phnom Penh, and one military source said they hold an area two miles from Phnom Penh.

The sources said the government began efforts to dislodge the rebels April 25 but has made little progress.

Shock waves from U.S. bombing of Communist positions have been felt in Phnom Penh almost every day since the offensive began.

Meanwhile, in other Indochina developments:

-President Nixon said North Vietnam risks renewed war with the United States unless it withdraws its forces from Cambodia and Laos.

Hanoi would risk resumption of the war, Nixon said, if it continues to "infiltrate men and material into South Vietnam, keeps its forces in Laos and Cambodia and, through pressure or outright attack, renews its aggression against our friends."

-Peking said the Phnom Penh government was "falling apart rapidly."

-The Saigon government charged that the Viet Cong were trying to scuttle the international peacekeeping body by shooting at its helicopters. Two helicopters carrying peacekeeping officials drew ground fire Wednesday over Communist-held territory on a flight plan agreed to by the Communists. The helicopters were not hit.

The over-all Wholesale Price Index rose eight-tenths of one per cent, following a record 2.2 per cent increase in March. The rate of advance was considered sharp, though not as steep as in previous months.

President Nixon's chief economics adviser, Herbert Stein, attributed the rise in industrial commodities to "the strength of the worldwide boom" and the recent devaluation of the dollar.

Stein said the imposition of tighter controls on price increases of major corporations, announced Wednesday by Nixon, "should also slow down price increases and in some cases may bring about price reductions."

As for wholesale prices of farm products, he predicted they would continue to fluctuate in the coming months but was confident they had reached their peak.

According to the Labor Department's report, prices of farm products, processed foods and feeds on the wholesale level declined seven-tenths of one per cent in April following five consecutive months of sharp gains.

However, consumer foods ready for sale in retail stores rose 1.4 per cent seasonally adjusted.

AFL-CIO President George Meany said the latest figures prove prices "are completely out of control."

"It is obvious that the President's meager action of yesterday will not meet the problem," Meany declared. "Americans can expect the usual crop of optimistic forecasts from administration spokesman, but what the nation needs is effective across-the-board prices controls, not more rhetoric."

The over-all price rise in prices pushed the Wholesale Price Index from 129.7 in March to 130.7 last month, meaning that it cost wholesalers on the average $30.70 more for goods worth $100 in the 1967 base period. This was 11.2 per cent above a year ago.

Cambodian Positions Overrun By Antigovernment Forces

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Communist forces in Cambodia overran two government battalions near the South Vietnamese border, reports from Phnom Penh said Thursday. The Viet Cong and South Vietnamese held another round of their deadlocked political talks in Paris.

Sources in Phnom Penh said antigovernment troops killed 20 Cambodian soldiers and captured 580 others when the positions were overrun on Monday near Neak Luong on the Mekong River.

Fighting raged Wednesday and Thursday between insurgents and three government battalions south of Neak Luong, but there were no immediate reports of casualties.

The Cambodian government identified the antigovernment forces as Vietnamese Communists. Government censors prohibit use of the term Cambodian insurgents, but diplomats believe the bulk of the Communist forces are Cambodians.

Insurgents occupy the 28-mile eastern shore of the Mekon River north and south of Phnom Penh, and one military source said they hold an area two miles from Phnom Penh.

The sources said the government began efforts to dislodge the rebels April 25 but has made little progress.

Shock waves from U.S. bombing of Communist positions have been felt in Phnom Penh almost every day since the offensive began.

Meanwhile, in other Indochina developments:

-President Nixon said North Vietnam risks renewed war with the United States unless it withdraws its forces from Cambodia and Laos.

Hanoi would risk resumption of the war, Nixon said, if it continues to "infiltrate men and material into South Vietnam, keeps its forces in Laos and Cambodia and, through pressure or outright attack, renews its aggression against our friends."

-Peking said the Phnorm Penh government was "falling apart rapidly."

-The Saigon government charged that the Viet Cong were trying to scuttle the international peacekeeping body by shooting at its helicopters. Two helicopters carrying peacekeeping officials drew ground fire Wednesday over Communist-held territory on a flight plan agreed to by the Communists. The helicopters were not hit.

Vatican To Study Possibility Of Women Priests

By EDWARD MAGRI
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY (AP) - Pope Paul VI named a special commission Thursday to study, among other things, whether women should be accepted as priests in the Roman Catholic Church. Commission members range from an American college sophomore to an Italian bishop.

The Pope's instructions direct the commission to investigate means of "liberating" women both in the Church and in society at large.

The commission comprises 26 members, 15 of them women, including its youngest member, Deborah Schellman, 19, of Atlanta, G.; a sophomore at Marymount College in Arlington, Va. It is headed by Bishop Enrico Bertoletti of Lucca, Italy.

A Vatican statement said the commission was instructed to study what makes women "happy or unhappy, their aspirations and their frustrations."

The commission is to be independent of other Vatican bodies and responsible directly to the Pope. He gave it power to expand research to all problems related with women's liberation, but reserved all final decisions to himself.

Pope Paul created the commission in response to a recommendation of the 1971 synod of world bishops.

The Vatican said the commission should work to help "men as well as women realize the obstacles and possibilities toward enhancing the role of women in the various social communities. . . .family, professions, cities, nations. . ."

"Another task of the commission is that of studying and enhancing the position and the functions of the woman in the Church. . .and the possibilities for real promotion of womenin the various fields of the life and the mission of the Church."

Pope Paul drew criticism from liberals when he allowed laymen to be installed by bishops as lectors, or Bible readers, and acolytes, or altar assistants, but barred women.

The pontiff, however, indicated willingness to revise his stand in March, when he ruled that any Roman Catholic, regardless of sex, could distribute the consecretated host for Communion.

Law Against Blockbusting Upheld

BOSTON (AP) - The state's anti-blockbusting statute was held constitutional Thursday in a ruling by Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn.

The ruling was issued to Mrs. Glendora Putnam, chairman of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, who had asked if the new law violated the free speech amendment of the U. S. Constitution.

The intent of the bill is to prohibit speculation about the possible entry "of certain persons into a neighborhood," especially for the purpose of "inducing the sale, purchase or rental. . .associated with the entry of certain persons."

Settlement Asked In Wounded Knee

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Church leaders Thursday appealed to all sides in the drawn-out conflict over the Indian occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., to use "every precaution" to prevent a threatened armed battle Friday over the besieged village.

A threatened "invasion by the vigilantes . . . could only result in massive loss of human life," said a statement by the National Council of Churches, which has kept an observer team on hand at the scene of the two-months confrontation to try to help mediate it.

At the same time, the Council urged elimination or reduction of bail bonds set for indicted or arrested participants in the Wounded Knee seizure, saying fear of high bail has been a major obstacle to settlement.

The Council offered to serve as an aid to the courts in "assuring the appearance in court of all persons thus relieved of bond demands."

However, the Rev. Dr. David Hunter, the Council's deputy general secretary and coordinator of its South Dakota mediation effort, said the Council itself could not post bonds such as those that have been set in the six-figure range.

Air-India's youth fares can get you around Europe on a denim budget.

Far away from the student union are places you've never been before. Or places you'd like to see again. Places you thought you couldn't afford until youth fares came along.

But there's more than the fare to enjoy. On Air-India you'll be treated like everyone else. As though you're very special. And there's atmosphere on an Air-India flight. Sari'd girls to serve you. Unusual food and music. Not the usual airline scene, but one you'd expect from the people that brought sensory awareness to the world.

Air-India's economy fares for people between the ages of 12 to 21 are $226 from New York to London, $238 to Paris, $243 to Frankfurt or Rome until June and after August. From June through August the fares are $22 to $32 higher.

Make your reservations now and we'll confirm them a week before you leave.

Next time someone says, "See ya' around," you can say, "See ya' around England." Or France. Or Switzerland, Germany, Belgium or Holland. Air-India can fly you to places you thought were beyond the means of your jeans.

Well, lets see, if I hang it over the front, it's bound to get caught in the spokes . . . nope, it's uncomfortable around my waist . . . there's no way I'll wear it today . . . I wonder it it'll hang alright from my purse? . . . I guess that's ok . . .(total elapsed time, eight (8) minutes! . . . Another day, another problem solved.

These students will graduate with more than just a surface knowledge of the world.

Imagine an exquisite stillness broken only by the sound of your own breathing as you float effortlessly through a world of shimmering pastel colors. Velvet plants undulate in currents that simulate gentle breezes. A school of tiny silver-blue fish sparkle around your head as they dart by. A striped parrot fish peeks into your mask to say hello.

Your legs pump in long graceful motions as you move through deep blue water fragmented by golden shafts of sunlight. And as you float along, a part of this magnificent environment, you are so happy that you can stay there. Just sitting around on the ocean floor. Just sitting and staring and grooving on this incredible new world.

And now for the best part. Scuba diving is easy to learn. It isn't a sport you have to practice for months before you can enjoy it. You'll be down there blowing your mind the first or second day.

After learning about the equipment, breathing techniques and safety procedures in a pool or some shallow water, you'll soon feel confident enough to try your new skills under the constant supervision of expert divers and instructors. And when you complete the seven day course, you'll graduate as a certified scuba diver.

This summer take a week or weekend diving in the Virgin Islands.

Or a week in Mexico—diving off the island of Cozumel and exploring the ancient Mayan ruins in the Yucatan. Either way you'll meet some nice new people.

And you'll cram enough excitement, memories, and first-hand knowledge into your vacation to last for the rest of the summer. And more likely, for the rest of your life.

Skinner's Case

Frank Skinner got a raw deal.

Frank returned to UMass in January 1972, from industry to obtain his Master's degree. His advisor encouraged him to participate in a research project, in hopes of obtaining a grant. Frank, after a semester's research, compiled a 120 page report, and then waited, passing up a summer job with his former employer. The money came in July, and he started working full time through November, when he started working up to 80 hours a week to meet a deadline.

Three days before that deadline, Frank's wife became ill, and her doctor told her that someone must be with her at all times. When he informed a professor, who was an investigator on the grant, that he needed emergency help for the project since he had to stay with his wife, the professor told him he was obliged to continue working. In other words, the contract was more important than his wife's safety. A minor argument developed, in which Frank offered to resign, but his advisor didn't want his resignation; he wanted him to complete the work. Fortunately, a student nurse was available to stay with his wife, so he was able to continue working.

The day after Frank completed his project, his advisor asked him to resign. He had been officially terminated from his contract. The reason: a "personality conflict" existed. Since then, Frank has tried to use every means the University provides to obtain "due process" which is his right, under the contract, to have a fair hearing. However, the University has officially fulfilled its obligation by offering him a last-minute Teaching Assistantship and the opportunity to take on additional research work. He still has the termination on his record, and two of his project grades, which his Department Head assured him would be A's, dropped to B's. He may graduate this June with these problems unresolved and no fair trial in sight.

Frank Skinner's case is important because it points up the inadequacies of Teaching Assistantship contracts and Research Assistantship contracts. As they stand now, Teaching and Research Assistants have little protection under the existing interpretation of the contract. Administrators generally agree that a professor should have absolute authority over his grant, and procedural due process is his only obligation to his assistant. To obtain a fair hearing, in which both opposing parties are equally represented on a deciding body, the assistant must be covered, in writing, by substantive due process. The T.A. and R.A. contracts do not specify which due process will be used. Furthermore, the contracts do not protect the assistants from extra-heavy work loads or transfer to undesirable work.

The University may be testing the new complacency of the campus in regards to students' rights, judging from their unwillingness to bring Frank Skinner's case to court. Frank is anxious to clear his record and get back to his engineering projects. It is imperative that Frank Skinner's test case, which will pave the way to more satisfactory R.A. and T.A. contracts, be brought to court while students are still on campus to support him, and before the semester is over.

Three Is A Crowd

There is a possibility that there will be 200 triples next year. For those people who were not here during the hay-day of tripling, tripling is when three people live in a two person room. While there is this possibility, it is not definite at this time. There may not be any triples at all next year. Even if there are triples next year they may last for only a short time.

The Housing Office at the present time has about 200 more people than it has spaces for next year. This includes the class of '77. Almost every year the number of people who reserve rooms is greater than the number of people who occupy rooms. So, if nothing else happens there will be less than 200 triples at worst and no triples at best. The Housing Office can control the number of people living on campus next year in different ways. They can grant more exceptions for people to live off campus than they usually do, and they can encourage people living in certain areas to move off campus.

In past years there has been both tripling and empty spaces. This occurred because there were not enough spaces for males and too many for females. The advent of the coed dorm has affected this drastically. The Housing Office can control the male-female ratio in these dorms; this will provide for an outlet for Freshmen men. So that if there is tripling, the triples will not be confined to male dorms; there will be an equal number of triples in each dorm, approximately, and there will be about the same number of triples for men and women.

An important question to ask is why is there even talk of triples? There are few things worse than triples. Two closets and bureaus for three people, two desks and bookcases for three people, and one more roommate to have hassles with, not to mention the problem of getting three stereos into one room. There is talk of tripling because for the first time in three years the dorms will be filled to near capacity. Projected figures for next year indicate that the dorms will operate at about 98 percent capacity. This is because of the renting of Hills and the decreased number of people trying to get off campus. If Hills had not been rented, then the dorms would be about 96 percent full. The number of people who asked to move off campus next year has decreased by two-thirds. Hills was rented, not sold. The dorm complex could some day be returned to the Housing Department but this is not seen in the near future. In my opinion, one of the reasons why fewer people are moving off campus is because of coed dorms; they make dorm life a little more liveable. So, coed dorms are both a help and a hinderance to the Housing Office.

Tripling will be avoided if at all possible. The chances of long- and short-term tripling are difficult to calculate. A long-term triple is one that lasts a semester; a short-term triple lasts a few days. At the present time, no one can say if there will be triples or not. Freshmen are assigned to dorms in lots. A Head of Residence is given so many freshmen to house. It might be that in the first few days of the semester there are some people living in triples until it is possible to determine who will not be returning. After this, triples would be disbanded if there were enough rooms. If an opening appears in another dorm, residents of triples will be provided with transportation to their new homes.

Will there be triples next year? Maybe for a few days, but not for the whole semester, I think. The Housing Office isn't planning on them right now, if there were, triples next year about 200 angry freshmen might lynch the entire Housing Office.

Read All About It

"Have you ever seen the faces of the children? They get so excited."-Peter Townshend

I. Sho' Nuff'n'Yes I do

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, they certainly do get excited, and it is a fine week for name-calling, what with Mark Vogler being called Mickey Mouse (in last Friday's Poor Richard's), the Collegian being called "UMass' answer to the yellow press" (sorry Judith Katz--it's just that you can coin a phrase so well--and this ain't a personal attack, by the way), and everybody--I mean everybody--calling Stokely Carmichael a list of names which serve so cleverly to avoid the purpose and points of Mr. Carmichael's message. And I mean everybody but everybody calling Nixon an asshole, but it would seem that we're missing the point.

The point is that I feel that everybody is getting badmouthed to a certain degree. Go on, call Nixon an asshole, but it does not change the fact that he is the President of the U.S.--and, like it or not, Massachusetts is still pretty much alone in its contempt of the walking Milhous. Sad words, but true. Go on call somebody a 'dirty, filthy name' if you want, but it boils down to the kids seeing what new toy they can kick around on Christmas morning, until they get tired of it, and decide that the toy wasn't worth having after all.

On to Mr. Carmichael...a has-been? Let us say that the government doesn't need 'brain police'. The ranks are already selling with ready-mades. ("Are you big, strong, and stupid? The Los Angeles Sheriff's office needs you..." quote Henry Vestine of Canned Heat).

Stokely Carmichael, who flipped out an entire nation during the sixties with two words--Black Power--and here is a media projection that can not be controlled. (Ah, but it can...how? Look and grow wise). He doesn't follow Marxist doctrine to the line, obviously the standard of a shaky character (especially since Marxism like most political doctrines, is shaky stuff). Oh, he's not a doctrinaire Marxist? Oh, well then, we'll have to make sure he knows his facts before he goes on stage again and embarrasses us all by telling the truth rather than fitting into our neat mathematical formulae--or even worse, creating a new science. Oh, horrors! And besides, who's Carmichael kidding, he's living it up with Miriam Makeba...Yep, there are a lot of ways you can rationalize your former statements away--witness Nixon at the Watergate Deal. And, really, these rationalizations are nifty, because they can stop you from bringing up any serious discussion which might be painful to you. The audience response (have you ever seen anything more sad than a '60's radical trying to make something out of this set-up. My God, it is sad.) Okay, I'll do something constructive for a change, and "accentuate the positive", as Mr. Carmichael said (I'm not black, but several times during the speech Carmichael made references as to what 'white youth' could do, so I do fit into that category), so here goes:

We're all basically all right. It's just that we've been misinformed. Okay?

II. "EXTREE, EXTREE . . ."

Taking the increasing hostility that the Senate treats almost any RSO group with (RSO means Recognized Student Organization), the Collegian might not have come out today, due to a cut in budget, and all the consequences that come out of that.

However, fate smiles upon the foolish, so the Collegian got funded despite the fact that it's a second-rate scandal sheet.

Okay, so this brings us up to the near present. Hopefully, after a few trial runs this semester (and a lot of trial runs next semester) the paper of the Campus Community will become a true community newspaper, and that is, along with the improved news coverage that Gabe Imperato spoke about in his column last week, we shall also be accepting (this is not official policy, yet, by the way) local contributions that might (and probably should) have nothing to do with standard news coverage, but would more or less be written in fairly legible manner (not like my editorials--if such they can be called) about life around UMass by normal UMies, rather than by a group of aspiring journalists. Imagine what a "normal student" could do if he went to a Faculty Senate meeting, and put down impressions? Scandalous, I dare say--and probably more news oriented than a formal news story (Lest the News Staff gets on my back--you write fine standard news stories).

Okay, now that I've alienated everybody I know, maybe we can all stand on opposite banks of the campus pond and call each other names. And you can wager (if you've got the cash), that my first line to you will be:

I wish you realization.

"If the restaurant sells, food, someone must pick up the garbage."

Cost Of An Awful Waffle

By Walter Jonas

The campus Center / Student Union Complex, as every student learns when he pays his semester fees, is quite expensive. Last school year each semester he or she paid $31.50; Next year he or she shall pay $26 each Semester. Last year he or she might imagine that the money he or she spent paid for the student activities which it did, in part. Next year, for $52, he or she will be paying for the building and its operations, or more precisely, the difference between what the building generates in revenue and what it costs to run it.

At the end of the 1971-72 school year, the management of the campus center realized that they would fall $300,000 short of expected revenues, roughly $15 a student. There were no resignations, but the student governments did reorganize the old Student Union Governing Board into the present Campus Center Board of Governors, from a SUG to a BOG. In part as the result of the actions of the present Board, the manager of the building, and the manager of the food services of the building have resigned. Furthermore we now have, for the first time, budgeting by profit center (the Hatch and the TOC being separated rather than lumped together) and the University Store (audio, clothing, books, etc.) (the text book sales and clothing store the same) as opposed to the past when management had not the information to inform board members about the relative profitability of the various operations.

Both of these are major accomplishments. The first is because we, the students of the university, have asserted control over our lives and have, for better or worse, stated both plainly and forcefully that if we did not like the job certain administrators were doing, then they, and not the students, would cease to be involved in operations of our campus center. The second is important because we, with the help of a State Auditor's report, forced the management to keep books in such a way that the operation of the building might be comprehensible to any person who took the time to study the figures.

And now for an aside: This was not easy. The students, operating without the technical expertise of the

Fag Hag Tells All

By FAY APPLE

It all started when I was thirteen. I thought he loved me. He called me every day, I saw him in school, he used to carry my books, my house was his second home. And how I adored him, Benny, my first love. He would help me shop, shortshorts were in that spring. Benny and I had matching blue denim shortshorts and red and white checked tank tops. One night he slept over, it wasn't unusual. But when I went in to ask what time he wanted to go rollerskating the next day I found brother and him making funny noises under the sheets in the top bunk. Finally it all became clear, Benny had used me to get to my brother Billy. I was crushed.

Then there was Josh. We were tap dancing partners for years. He had the best twostep in the whole school. We used to buy hair-do magazines and experiment on each other. I was madly in love with him. I was positive he would ask me to the junior prom. I envisioned myself the queen of the prom, dancing slow and oh so close. As prom time approached I was confident my dreams would come true. We even looked at gowns together. Then came the horrible blow. Josh told me that someone else had asked him and he couldn't refuse. I sat home alone that night and watched Bye Bye Birdie on TV. He and his date came over before they left to show off. I have to admit, they looked great. The french curls I had bought weeks before didn't go to waste, nor did the pink chiffon empire waist gown with scattered rosebuds on the bodice. Peter looked pretty sharp too in his powder blue tuxedo.

At this point in my life I began to question myself. My childhood seemed normal. I was toilet trained at twenty months, I liked to wear dresses, I played with dolls, my parents were happily married, there wasn't one thalidamide baby on either side of the family, I wore nylons for the first time in sixth grade. Puberty was not all that trying. I was not ashamed of my body, I did not envy anyone's penis. Perhaps it was my genetic make-up. I was ashamed to even admit it to myself, but it was true, I was a fag hag. I had this extraordinary talent of becoming friends with faggots. Worse than that I had the unfortunate misfortune of falling in love with faggots. But, as I told myself, I didn't know that they were faggots until I was hopelessly in love. That was the problem. I wrote to Ann Landers. She advised me to talk it over with my mother or some older woman. She also told me not to worry, that it was only a stage and I would grow out of it. She told me that the increase of faggots was due to the pressures and complexities of our sick morals in society. As long as I did not know that the boys were faggots at the start of the relationship I could not be blamed. That helped a little. But I couldn't talk to my mother about it, how could she face the fact that her only daughter, who had never gotten below a C in anything, was a fag hag. I did however seek out Miss Paduka, the gym teacher. At our meeting she put her arm around me comfortingly and said, "well personally I think that all people are bisexual. So what's your problem?" I cried.

I decided to flush men out of my system completely. I vowed not to fall in love with anyone. I would ask on the first date, "are you a queer?" I never had many second dates. I spent more and more time with my girlfriends. They talked about sex. I couldn't share sexual experiences or first blow job stories as I had never gotten past second base. They rejected me. I turned to food.

I substituted food for friends. I gained seventy five pounds my senior year and was voted class blimp. I was miserable. I went to Camp Pretty for Overweight Girls in the Catskills for a graduation present. I lost fifty pounds the first month. I had a ball. There was so much to take your mind off food, swimming, canoeing, handball and even slim-away-belts. I was down sixty five pounds when I noticed that my roommate was a sauna freak. Every four hours she wanted to take a sauna with me. Three weeks and ten less pounds later she seduced me. I gave her Miss Paduka's address and left camp the next day. I was bummed out.

At college I started writing to a guy in Vietnam. He was cool, he sent pictures and little gifts through the mail. He looked man enough in his battle fatigues, I figured it was safe this time. I fell in love with him sight unseen. He was captured and I proudly wore his POW bracelet for two years. I was faithful to my man, I was confident. He was finally released and we met. It was wonderful, he held me tight and kissed me long and hard. Later that same night he told me he was going out with the boys and asked if he could wear the bracelet. I was confused.

I consulted mental health. They convinced me to come out of the closet. I tried. It wasn't easy but with the support of other fag hags I have become a more rounded, fulfilled person. They have taught me that fag hag is good. It is nothing to be ashamed of, it is no perversion. I now view it as a pure, almost divine occupation. I am a fag hag and I am proud.

The Hipbath, About That Hipbath

Moe DePalma sighed and put down her copy of Variety. She had just read some very bad news: the treasured part of Helen in the musical version of "Valley of the Dolls" which Jacqueline Susann Mansfield and Rod McKuen are adapting to the stage and simply calling "Valley!" went to Lorna Luft. "Another Christmas tragedy," Moe whispered with remorse. Down in the depths Moe looked about the room for something to give her a rise and she picked up the current copy of Poor Richard's. She read about the problems at the Campus Center at the University. "Heavens," she said aloud. "If I were a student again I wouldn't put up with this crap." She turned the page and read a sad saga of a girl who falls in love with the wrong boy, consistantly. "How sad, another P.O.W. tragedy. Is there no happiness left? I've always depended upon the kindness of strangers and, mind you, things have been swell for me."

How Can You Slip

She continued reading. Gay Liberation. How nice. She jotted down on her note pad to call her dyke aunt for the recipe for beef fondue she wished to get. After completing the open letter to Tennessee Williams she thought, "I always thought he was kinda funny." She then turned to read a rave review of the University Theater Production of "Macbeth" by her favorite theater critic David Steven Ritchcoff. "I knew him when," she mused. Over chicken soup and lasagna she read the interview with Archie Shepp on page fifteen then turned to read another interview, this time with Ton Rush. "Where's the soap opera personality?" she pondered, deliberately for a moment before moving on to a concert preview for Sunday's free concert in the Stadium with "It's A Beautiful Day". "And I certainly hope so." The new record reviews Moe breezed through included Shawn "Exhibitionist" Phillips, the Eagles, and Archie Shepp, then, after a jaunt to the ladies room, she read an interview with Lydia Pense of Cold Blood.

And Trip Into A Hipbath

Movies, what's at the movies. Such a Gorgeous Kid Like Me? "Well," Moe surmised, "it's no Jules and Jim and Ken Russell handles those kind of themes with much more taste anyhow, so hmmmmmph to you Don Glickstein." Next she read about Slither. "Sounds wierd," she muttered. Next came O Lucky Man! "Sounds wierd," she muttered. Turning the page she found Class of '44. "Sounds stupid," she screamed. Then she carefully scoured Weekend, coming up once to say: "Hey I think I've read most of these before." Finishing she signed, put aside Poor Richard's and stared at the headline in Variety: LUFT KO's DEPALMA: CHAMPION SIGNED TO STAGE; SUSANN SAYS "CUT THE CRAP, SISTER". "Ah, cut it yourself." Moe screamed and ordered another iced coffee.

We Hope You're Not Angry, Kiddies

Good Grief, We Forgot Charlie Brown!

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

It was a tough decision to make. Our dilemma was a real one. The question was clear. Would the public put up with a fourth straight week of unmerciful ridicule at the typewriter of two upstart journalists? Could the readers of Poor Richard's stifle their anger for another week and wade through 30 more inches of insults?

Finally the answer came to us. Forward we moved with some serious news. Oh yes, we know we promised all you loyal comic freaks the titillating thrills of Peanuts and Doonesbury today, but headlines do lie sometimes. But don't worry kids, we haven't given up on fun and games altogether. Perish the thought!

From demonstrations...

Today's task is easy and the game is simple to do, even for the avid comic reader. You'll have to have a piece of paper handy, but you can even use the bottom of this page if you have to. And don't forget to divide whatever you decide to use into two columns: label one agree, and one disagree. Next, read through this piece dealing with college students, and their backward trend to a renewed concern over money, jobs, their future, etc. For every point concluded in this study, you'll have to phase, think whether or not the conclusion holds true at UMass, then jot down a mark under either the agree or disagree column.

Now you're ready to roll. Just to give you an idea of how you're doing, if you finish with more than 100 marks on your thinking sheet, you're an extremely thoughtful UMie.

The study we'll be excerpting from was a New York Times survey of college and universities in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. Not surprisingly the conclusion held that political activism is morbid on college campuses. In addition students have taken on the superficial appearance of their self-contented socially indifferent, All-American campus counterparts of the nineteen-fifties.

The New York Times piece by Robert D. McFadden told of the new trends: They (students) are cutting their hair, studying harder and shunning esoteric life-styles. Their behavior is generally so docile that a few formerly embattled school administrators call it eerie. A few other school officials say this has been going on so long it is just boring. (If you were wide awake, you had a chance to jot down at least five marks on your tally sheet. But keep going, you'll have plenty more chances.)

After three years of campus calm that followed the uprisings over the Cambodia invasion and the Kent State killings, this postwar spring has settled in with a political sleepy-headedness unequaled since the Eisenhower years. Many students cannot recall when they last heard fiery rhetoric, let alone saw a demonstration.

National issues - as well as most state and local ones - are all but ignored. Even the Watergate scandal hardly raised an eyebrow. And while some questions involving womens' rights, local housing and campus safety occasionally cause a stir, the remaining radicals are Pirandello- like characters in search of a cause.

Though reasons vary considerably, the vast majority of students now appear to be devoted to themselves - to achieving success, acquiring money (shouldn't someone be making more of a fuss over Bill Walton's refusal of a $2 million pro basketball contract?) and having a good time - all in the most cherished, middle-class Establishment style.

The Survey of student interests, activities, concern and life-styles, supplemented by the correspondent's own observations, also pointed up the following:

---Most students believe that demonstrations and other forms of protest by students over the Vietnam war and other issues in the nineteen-sixties achieve little or nothing. The idealism of the effort is admired, but the effort itself is thought to have been unrealistic and the issues too abstract. (Ok, now, who isn't past 25 on their tally sheets?)

...to dancing

---Students are most concerned about their own pursuits and futures - about their grades, chances of getting into graduate schools and lucrative careers, marriage prospects, personal ambitions, personal friendships, and occasionally, what they consider a realistically solvable problem, such as a rash of thefts in a dormitory. (If you agreed with less than four of the aforementioned causes, you're either a (liar or a homily or both!)

---They also chase the bluebirds of happiness of the nineteen-fifties. Liquor, wine and beer are increasingly poplar (two votes for Four Seasons and the Bluewall), as are on-campus pubs and schmaltzy juke-box dancing. There have even been a few mock-nostalgic formal dances. Marijuana, pill-popping and sex are big party favorites, but opiates have virtually no takers (Still pondering that last one on opiates eh? Tell you what- make another column, label it undecided, and chalk one up right underneath.)

---Alientation as a general attitude and the generation gap in particular are not in vogue. Many faulty members and school administrators talk of student courtesy, civility and attentiveness; many students praise their teachers (Did you hear that Faculty Senate?) discount the radicals' perception of administrators as reactionary and talk effusively about their parents as understanding and generous.

---Besides ignoring nearly all political and social issues of public concern (anyone with a nerve to disagree is hereby required to fill out a membership card to ISAM - Interested Students at UMass. ISAM's membership at one time totalled two, but recently both resigned. Students at many schools have lost interest in what was once a major push to gain a voice in the policies and operations of their schools. Student-government organizations also lack support generally, though they are important at a few schools.

From Pentagon papers...

---Race relations appear to be generally good, but many blacks and Latin students maintain Third World corridors in classrooms and dormitories and a voluntary separatism in social life that may hide tensions to some extent. Much of the white-liberal guilt in campus race relations of the last decade seems to be gone.

The end of direct American involvement in Vietnam and the end of the military draft are the most obvious and frequently cited reasons for the vanishing stock of political activism.

Spoke a Binghamton student, "lobbying is the style for the seventies." Then well-informed people making their cases in Congress or in the State Legislature can be more effective than a half-million people in the streets."

In general, the women's liberation movement is the most prevalent political force on college campuses, but its leaders say apathy rather than opposition is their biggest problem.

Today's college student appears to be more aware but more cynical about the nation's problems, less inhibited but less inclined to act in situations without concrete aims and the prospect for success. Many object to being called apathetic, and refer to themselves as "practical" or "realistic."

Citing inflation, rising unemployment and increasing competition in graduate schools and the professional job markets - plus their own desires to make lots of money students are spending more time studying and directing their efforts toward the lucrative goals. (All those regularly stationed in Goodell five night a week are permitted agreement with this statement. Residents of the Pub, the Drake or the Bluewall are instructed to mark disagree.)

The rapidly increasing costs of education also have added to the mood of students' seriousness, with many working to pay part of their expenses. But relaxation is evident.

Drinking and dancing, somewhat tarnished relics of yesteryear, have been revived with gusto (bring on Sha-na-na). At Princeton a new pub is the most popular spot on campus. Drinking tastes are also being upgraded. Sangria and jug wines used to be most popular among N.Y.U. students. Now they buy the better Italian and French wines. They have graduated.

Marijuana and various types of pills, including depressants called Qualludes, are widely popular (hurrah for the agree column).

The sexual revolution is perhaps the clearest illustration that any similarity between students of today and those of the nineteen-fifties is superficial.

Personal appearance is increasingly amoral as well as apolitical. Barbers in and around campuses report brisk business, as do clothing stores with mod styles (hail to the Wearhouse!).

...to ping pong.

A C.C.N.Y. student summed it up: "There are an awful lot of 20 year olds here with 50 year old values. I've met people here whose only justification for taking education is (that) it pays $18,000 after seven years."

management, were discouraged by both management and the university administration from following their own thoughts on fiscal accountability, if they happened to go further than the unknown and un-offered State Auditor's report, a report given free which is in some ways more valuable than the $35,000 Aurther D. Little study. Nobody would deny the necessity of full and frank discussions concerning the operation of the building, certainly not certain university administrators, and most definitely not in principle. In practice, though, they often seemed most lacking, to the point of bald lies.

The fee next year will have gone down, substantially but will, in the near future bounce back up to its highest level unless major changes are made in the financing of the building, or the sources of funding. If students continue to bear full responsbility, or more precisely liability, for the funding of the debt service, the fee will be $65 to $70 within the next few years.

Before exploring alternatives to that gloomy prospect, the present financial structure of the building must present itself. The official budget of the campus center (less garage) presents the business and sundry operations of the building as earning $650,000. But if the restaurant sells food, someone must pick up the garbage; if the staff is to be paid, someone must clock the workers, and if there is to be a restaurant, someone must pay for the building. Cleaning the building costs $540,000; administering the building costs $310,000 and paying off the interest on the money used to build the building is $600,000. (This last figure will double when the actual cost of the building is put out on permanent financing bonds). In addition $70,000 is spent on program council activities (such as the movies and the craft shop) and $225,000 is budgeted for capital projects, such as renovating the Hatch, putting in plants and flowers and buying a car for the staff. In other words, if the building were the private business of a hotel, several restaurants, a store and rented meeting rooms and offices, the sponsors of the building would have to find an additional 1.2 million dollars in order to break even.

Fortunately for them, they don't. They can tax the students, next year at the rate of $52 per year per head. This theoretically pays for all the student offices, space for the Collegian, the free access to meeting rooms and the like. So the students pay for the facilities, and as shall be shown below, much more.

The building houses many businesses which, if they were to exist in this free market society of ours, would have to pay in addition to operating expenses and the cost of the goods sold, such things as rent, janitorial service, bookkeeping services, heat, power, and light. Their budgets do not reflect what these quite real costs are, and it has been like pulling teeth to get a remotely valid approximation of what these costs might be if the various business of the building were charged for them. We received gross formulas from management on these costs. We then assigned the costs to the various revenue areas on admittedly arguable apportionment formulae. Management having failed in its responsibility to the students, we were forced to proceed with the best of all possible figures, from a quite imperfect financial world.

These figures are vital knowledge if the business operations of the building are to be evaluated as business operations. The method of assessment at this time must remain gross, since management and the university administration seem to prefer no assessment at all. With them we can discover whether the Hatch, where we eat, costs us extra money to run, as compared to the Top of the Campus, where they eat.

In the Campus Center, as we all are aware of, there are three major business operations; the food services, comprising all the places you might eat or drink; the hotel where you are much less likely to rent a room, and the University store, where you are forced to buy most of your textbooks and may buy other items.

The hotel is most easy to deal with in a budgetary sense, since all the money flows in through, theoretically, one cash register, and all the customers buy a single service. Its budget shows it making $150,000. When the Administration cost ($18,500) janitorial service ($7,500) and temporary debt service ($122,500) are charged back, the hotel will only make next year, about $8,000 (arithmetic errors will be due to gross rounding off). This is if it makes budget. Last year it did not, this year it might not, and next year who knows. The $8,000 could easily disappear. In fact, when the buildings bonds are sold, if it maintains its current occupancy percentage, it will lose $112,000, or about $5 a student.

The University store is a more complex operation. It includes textbook sales, tradebooks, clothes, tobacco, cosmetics, jewelry, supplies, records, and other items of a general merchandise store. Using the same apportionment formula as on the hotel, the store is expected to make $90,000 next year, and would make $50,000 when permanent financing comes. At the current 5% markdown on list prices, and with the help of not having to pay for the space the textbook annex occupies, the text operation is expected to come out a little in the black next year, and lose a little when full bond payments are begun. Tradebooks (i.e., all other books) are expected to make $17,000 next year, gifts and jewelry $12,500, school supplies $39,000, clothes $26,000 and cosmetics $4,000. Art supplies are projected to lose $2,500, the tobacco counter $4,500 and the records $3,500. As a business, the store seems to be making a surplus of about 6% of its sales which, while not high, is considerable, about $4.50 per student. The university store does this by subsidizing records, art supplies and cigarettes (the killer weed) at the expense, mainly, of notebooks and clothes, a trade-off which the Board of Governors approved when they approved the budget.

The Campus Center Food Service is the most complex operation of all. It includes four restaurants (the Hatch, the coffee shop, the cafeteria, and the Top of the Campus) vending sales, a catering service, and four bar operations, the Blue Wall, the Hatch bar, the Top of the Campus bar and the catered bar. Its budget shows it to make $200,000, but after charge backs of administration (100,000) janitors (200,000) and debt service (144,000) it actually will probably lose something like $250,000 and $400,000 under permanent bonding.

The losses are spread out as follows: the Hatch $11,500, the coffee shop and cafeteria (combined for administrative convenience) $84,000, the TOC and the TOC bar $51,000, catering (which occupies mainly the 10th floor) $8,500, the Bluewall bar $21,000 and the Hatch bar $12,000. Operation of vending machines around the campus will make about $600 next year.

With regard to the Campus Center Food Services, it is a well known fact that the poor eat in the Hatch, the middle eat in the cafeteria and the rich eat in the TOC. In plainer English, very few students eat in the TOC. Yet they subsidize it at least to the extent of $2 a piece next year and more in the years to come. Catering is, or should be seen as, a strictly business enterprise. One orders a catered meal if one is willing to pay the price: yet the students subsidize this to the extent of about 30¢ apiece. Many staff and faculty eat in the cafeteria, yet the students subsidize this operation at the rate of about $4 apiece. This seems most unfair.

The students use of the building is concentrated on floors one and two in the Campus Center, yet, when permanent financing comes, they will be paying for the construction of floors 3-11. These floors were built with primarily two purposes in mind (though I have never seen a document stating this) The first is to provide a center for the Continuing Education and Conference business. The second is to provide laboratory experience for the students in the Hotel school. Of the former, there has been the start of an on campus conference program, though certainly not as large as originally envisioned. Of the latter, it would appear more rumor than fact that the Hotel School actually uses the facilities of the Campus Center for the purpose which they were designed.

Both of these sub-departments of the university are statefunded. One does not pay its way, yet; the other has abdicated its duties to the state and the students of the University. One tool the Board of Trustees, the Building Authority and the Administration might well use in insuring the full use of the building would be to charge to them the moneys for the construction of these floors, and the losses incurred in operating them.

Continuing Ed might operate the Hotel at a projected loss under permanent financing of 100,000 while the Hotel School could find the more than 100,000 that it will cost to maintain catering and the TOC. This would be $200,000, or about $10 per student that the Campus Center fee would not go up.

The savings to the students might even be greater. Who now knows?

But such would be idle speculation were it not acted on, and there is today no student, with the possible exception of Nick Apostola, who might introduce this idea to these who shall make the decision. If we, as students are to maintain the fee at the lowest possible level we must have adequate information and we must charge the management of the Campus Center, in the person now of the manager, and soon, the to be appointed director, as well as Vice Chancellor Campion with providing us fully and frankly the facts necessary for us to prepare alternative schemes of financing. Furthermore we must convince the Building Authority, chaired by Mr. George Pornphert, as well as the Trustees, especially the Finance Committee of the board of Trustees, chaired by Mr. George Pomphrett, to consider and adopt the most reasonable and fair system of paying for the building. Without knowledge, we shall be lost, especially at a university.

You Made Me Love Me

By Mike Silverstein

Dear Tennessee,

First of all, I love you. I love you because when my parents were strangers to me, and didn't know who I was, you were one of the few people who told me I was beautiful, and showed me how to be courageous and endure. I want you to know this. I also want you to know I never believed the lies they told me about you, I never believed you were how they said you were "the notorious Tennessee Williams, talented, but a littled wierd. Insightful, in a sick sort of a way. Interesting, but never forget how distorted--perverted--his point of view is" The artist as an item of gossip, and slightly risque story.

This is what my parents told me you were--a queer--when they deamed I was old enough to know about such things. This is what the straight critics have always told you you are, and still tell you you are. Someone who is interesting just to the extent that the people you write about have nothing to do with them, the human experience you describe have nothing to do with their's and above all, you are not like them at all, since you are obviously doomed to self-destruction.

But I know that what you said did have to do with me; I knew I was queer too--long before my parents deamed I was old enough to know about such things. I looked to you, because you were a queer, to tell me about myself, who I was. You, and a few other people, Allen Ginsberg, Christopher Isherwood, were the only queers I knew and the only people who would tell me anything of my humanity.

I'm writing to you now because what you told me wasn't enough. What you told me I was, what you told me I could be, what you told me you are, is still too close to what my parents told me I was, what your critics tell you you are. You helped me free myself, but I can see you are not free, because you still tell me we can never be free.

This is what happened. What my parents, my friends, my teachers told me was that I was a victim, a loser. I must lose in a world where only the winner is a Man, a human being. I was not a real man; I was a queer, a half-man, a pseudo-man, like a woman. I could never aspire to the dignity accorded only to the conquerer, the Man on top. Men fought and won, they fought other Men for the ownership of the rest of creation, lesser peoples, the losers, women, the third world, as well as the natural environment. I could never be a real Man. I didn't want to over-screw, fuck-women. I didn't want to fight other men. I wanted to love them, and I can only stand in awe before the material world, not own it. This made me obscene in this society, a dirty joke, the worst thing a Man can be, a loser, a victim. Everywhere the world, my parents, taught me only contempt for myself.

You were one of the few that contradicted this. You told me to love myself, told me I was of infinite worth, holy. Because you taught me that, only the victims still cling to their humanity. You taught that the courage the victims show when they endure is the true human courage, and the true expression of our human beauty. You taught me that humanity is destroyed by the fight with Men for the ownership of other people, mastery, the despoilation of the world. You taught me to honor my beauty and courage as a victim, as the real expression of humanity.

You also taught me a sense of acceptance and resignation. Because you also taught that my hate was unavoidable, because the source of my humanity is my submission to the strong and soulless, the Men, who have sold their souls for mastery.

And you spoke not only to me, not only to queers, but to other victims as well, especially to women. The world, my parents taught me that women are wild animals to be hunted, tamed and used- screwed, fucked, made to serve. You were among the first to teach me that women are my sisters, fellow victims. Blanch DuBois, Hannah Jelkes, above all the Gnadiges Fraulein - who was all of us - these were the first sisters I had encountered, the first people who shared my victimization, and my humanity. The world, my parents, taught me to conquer women, and called me a queer because I wouldn't do so. You were the first to teach me to love my sisters. (The critics, those liars, say you hate women)

But to my sisters and myself, you taught that solace lies in the inevitability of our hopelessness. When I was 16 in 1957, I clung to this teaching. It kept me sane, and gave me courage because it seemed the only hope, the only humanity I was capable of.

Now I see you being destroyed by the teaching that was the beginning of my liberation. By finding your humanity in your victimization, you have been trapped by your critics in not accepting self-destruction as the price of your continued humanity. You have accepted that you must be the loser, the victim they want you to be. Now they have made you a success, a "celebrity" so in order for you to retain the victimhood that is our humanity, you must destroy yourself. They have tricked you. They can make you drink - their old weapon against us - so they can call you a drunkard and show how different you are from them. They want you to join the legion of Gay brothers drinking themselves to death in the bars they have set up for us. The straight man's whole world is a conspiracy to destroy you, and they even have your complicity in it, because you believe them when they call you a paranoid for seeing this.

But I will no longer follow that way. Once I learned from you the courage of my humanity, I could no longer accept my victimization. It was still too much like what the world, my parents said I should be. You are still not free of the world, your critics. You still believe your humanity must be linked to your victimization, so you still tell us victims, queers, women, too, much of what they want us to be told. You tell us that we must submit to their mastery.

Tennessee, what you taught was perhaps the best hope you could offer. Perhaps you spoke for a whole generation of Gay men, expressing their humanity in the only way allowed to them. But now we can and must do more. We must refuse to be victims, to be loosers, to be queer. I will be free. I, only I, will say who I am. I will be Gay; I will not accept that I must submit. I will not accept that I am doomed; I will not destroy myself.

You were right in many things, and I must not forget the things you taught me that are true. We must not give up our humanity to become like the Man. We must not seek to conquer, to become the master. Our Gayness, our ability to love one another is our humanity, and it must not be sold for the Man's mastery over others. And if the straight Man's revolution is based on mastery and conquest, we will have no part of it.

But we are going to make a Gay revolution, a revolution that will be an assertion of humanity. And remembering what you taught us of our humanity, we Gay men together with women, and all the other victims, who don't seek to be masters, can create it.

And we will fight and even hate if we have to. It is part of one's humanity to hate one's oppressors. If an oppressor has taken from you the ability to hate him, he's taken part of your humanity from you. And here too they tricked you into telling us only to endure, not to right back. We can fight back, struggle and hate, and as long as we are not seduced by the Man's victory, conquest, as long as we renounce his love of the fight, the hatred, the revolution will be in the name of humanity, and for the creation of a truly human society without conquest, mastery, winners or hatred.

This is what I want to tell you. You and I, we need not be victims, queers, in order to be human. We can reject the Man's inhumanity and rebel against his mastery, and still retain our own humanity. This is what it means to be Gay, rather than queer as we were as victims, or straight like the Man, the master. And we must risk the struggle because as a victim it is true we still had our humanity, but ultimately the Man required that we buy it at the price of self-destruction. He leaves us the courage to endure, but he tricks us into believing we must ultimately destroy ourselves.

You are being destroyed by you oppressors. They are making you kill yourself, as they have made generations of Gay men, the best of us, kill ourselves. Stop and fight them.

And we have discovered something else you must know. They are also lying to you when they tell you that you must be alone. This is another lie they have tricked you into repeating to us. It is they who must always be alone, the Men, the master, whose mastery keeps him apart and afraid of humanity. Join us! We don't have to be alone. We still have the ability to love one another. It is very hard. We have been so corrugted by them. We have learned so much of their mistrust, their will for power, their aloneness. But we are struggling to trust one another, to open ourselves up to one another, to love one another. And before our love, the world will look and wonder.

Tennessee, look, an army of lovers is beginning to arise. It were among the first to love. We were queer like you, victims like you. But now we are Gay, no longer accepting our victimization, and proudly proclaiming our humanity. We can give you back your love. Before the love we former losers have for one another the world will tremble, fall, and be reborn.

Schedule Of Events For The Gay Weekend

Beginning today and continuing thru the week end, the Student Homphile League is presenting its Third Gay Festival. This is an opportunity for many Gays to gather together to meet, exchange ideas with, learn from and enjoy each other on many different levels. Registration begins at noon in the S.H.L. office and continues until 8 p.m. Registration fee is $2.00 for the entire weekend which consists of a dance at Worcester Dining Commons from 8 p.m. - 1 a.m. featuring "The Deadly Nightshade" of local and expanding prominence. Come and experience! Admission is $1.00 or proof of registration.

On Saturday morning and afternoon there will be a variety of workshops lead by prominent gay activists, such as Madeline Davis, president of the Mattachine Society of the Niagara Frontier and spokeswoman for the Gay Women's platform at the Democratic National Convention in Miami; and Marc Rubin and Pete Fisher, author of The Gay Mystique. Some of the topics to be discussed in the workshops will be Women's, Men's, Gay Liberation, S & M, Gay Male, Gay Female Relationships, and Law Reform and Legislation. There will also be a sensitivity workshop conducted by the Rev. Howard Munson. From noon until 2 p.m., an informal outdoor concert can be heard on the Metawampee Lawn or in Mahar Auditorium if it rains. Madeline Davis, Marc Rubin, Pete Fisher and others will perform for us their songs of struggle, love and goals for themselves and the gay community. Saturday evening promises to be a good time at McKimmie Lounge where a gay party will be held from 8 p.m. - 1 a.m. There will be live music provided by Kelly Glenny, et al. from the Boston circuit along with recorded entertainment.

Sunday's picnic at Hop Brook Commune in New Salem will be a relaxing afternoon with friends and food. So, you see

Theater

An Extraordinary "Macbeth"

by David Steven Ritchkoff

UMass. Theatre's production of Macbeth creates its own society; a society primitive enough to reflect and enhance the inherent savegery of Shakespeare's royal pair. This new interpretation of director Jim Young is strong, enough to create this primite world without losing hold or a moral code and order; it is a world where men and women rule equally, for brute human force is the mainstay of survival, and it is a world which never forgets the dark, awesomeness of the soul.

It is obvious enough that Shakespeare's language is great in itself yet all the aspects of this production add a newness to the play that is also in itself great. The setting is perfect, a rocky stage and platform that forces the viewer to become closely involved with the action and meaning of the drama. All is basic like the society in which Macbeth carries out his ambitious crimes; stone, wood, dust, and jagged shapes, surround us in the depiction of not only the barbaric world but also the decline of the personal existences Macbeth and his wife. It is a setting in which we can expect the action of the play. The costumes, designed by Jane Gakey, are exceptionally well done; they fit the time, the characters, and the eye. Lots of fur, and patchwork leather cover the cast, entirely consistent with the underlying idea of primitive strength; even the notion of beauty retains the earthiness of the life, a long white feather cape drapes Lady MacBeth during her first banquet as Queen hair is braided, bodies decorated with bones and shells, all is part of nature, all is unrefined. Movement especially has eventfulness here, Carol Korty's direction in this area provides energetic battle scenes full of harsh brutality; but the dancelike rituals become the most important movements again pointing out the type of people and place we are viewing.

Macbeth's cast bring to life the themes of Young, Gakeym, and Korty. Above all we find consistency and unity throughout; Bob Perry begins with a wonderfully underplayed Macbeth, not too weak, but still prey to the ambition he feels. However, little by little Perry pulls deeper into the character; he adds to the man, he is scared, he is evil; he is crazed. By the end of the play, Perry has given as full a realization of the Macbeth caught by the inner and outer demands of his universe.

Lady Macbeth is marvelous; Meb Bodensiek uses every bit of herself to project an evil siren, wanting power for her husband and herself. She flexes her jaw and uses her facial moods to add a steamy sexuality; and though she calls for spirits to unsex her, she remains a womanly magnet for Macbeth. But she too faces the transition in character more than well; as Macbeth begins to overstep even the savage rules of their Scotland, Ms. Bodensiek begins to waver herself. At first she despises him for his refusal to let their deeds lie, then she fiercely loves him again only to once more turn from him in confusion to eventually find madness in an almost overwhelmingly powerful sleepwalking scene.

The foil couple to the kind and queen, Thane of Fife, Macduff and his Lady, contrast beautifully. Ned Daly as MacDuff is all the man to beat Macbeth. With a sharpness to his character, he is closer to gutsy humanness than the thinking Macbeth. Daly reacts very emotionally; his scene in which he hears of his wife's and children's death is finely done. Lady Macduff played by Joyce Jacobsen is a gorgeous counterpart to Ms. Bodensiek. She is a warm, full presence on stage Wrapped in dark browns, she small against Lady Macbeth, becomes a vision of strength in the society, a loyal beauty who innocently dies.

Jeff Ryan as the faithful Banquo satisfies the need for some sort of lasting goodness in the play. Jim Sweeney as Duncan shows us a good king, but one too weak and too trusting to hold his crown and his life. Steve Courtemarsh's Malcolm is very good; a boy who wants his power and stirs his followers on in order to receive it. His character is arrogant, full of vengeance. The Thanes Lennox, Menyeith, and Ross respectively portrayed by Marcy Ertel, Sue Hueck, and Jeff Scotland Give us a glimpse at the equality of men and women in this society, power goes to the strongest, caring not for sex.

One more great conception of the production: the characters and witches' speeches have been done away with in the traditional sense and have been replaced by disembodied arms and legs who chant and scream a strange new language understood only by the characters in the play. This method of disembodiment creates intensity and terror.

At first most people might find a slight inconsistency in the setting, costumes, movement etc. with the prose of Shakespeare; but the more one can tie in the broad themes of primitivism, power, strength, and ambition, the more the conception pulls together to form an exciting theatre event.

A Conversation With Archie Shepp

Cast of characters:
Gary Gomes
Shelley Bakst
Mike Kostek
Jeff Clayton

Archie Shepp is currently an associate professor in the Department of Afro-American Studies here at UMass. However, in addition to his current capacity here, he has proven himself to be an articulate spokesman and pioneer in Black Music. He has been one of the seminal figures in the New Black Music, playing with such musical giants as Cecil Taylor and John Coltrane, to name a couple.

Although Mr. Shepp has been closely identified with the Avant Garde in Black Music, he dislikes that particular terminology, and refers to himself as a 'folk artist', seeing the term avant garde as a stratifying factor.

When I first encountered Mr. Shepp in the flesh, he was speaking before one of the Orchard Hill jazz courses, and the affect on the (predominantly) white audience was none too good. "He's a RACIST!" many were heard to proclaim, but the problem was one of translation to the audience, and the racism which occurred was for the most part reflective.

I heard Mr. Shepp speak at an Orchard Hill panel discussion this year in "Art and Social Change" which brought up a great many interesting concepts for the audience to deal with. I ran up to him to ask for an interview, because I felt the issues he would bring before the campus as a whole would be extremely beneficial and thought-provoking.

Now read on.

KOSTEK: Mr. Shepp, one thing we're very interested in is your reaction to the Black Musicians' Conference held here a short time ago. In your opinion, was it a success? What did you accomplish?

SHEPP: Yes, I do think it was a success in that we accomplished two things. First, we found out we felt the same way about a lot of things. Second, we drafted a letter protesting the fact that Cecil Taylor's contract with Antioch is not being picked up.

Now, that in itself may not seem like much, but it was the first time musicians have gotten together to discuss the problems that beset all of us, so I think that was good, if for no other reason than that it might perhaps stimulate another conference which might go further in the way of actually creating structures with which to change the condition of black musicians. I spoke to my students this morning about the overflow crowd that filled the Student Union Ballroom yesterday to hear Mr. Carmichael, who is a very good, dear friend of mine, a man whose ideas I respect very much, but I was struck by the difference between Mr. Carmichael's audience and the meager attendance at the Conference and ultimately the only kind of conclusions you can draw from that is that essentially people are more interested in the McLuhan syndrome, television and its whole contingent than they are really dealing with cultural problems of minority groups and minority culture, unfortunately. Even black people would far rather go out and be entertained by Stokely Carmichael or whoever, I don't mean to put this all on Brother Carmichael, but unfortunately it does get to be rather like demagoguery and performance, not that he intends it that way nor does the audience who receives that, feel that that's the kind of relationship that they're creating there. But you see you don't have to do any work when you go to hear someone speak to you. At the Musician's Conference I think we were about serious work. We needed not only creative ideas but the kind of well, just work that you have to put in, but it seems to me that maybe it's not the time for that, I don't know.

GOMES: The thing that struck me about this campus is that most people who come up here, especially white people, are really, really stuck culturally. They really only get one side of the picture. Stokely Carmichael is like an image projection. He's somebody who you've heard of, and you go to see him but like you have a Sam Rivers here, who is a fine musician . . .

SHEPP: Yes, I know what you're talking about–what performers can or can't do. Actually, Mr. Carmichael is not a performer, but a political force in our time; but I think he is probably intentionally misconstrued, especially by whites who have all kinds of motives when they come to hear people like him or Bobby Seale or Huey P. Newton; you see, unfortunately the implications of this kind of encounter are not an interaction of ideas, personalities and views but really an impersonal relationship. It's almost as though we were able to set up a huge television screen right in the Student Union Ballroom. So my impression really is that we have a great deal of apathy to overcome.

This apathy exists not only in the area of culture, but in any kind of serious ideological, ethical encounter among the people in this country. I mean, I would certainly not be rooted in the attitudes which are operant at this time. What I'm saying is that we almost need a revolution in attitude as well as everything else. There is a predisposition to have everything done for us. Of course, I expected during the conference that whites would probably play a minimal role, primarily as participants, which they did. I thought this was good because the problems that we (Black Musicians) face are somewhat special, simply because the popular notions about Black Music and Black musicians are rooted in racism.

BAKST: How do you see yourself as an educator at this school towards changing the fact or feeling that people don't want to think for themselves? You know, going to Stokely and having things told to them?

SHEPP: Well, I would say they should go to Stokely.

BAKST: Right . . .

SHEPP: It's their motives that are questionable. I think Brother Carmichael's sincere, as far as I know; but I think his audiences are insincere. I think they come to be entertained rather than to find serious political solutions.

On the other hand, on the other extreme, these kinds of political exchanges merely seem to legitimize the self-righteous attitudes of the racists, and they leave even more psychotic than when they came there.

SHEPP: Well, that may seem like a digression from the Musicians' Conference, but to me, the numbers of people that responded to the one (Carmichael), and didn't seem to respond to the other (the Conference) are very indicative. The question is: what is the meaning of culture in America? You know, perhaps it's essentially like John Wayne and Lawrence Welk vs. Duke Ellington. I'm not saying that to be facetious, you know. When you look at it . . .

GOMES: Yeah, it hurts when you look at it!

SHEPP: Well, that doesn't hurt me so much as what the syndrome implies. At some point you have Beethoven and Bach going to the Lincoln Center, and you have Jimmy Heath (a Black composer-alto saxophonist) going to jail for six years, and there's a tragic ethical and moral dichotomy there.

GOMES: You know, it's like Sunny Murray (Black percussionist-composer) said one, about how if they heard this music at the White House, they'd all run under the tables and hide, they'd be so scared they'd never come out. And that's like (sudden shift in thought) . . .do you still see yourself going into what's been termed the 'new music' (Coleman, Taylor, Ayler, Coltrane)? You've always been a structured musician, more or less, on your albums, but on your current albums it seems like you've been doing more regular forms, the last two ("Attica Blues" and "Cry of My People") in particular.

SHEPP: Well, yes . . . I've always felt this—and I've had to explain that to some of my colleagues, as well as certain people who might have thought that I was a kind of Messiah—the architect of a pre-imaginative revolution. Let me say that revolutions are created by people working collectively, not individually.

First and foremost, I consider myself a folk musician and a collector of the material of my people on the basis of tradition and my experience. I feel that I am out of the tradition of Heddy Ledbetter, Bunk Johnson, and hopefully King Oliver and Louis Armstrong, so what I mean to say is, if you look at music as a language, we have a formidable lexicon and we have a tremendous musical facility and archive. So, it would behoove a collector and a student of his culture to be familiar with all the forms and all the aspects of that language in order to synthesize it and convey it to the people from whom he derives it, you see.

There are, for example, parallels in Picasso when he started utilizing certain obvious classical techniques—even at the time he was experimenting with new, more plastic forms that he learned from the Africans.

The artist must continually go back for craft, technique, and continuity, and that's what I feel I try to do, since I feel that it's a process, which is microcosmic and microscopic. After a while you have to break this (holds up a piece of paper) down to the atom—in this case, it might mean that you'd have to go back to the very beginning and start to put your tradition together all over again. So, these materials I have been working with, the forms are consciously evolved and derived from the things around, from the language around me, and I try to set that in the frame of a Black Music language.

I learn from the youngsters, I watch them dance and I see the kind of things they respond to, and I don't feel that I should try to pull against that. To me it's anathema to art. It becomes elitist and chauvinist. But I try to respond-in fact, their rhythms are very familiar to me.

The difference that I try to inject, a certain kind of content, which will edify, which will stimulate them aesthetically, morally, politically, you know—so I deliberately choose forms which I feel will, first of all, communicate—and as I say, exhaust the palate of my people as extensive and elaborate experience.

GOMES: You can't ignore people like Ellington . . .

SHEPP: Yes, of course, and if you really study Mr. Ellington's work, or Mr. Henderson's, you can see that's the process. When Duke made things like "I Got It Bad And That Ain't Good", at the same time he was making things like "A Tone-parallel to Harlem" and "Black And Tan Fantasy". Some of his works obviously are meant to go further, to probe, and some of it is meant to capture his audience, to deal with their rhythm, with where they are. Once you get them there, you can bring them along a little further. The worst thing to do is alienate the black audience's sense of time and rhythm, to make them think you're cold, intellectual. I learned this in rhythm and blues bands in Philadelphia. So even when I worked with Cecil Taylor, although the forms were sometimes outside strict 12 bar blues, (usually always) my sense of melody and time was rooted precisely in those rhythms that I first heard from my father who was a banjo player. So it was not so much a question of changing the form as synthesizing my own innate sense of the Blues with what was happening.

I see the Blues as a matrix, as an archetypal form that every craftsman of my race has dealt with, and has had to explore. I feel that John's work (John Coltrane) was an exploration and extension of Blues form.

I think what I'm doing now is consistent with what I've always felt. It's consistent with the right of the artist to change his work. I think Black performers, because we are considered performers, aren't ever allowed the total creative expression of a comparable white artist. A Stravinsky is continually expected to explore, to redevelop, synthesize and change his work. The work of the earlier masters is not outside of his palette; he is expected to know and interpret the works of Bach, Beethoven. In other words, the genesis of white creative expression is one which is thoroughly within its own tradition, no matter how modern it evolves logically. Stockhausen must have an excellent knowledge of Bach and Beethoven. It takes an entire music department and faculty to render white Western classical music, while apparently, a single individual is expected to teach and comprehend the totality of the Black Music experience in America.

Also, the Black artist is put in a kind of fratricidal syndrome; each one is expected to arrive through the killing off of whoever went before him, or whatever went before him. That's why I've always objected to this term "New Music" because I think it turns off musicians who came before me, who can legitimately say that their music is as new as my music. As a matter of fact, judging by what's played on the radio, most Americans are far behind the tremendous changes that have actually taken place in black music. Right now Charlie Parker's music would sound stunningly contemporary, freshly modern vis-a-vis The Rolling Stones.

GOMES: Yeah, that was the kind of thing I was saying about the cultural vacuum-type thing and white students. And there's one thing I'd like you to elaborate on if you could, and that is all during the Black Musicians Conference I noticed as you were just mentioning now, you were very concerned about elitiicsm and being separated from people. So I was wondering how you could see yourself getting back in with people . . .

SHEPP: Well, I don't feel myself really cut off, because music is my connection with people. But I think that other people, black intellectuals who are unwittingly drawn into this type of a syndrome, are cut off. Amherst itself is an ahomely in a sense, yet typical in another. It's typically white, and yet for black people I think it is somewhat anomalous and even freakish because if you accept all this as reality, then the Black Community outside, say Springfield, is unreality.

By the same token, a person living in Harlem may look with some suspicion on a Negro living in the Village, even though the poverty at Harlem may not be any worse than on the East Side. It's really a question of how your people see you—that's what you mean by being in touch. I've been asked to perform in Springfield on a number of occasions by the people in Springfield, and though I've actually spoken or given lectures, I haven't performed (except for a benefit for the Islamic Temple in Springfield—Max Roach, Jackie McLean, and myself, which was some months ago.

People wonder why we don't do more of this kind of thing. The fact of the matter is the community itself has to evaluate its concept of culture.

They're packing the halls for James Brown and Aretha Franklin. I wonder how Sun Ra would do in the Springfield Auditorium. So it is a question not only of the artist being cut off from the community, but the community being cut off from the artist through a set of circumstances which neither of us created. I think this pattern began during the early sixties when people first became aware say, of Ornette Coleman, and incidentally, Cecil, who'd been playing in New York for years . . .

GOMES: Starving a lot . . .

SHEPP: Yes, but I mean popularity came to the so-called 'avant garde experience' through Ornette's group, because it was then that people first started to buy the records—although Cecil (Taylor) had been recording before, his work wasn't widely distributed.

The truth is that up until the late '50's most of the music and the clubs were still uptown in Harlem. I used to go to hear Sonny Rollins, Eddie Davis, Miles group, Cannonball and 'Trane. A number of musicians were downtown.

The eventual result was that music got further and further from Harlem, and the Black Community.

On any given night at the Five Spot, when Monk was playing, three-fourths of the audience was N.Y.U. students who were just across the way there. The music became the product of the affluent who could afford it. On numerous occasions I was kicked out of the Five Spot because I couldn't afford to drink there. Of course I felt a great deal of bitterness—I'd go in to hear Trane, or Monk— somehow I felt I was being robbed by people who were totally insensitive to what was going down anyway. I, who was there for a reason, a purpose, for a good, serious musical purpose, was being preempted by an irrelevant Capitalist incursion—(namely) money. And the irony of it all was that a Black man, whose people had created this music, was seldom able to afford the luxury of hearing and enjoying that rich musical experience.

To be concluded next week.

In Concert

Tom Rush Conquers The Crowd

By Ed Cohen and Andrew MacKenzie

Tom Rush came back to the five college community and Mount Holyoke College Friday night, April 27th, and brought Tom Willits, a talented young musician with him. Tom Willits, and his backup man, David Brown, served as a comer group for Rush. They succeeded in making lasting impressions in everybody's minds.

Willits and his friend David got the concert off to an energetic start. He was extremely loose, and maintained his balance on stage pretty well. The balance that he showed came after practice obtained by playing with such big name groups as Jonathan Edwards, Rita Potters, Jaime Brockett, and Tom Rush. Tom Willits' musical career has been a steady rise upward. After going through the usual cycle of high school dances and coffee houses, he got his first big break at his prep school. Backstage, he told two young reporters before the concert:

"There was a Jaime Brockett show coming up at our prep school and I asked if they would mind if I opened the show, and they said fine. I had three weeks to get all the material together for the show... I wrote three or four songs for the show... and I was pleased that it came out well. I had to wear gloves before the gig because my hands were so cold then when I got on stage and by the time I got off I just wanted to play forever..."

Since that time, Willits got together with the backup man he now plays with, David Brown, and they have been greatly improving. The music that Tom Willits performs reflects the type of person he is. "I write about happy things, I'm not a down artist," he said. "One of the biggest things that it said in the brochure is that everybody in the beginning told me that I'd have to live a really cruddy life, and I said no way, because I was really happy and there was no way I was going to compromise myself and to this day I won't do it."

During many of his numbers, the audience felt the need to become involved in what he was doing. They clapped, and laughed, and loved the music.

"I much more enjoy working in a bigger concert situation than in clubs. Now many performers in Cambridge that I know would much rather sit in the informal atmosphere of the clubs... I'd much rather have the power to control the people.... You've got to really have it together."

Part of the way through one of his numbers, he broke a guitar string. Many performers would have come apart, but Tom managed to finish the number, and did it like he'd written the song for a five string guitar. He is poised and an extremely confident performer, yet at the same time a very sensitive person, able to transmit his sensitivity to lyrics which he sings with a great strength.

The types of songs that he sings are described in his biography packet as follows: "Using the universal language of music, Tom expresses his vision of a better life 'when the wars have come and gone' in the up-tempo "Brand New Song", and his quest for realness and sincerity in people and feeling it at home in "The Only Place". In a rocking tune, "Crazy Flyin'", Tom tells us of his reluctance to travel by plane and take chances with his life, and in "Tryin' To Be Myself", he depicts the struggle for individuality in today's society. In one of his most introspective songs, "Organ Grinder Man", Tom relates his desire to have the stage life less glorifying and more honest and straightforward."

He himself is a down to earth person who likes farming. He'd just bought a farm about twenty miles from where Tom Rush is now living, up in Merrimack county in New Hampshire. From his home, he can think freely and maintain a sense of balance. He is also very positive about where he sings and who he sings to.

"I'm a very mysterious type of singer... I'd sort of hibernate for a while, then I'd come out and do a big show, which is the show I basically do... then I sort of go underground for a while. It's not to my liking, but I just won't work cruddy little dates, it's as simple as that..."

He gives a good reason for this:

"We all sit up on stage, all musicians, and we look down, and it's a joke... I did a show with Jonathan Edwards at Springfield College and I looked down at that audience when Edward's was up there and I thought, if this is what it's like, man, it's ridiculous, there's no point to it... and this is why Hendrix killed himself - he got to the point where people weren't really listening to him for what he was doing, they were just plain listening to him because he was the thing to listen to... and that's a really heavy revelation, because all of a sudden he can question his whole ability. He can say to himself, am I really good, or are all those people just listening because it's the thing to do? That's scary."

Willits finished up his part of the concert with a zesty rendition of "Bird Dog". The audience again became involved. Tom told them to start clapping to the song and they did, and they gave him plenty of deserved applause as he left the stage.

After about a five minute pause, the old timer himself walked onto the stage. Tom Rush was greeted with the same type of enthusiasm he had been receiving all these years. He started off with the moody, slo-paced song, "Kids These Days" and gave it his full attention, looking either down at his guitar, or straight out at the house. Tom Rush, of course, has been around for a long time. He was part of the old Boston folk scene somewhere around 1964, and he told those same two reporters about that time:

"Well, the Boston folk scene was just a bunch of guys singing a lot, and it's sort of hard to say what it was like... essentially it was an amateur scene, professionally oriented... the scene in New York was a lot more professionally oriented than the Cambridge scene was. It was mainly because there wasn't any money to be made in Cambridge. There was no point in trying to be professional... The guys that were around were Kweskin's band, Geoff Muldaur, Charles River Valley boys, there were a lot of different people at different times..."

After those opening songs, Rush sang a Jackson Browne song which he labeled his "male chauvinist pig song". It was called "Ladies Love Outlaws" and went something like this... "Ladies love outlaws like babies love stray dogs." The audience ate it up. Next he sang a song called "Dear Abbey", a (as he said) "social protest song with great import". One of it's verses was:

"Dear Abbey, dear Abbey, my fountain pen leaks, my wife hollers at me and my kids are all freaks... Every side I get up on is the wrong side of bed, if it weren't so expensive, I'd wish I was dead. signed, Unhappy. Unhappy, unhappy... you got no complaints... you are what you are and you ain't what you ain't. So listen here buster and listen but good... stop wishin' for bad luck and knockin' on wood...."

After the song Tom said, "I love to give social protest songs." The audience roared. Tom has a knack of changing the mood of an audience so completely from one song to the next. He is a captivating performer.

The next number he did was one which spoke of lost love, and this didn't seem to be the same person that was bouncing around in time to the dialectic lyrics, bending down to make faces at the camera freaks in front, and just generally shucking and jiving.

He did a song by Walt Jeremiah called "Yellow Dog" and a quiet, pretty song about the past. Then he'd bounce right back to the other side of the emotional spectrum with a funny story, about a guy who smuggled a can of soup onto a plane, poured it into his barf bag, and pretended to throw up. Then he ate the soup. (It was pretty funny at the time). He followed this with a song about "the great South Hadley Steamshovel Strike" when "people couldn't get their steam shoveled for love nor money." The audience settled into a blissful melancholy during the rendition of "No Regret"/"Rockport Sunday". He sang a song about a flood in Galveston, Texas "for flood freaks", which occured in 1900 and killed a whole lot of people. He finished up with two very personal songs, one about confusion, and the other about leaving home. The audience wore out their hands as he left the stage.

This fine concert must have made everybody realize, if they had not already done so, that Tom Rush is a true artist, and as all artists must change, so must he. Two weeks ago (from the night of the concert) he played his last gig with his old friend Trevor Veitch. The following conversation took place after the concert:

"When did Trevor leave the band?"

"Trevor and I did our last gig together at Symphony Hall two weeks ago tonight. We decided to split up, do different things. It was working pretty well, but we've been playing together for four years and it's best to keep changing... It would have been real easy to keep doing the same thing for the next ten years..."

"How is it going to affect the act?"

"I'm going to do a few dates by myself. I haven't worked by myself for a long time and since about New Years, Trevor and I have been working as a duo. I decided to cut it back to just me for a while and see what it felt like."

"Was the decision mostly yours?"

"It was mutual. I think he'll get into some good things. Change is good for everybody."

"Is he getting into anything particular?"

"I don't belive he's got anything specific at the moment. He's considering different things."

"Trevor used to co-write a lot of your songs. Do you feel like you'll be able to keep up the output, or will you be using more of the other people's songs on your albums?"

"I don't know. The stuff that Trevor co-wrote was... there was one case where he wrote the music and I wrote the words, but usually the co-writing was more in the shape of... I would write a song and he would make some changes in the music, and then I would make some changes in the words to go along with his changes in the music and so I don't think it will cut back on the productivity."

Separating from Trevor was only one step in a long process for Rush. A while back he returned to New Hampshire, bought a farm in Merrimack county, and spent about ten months just getting things together. Asked to describe his present home, he said:

"It's an old farmhouse that has been fixed up by the previous owner... it sits up on top of a hill in Southern New Hampshire and looks out over lakes and... it's really peaceful, there are no immediate neighbors, except God who lives at the bottom of the hill... There's a church, our nearest neighbor is a church... My place used to be an active farm, there's a lot of old fields that've grown up and such, it used to be quite a big, busy, farm, but it's mostly woods now... I'm in the process of clearing some land that isn't too badly grown up and once that gets done maybe I can get involved in raising some animals, I should do it, because I've got four hundred acres... it'd be really nice to have a horse, bring in some cows, or something..."

Tom Rush's new home has given him new sources to draw on for his music, sources quite different than the "really cruddy life" (as Tom Willits had said) of previous times.

"It's hard for me to properly perceive some of the changes because I'm so close to them but I would hope that... an artist should be changing all the time... and moving back to New Hampshire has been quite a space change for me. I'd been living mostly in Holiday Inns for the past five years, and keeping the furniture in New York City... New Hampshire is quite different from New York and so that's probably going to be reflected in what I'm doing."

Tom Rush and Tom Willits are two extremely talented men who reflect their thought in their music. While Willits does not have the polish that Rush has, time and experience should give him the needed gloss.

Tom Rush should be more at peace with himself now that he has roots to go back to. His farm must give him a tremendous sense of freedom. It's good that there are musicians still around that can give people something to think about besides what the headlines choose to exploit. Because without the music, what else is left?

It's A Beautiful Day . . . Sunday

By Ed Cohen

Just about everybody on campus is hoping for a nice day on Sunday, May 6th for the Spring Concert. And what better way to have a nice day, than to have the group, It's A Beautiful Day playing in front of the large audience. It's A Beautiful Day is probably most well known for their classic song, "White Bird", which appeared on their first album. The group performs music that sees strains of jazz, blues, and classical blending into a mixture that can be either slow or quick; quiet or rocking. The music that the group plays now can be reflected in certain ways from their past, and in certain ways from the changes that they have undergone.

It's A Beautiful Day was started wav back in 1967 by David LaFlamme in the San Francisco area, birthplace also of groups like the Jefferson Airplane and the Grateful Dead. The people who got together to form the group; David and Linda Laflamme, Hal Wagenet, Val Fuentes, and Pattie Santos, became really tight and after a lot of hard work they released their first album entitled, It's A Beautiful Day.

The type of music on this first album was something new at the time, since the electric violin of David Laflamme was as much of a novelty as Anderson's flute work in Jethro Tull. This first album was more or less the genius of David and Linda Laflamme, because they wrote most of the music and David produced the album. The other members remained in the background and helped to fill in the spots left by David's beautiful violin playing. If you have this first album lying around, put on that first side and listen carefully. The songs make good use of imagery and David's violin really covers a lot of ground. David and Linda's voice on this first album complement each other pretty well.

The second album that the group produced, Marrying Maiden is a work of art. Although Linda Laflamme had left the group, it was well produced, with credit for production being given to everyone in the group and a co-producer, Brent Dangerfield. Once again, David played really fine violin music, and the female vocals were now done by Pattie Santos. On this album, David didn't write as many of the songs. The new man on the keyboards, Fred Webb wrote three of the songs, Hal Wagenet wrote two, and Mike Holman wrote one. The other two songs, "Don and Dewey," and "Dolphins" were written by other artists. It seemed like the group started to round out more, and maybe they had to. Linda Laflamme's leaving left a big gap in the group, and while it isn't really noticed on this second album, it is surely noticed on their third album. Their music on Marrying Maiden contains the same sound that their previous album did. The song, "Let a Woman Flow", is beautiful. It's soft and pleasant and is arranged very nicely, as most of the other songs on this album are. Jerry Garcia makes a guest appearance on this album, and his banjo work on "Hoedown" complements David's violin in a true bluegrass tradition. This song once again shows the versatility of David Laflamme's violin. He can play along with Garcia's quick banjo as easily as he can force the pace of a song to slow to a quiet whisper.

David and the group started running into trouble on the third album, Choice Quality Stuff. The group decided to get into more of a rock sound. They picked up Bill Gregory on guitar and Tom Fowler on bass. The group was definitely not the same close knit family that worked on the first album. The album was not arranged as well, and several of the cuts were real disappointments. Their fourth album was It's A Beautiful Day at Carnegie Hall, and was a live album which had a lot of old stuff on it. Hal Wagenet and Mike Holman had left the group, and no real new stuff was done. It seemed like the group was really floundering, and perhaps the magic that made the first album an act of love was gone forever. Contained in Rolling Stone, April 26, was the following short clip in the Random Notes section:

"....David Laflamme, founder/violin player with "It's A Beautiful Day" was fired from the group, whose members claimed he was getting an unfair share of the profits. Laflamme was replaced by Greg Bloch, formerly with "String Cheese" and grand-nephew of classicial violinist Jascha Heifetz....David was last heard working with Sal Valentino, enstranged of Stoneground on a possible new album."

At the same time David Laflamme left, Tom Fowler, the bass player, also decided to split. So now the group had their work cut out for them. They got Bloch on violin, and managed to get Bud Cockrell, an extremely talented writer and bass player for the group. Slowly the group began to jell. Their latest album, It's A Beautiful Day...Today, is an excellent album. It features Pattie Santos on vocals, Bud Cockrell on bass and vocals, Fred Webb on piano, organ, french horn, and vocals, and Val Fuentes on drums and vocals.

The arranging on this album is pretty perfect. Most of the songs were written by either Fred Webb or Bud Cockrell, which shows how important Bud was in bringing things together. The group uses their instruments pretty well, and the moods set on many of the songs were forced along by just the right sounding instrument. Using the tuba on "Down on the Bayou" was a touch of genius. You ought to listen to it. By the time this fifth album came out, Pattie Santos has emerged as a really good lead singer. Her voice, along with Bud's, is extremely versatile, and they can sing in the same mellow vein of previous albums, or switch to a quick rocking piece without showing any hesitation.

It's A Beautiful Day is one tremendously talented group that deserves their ranking of super group, if you're into classifying groups in this way. Special thanks should be given to all members of the concert committee, who have been working hard to make the spring concert successful. And let's hope that Sunday turns out to be...a beautiful day.

Album Inquest

Shawn Phillips

Faces
A&M SP 4363

By Andrew MacKenzie

The super-group we've all been waiting for: Shawn Phillips, Caleb Quaye, Stevie Winwood, and Glen Campbell?!? Actually, that particular combination of talents only joined forces for one cut on the album, but I thought the shock value was too much to pass up.

The title of the album is Faces, and in small print in the lower right hand corner of the back cover we find the words, "an anthology of music from 1969." And we all know what that means, don't we? Actually the statement is a vital point of information because without it I assure you there is absolutely no way of distinguishing the old numbers from the new; in fact it takes concentration to tell them apart no matter when they were recorded.

For those of you who have heard Shawn Phillips before, let me hasten to damp any spark of hope I may have kindled by mentioning the above talents who joined him for one cut, which is called, incidently, 'Parisien Plight II'. The man seems to radiate mediocrity: Winwood chords on organ, Quaye noodles on guitar, and Campbells' steel guitar is fortunately buried in the mix. The only flicker of interest in thirteen minutes of insipidness is a tenor sax solo by Chris Mercer.

The first cut on the album is probably the most representative of Phillips' style of writing. He called it 'Landscape' but it should have been 'Billboards'. His adolescent pseudo-poetic lyrics are only made more painful by his rock-jock pronunciation and phrasing; all of his music seems to be written in the belief that a chord change after every fourth beat is sufficient variety for anyone. And as if things weren't bad anough, he decided to bring in that master of musical novocaine, Paul Buckmaster, to do orchestral arrangements for 'Landscape' and ' 'L' Ballade', the second cut.

Anyone who's been following my reviews knows that this king of musical filler is my pet peeve anyway, and Buckmaster is second only to Phil Spector on my hate list: Buckmaster for pouring three inches of sugar syrup over everything Elton John has done, and Spector for his incredible fucking-over of the Beatles' Let It Be.

Whatever happened to George Martin? He's the only arranger I've ever heard in popular music who didn't start by adding a thousand violins to whatever was being recorded. Only when he was going for comic effects, like the horns in 'Good Morning Good Morning' or the schmaltzy orchestrations for 'Good Night', would he use more than one or two instruments for one melody line. He never allowed his presence to dominate a recording. Such taste, such restraint.

Ah, well. The dream is over, as they say. Meanwhile, back at Shawn Phillips, we find that the first international Muzak has been created (coagulated?) in the form of a seven minute piece called 'Chorale'. Shawn Phillips: guitars, sitars, vocals, and Sominex. Good background music for an organic food store.

Other treats include 'Hey Miss Lonely', a bad imitation C&W number; 'We', a hokey ballad; and ' I Took a Walk', which raves about pollution, social injustice, pornography, and whether pigs have wings.

Well, that's about it. Don't forget that Shawn Phillips will be appearing in person in Springfield sometime soon: You've been warned.

Eagles

Desperado
Asylum SD 5068

By David Sokol

Back in 1970, I got my first dose of Mason Proffit, a country folk-rock group who could harmonize something like the Byrds, and rock like Creedence at their best. They sang songs of the West, of gunmen and outlaws, and of the plight of the Indian. Their first two albums, Mason Proffit and Movin' Toward Happiness were recorded on Happy Tiger Records are are gems. Since then, they've changed labels twice and lost their magic touch. Needless to say, they've gotten little recognition, and their records are in the budget bins.

I've been looking with anticipation toward the release of a new Eagles album for quite some time. Their first was filled with tasty vocals and continually catchy tunes. As often as I played them, I just couldn't get tired of the Jackson Browne tunes, "Nightingale" and "Take It Easy" or any of the others for that matter. Where many songs these days reach their "desired listening threshold" after only three or four listenings, the songs on Eagles are as enjoyable the 47th time through as they were the first. In this respect, Eagles is like the first two Mason Proffit albums.

With Desperado, the Eagles second sojourn, the similarity is even more pronounced. The material itself is unified and thematic, dealing with the West, the gunman-outcast-desperado. Without the pretentions of a rock opera or rock musical yet with this sence of unity, Desperado succeeds in being a consistantly enjoyable recording, much in the same way as the Kink's Arthur.

Side one leads off with "Doolin-Dalton" a theme which is to be repeated twice later on. It is a slow, quiet ballad which, like other Eagles material takes a couple of listenings to really get into, but after this, it is tough to get the tune out of mind. It's the kind of song you wake up singing in the morning. "Twenty One" is a light country flavored rocker and "Out of Control" is their token Stones sound-alike, easily the low point of the album. It wouldn't be so bad except it degenerates completely at the "climax", making the following cut sound even better. "Tequila Sunrise" sounds like another Jackson Browne song but isn't. It's just a plaintive peaceful easy feeling song. Side one finishes with the title track, eloquent in its simplicity and arrangement. Perhaps in this era of overproductimn, what makes Eagles so enjoyable is their seemingly effortless ability to stay within the bounds of taste. In concert, Eagles are extremely tight, their vocals impeccable, and their playing perfect. This is even more apparent on their records.

Side two continues on, in the Mason Proffit tradition with meaningful and infectious material. "Certain Kind of Fool" should probably be the next single, simple and catchy like "Take It Easy". The short banjo piece and "Outlaw Man" are frighteningly reminiscent of "Johnny's Tune" and say, "Michael Dodge" or "Hard Luck Woman" from Mason Proffit. "Outlaw Man" was written by David Blue but blends well with the other material, all of which was written by Eagles. "Saturday Night" is another slow piece, a quiet memory of youth. "What ever happened to Saturday night, finding a girl and holding her tight." Even though rock lyrics are frequently merely words, put down only because they sound good, (or look good on paper) the Eagles vocals are so sincere sounding that even if the content of the lyrics is mundane or cliched, it sounds good. Such is the case with "Bitter Creek". The album closes with reprises of "Doolin-Dalton" and "Desperado", resolving the album on a definitive note.

Desperado succeeds in creating a mood, an intangible feeling which only music can produce. Even without knowing that this record traces "the rise and fall of the "Doolin-Dalton renegades" (as Rolling Stone's Paul Gambaccini puts it) the music stands on its own. Though the material is far from being complex (unlike Yes, Procol Harem, and Beethoven) it still sounds mature, unlike so much of the drek currently plaguing the "Hot 100". The vocal work and the Bass playing of Randy Meisner (Late of Poco and Rick Nelson) give a structure to the music which is almost tangible. One of the factors which makes folk-rock so unbearibly graspable is this kind of structure. The sound eminating from Eagles rock is a full total sound, the sound of a band playing together and not just musicians, each doing their own thing. Now all I can hope is that Terry Talbot and Mason Proffit hear this record and realize that their influence has been felt, after all they were doing it five years ago.

Archie Shepp

The Cry of My People
Impulse AS-9231

By Gary Gomes

Archie Shepp might be called a musical nomad by some. Such an identification might take place by viewing some of his earlier albums – Three for a Quarter, One for a Dime on Impulse and Live at the Donaueshingen Festival on MPS/BASE, to name a couple – which were absolutely mind-bending displays of technical virtuosity, small-group improvisation, and manipulattions that reached back to the most primal and gutsy sounds of life.

Now, Shepp, though he would sometimes go to the earlier musical forms of Black Music (playing a Blues with Cecil Taylor for instance) he stayed with his feet well-entrenched in the 'Avant Garde' ala Coleman and Taylor and Coltrane (the term Avant Garde is superficial at best, because when some of Coleman and 'Trane's stuff is heard in retrospect to Louis Armstrong, there's much more than a coincidental linkup). However, as he was saying in the interview that I participated in with him, the music was getting away from Black people – not necessarily in it's sound, but at least economically, because Blacks could no longer afford to hear it – himself included.

Now we move to the second set of observations as regards the music of Archie Schepp. Let us say he is a 'keeper of the flame' – a complete musician. A complete musician who understands what he is playing, understands the cultural and political ramifications of it, and realizes that, due to "historical omission", much of this rich musical continuum could be lost.

So an album like, say, Things Have Got to Change, Attica Blues, and The Cry of My People are not, as John Sinclair (who was a fine music critic in his day) says, "unrevolutionary statements"; as a matter of fact, the meanings of revolutionary and unrevolutionary, get lost from day to day. Rather, they become the solid front, the unifying factor, that is necessary in order for a culture to get a foothold against the dominant culture. And didn't Shepp, say, more often than enough for people to understand, that he is a folk musician. What matters is the message, not any superficial aesthetic formula. When you break it down, the entire things goes to people. And Shepp has one hell of a "folk tradition" to get his message across with.

One example of this is the heavily gospel-flavoured "Rest Enough (Song to Mother)", which, as Bill Hasson says on his liner notes, is a dedication to the spirits of Black women.

"A Prayer" by the late composer-musician Cal Massey is a searing, emotional piece of music which is beautifully orchestrated and arranged by Romulus Franceschini and Cal Massey, and anyone who thinks strings have lost their ability to transmit emotion should listen to this piece. As the title implies, the composition has a spiritual overtone that would frighten a cynic. After moving through the opening section, Harold Mabern comes in with a strong, almost Latin-flavoured background, which serves as a strong foil for Charles McGheee's trumpet solo, that leads into Shepps' soprano saxophone playing. Now, I'm not making comparisons here, but Shepp has to be one of the finest soprano sax players to hit this planet. His lyricism, plus the same raspy sound that he gets on the tenor, are present here. Beautiful.

"All God's Children Got A Home in the Universe" is another Shepp-tune, again "gospel-flavoured". The message in this is a bit too deep for instant musicological analysis, so I'll just let it out of these ill-equipped hands.

Moving along, the next composition is "The Lady", again with beautiful strings (and I'm not talking about Muzak-oriented nonsense such as you may hear in a supermarket – I mean, how many times would you hear Leroy Jenkins, a member of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, in a supermarket? or playing with Lawrence Welk, say?), which appears to be in memory of Billie Holliday. Along with Joe Lee Wilson's powerful vocals (which can't be properly captured on record–I know–I've seen him twice "in person"), comes Archie Shepp's rather vocalized tenor playing, and I'll be damned if it isn't one of the most human sounds I've heard coming out of any instrument.

Side two starts with the title cut, another song written by Cal Massey, who, like most Black musicians, didn't receive the attention he deserved before he died. The opening statement has a beautiful, emotional feel to it, with a chorus of female voices rendering a low, soulful treatment, which then breaks into another fluttering trumpet statement by Charles McGhee, which in turn leads into an extremely vocal tenor solo by Shepp.

"African Drum Suite-(Parts 1&2)" lends credence to the fact that Wm. G. Harris, who was one of the most incredible percussive voices around in the sixties (and still is) has turned out to be a fine 'straight' composer. The matching of Charles Greenlee's trombone and Joe Lee Wilson's voice is brilliant, and the fully orchestrated part comes off beautifully. Shepp's soprano, over the excellent percussion team (Neal DeFense, Terry Quaye, and A. Guilherme S. Franco), plus stalwarts Jimmy Garrisson (bass), Dave Burrell (piano–one of the best pianists this side of Cecil Taylor and McCoy Tyner, as is Mr. Garrisson one of the finest bass players in existence), and Harris, swoops and soars like a bird in full flight.

Finally, in order of play appearance, a Duke Ellington composition ("Come Sunday") tops the record. Mr. Shepp's rendition pays tribute to the master. Again the cultural thing. However, if you think it stops at Black Culture, look and listen again. Duke Ellington is one of the most important composers of all time, and no musician can seriously ignore Ellington's contributions to orchestration and arranging. And in Shepps' vibrant tenor voice it finds a sympathetic and empathetic interpreter.

This then, like Attica Blues is a very strong political and musical documentary, and yes, John, it is quite revolutionary. Or in the words of Bill Hasson, who co-ordinated the Black Musicians' Conference here: "This album must be seen as an artifact and the creative artists in it must be viewed as those committed transmitters of the cultural continuum in order for you the listener and the thinker to enjoy this historic endeavor." And I wonder how much longer this quality of music will survive on campus now that Terry Schwarz is being fired from the Fine Arts Council. Oh, you haven't heard? Oh, well, we can just let it die, like we let Charlie Parker and Billie Holliday, and John Coltrane and Eric Dolphy and Albert Ayler and Cal Massey die.

By the way, this album is dedicated to Cal Massey...who died. Look out you're not next.

Everything's Changing With Cold Blood

By Steve Feld

Lydia Pense was sitting in her New York City hotel room overlooking Central Park, talking on the phone to our reporter about her group, Cold Blood, and their current tour. It was late afternoon, Tuesday. Cold Blood has been on the road since April 13, and return on May 20 to their home in East Bay, a small town outside of Oakland.

In an hour, she and the boys will trek down to Long Island to play two sets as the headline group at My Father's Place. Thursday, they will share the bill with It's A Beautiful Day and the Sons as the Capitol Theatre in Pasiac, New Jersey. The same three groups are scheduled to play Saturday at the Orpheum in Boston. Sunday, it's Alumni Stadium, UMass-Amherst.

"Cold Blood has been through many, many changes", she said. "There are only three original members: Rod Ellicott on bass, Raul Matute (pronounced Ma-too-tay) on organ, and myself on lead vocals.

"We have a new drummer, Garlord Birch, whose personal energy has given us more funk, more drive and soul. He is largely responsible for our new sound. Our new guitarist is named Michael Sasaki. And we've got horns. There's Jack Walrath, lead trumpet and arranger, who has played with my favorite singer, Ray Charles. Max Haskett wrote a song, "Live Your Dream" for our new album, Thriller, and does vocals. Mike Andreas plays tenor sax and flute, and Skip Mesquite, formerly of Tower of Power, plays tenor sax, flute and vocals.

"We have four albums out now. Our new one, Thriller, is on our new label, Warners. We previously recorded for San Francisco Records. Thriller was recorded in San Francisco, at Wally Heider's. We also appeared on the Fillmore/The Last Days movie and soundtrack.

"We do mostly funky, driving numbers, but on the new album we do "Sleeping", the Band's song from Stage Fright. We were going to do the song a year ago, but we could never get it together. I really dug the tune, so we decided to do it. The Band did it in 3/4, we do it in 4/4. It's a nice tune. We also do a Boz Scaggs song, "I'll Be Long Gone."

"Yes, we've played college gigs outdoors before. Our show onstage consists mainly of stuff from our past albums, plus songs from our new one. I just hope it will be a nice day, Sunday.

"What do I think of people who put me down as just another Janis Joplin imitator? People will always compare you to somebody, but that's just their opinion, which really doesn't matter. I'm not trying to sound like her. I'm doing my own trip.

"Right, that's me on the cover of our first album. Am I still a blonde? Nope. Have you seen a picture of me lately? I've told you – everything's changed."

Truffaut's Delicious Black Comedy

By Robert Urbinati

Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me
Written for the screen by Francois Truffaut and Jean-Loup Dabadie, from the novel by Henry Farrell; Directed by Francois Truffaut; With Bernadette Lafont.

Truffaut has displayed a fascination for the wildly spirited, unconventional woman in many of his films, beginning with Catherine in Jules and Jim. The most recent addition to his list of uncanny spiritual sisters, and by far the most extreme case, is Camilla Gliss (Bernadette Lafont) in Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me. However, whereas Catherine, at the turn of the century, chose to defy convention, sleazy Camilla lives in an irrational contemporary world of erratic rewards and punishments, where she is nearly forced to behave immorally in order to survive. And whereas Catherine's behavior is basically sentimentalized eccentricity, by the time Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me is over Camilla has succeeded in murdering her husband, been instrumental in the life imprisonment of a sociologist, the suicide of an exterminator, and the accidental deaths of her mother-in-law and father. Although one doesn't necessarily justify her actions, we are not allowed to hate, sympathize, or even understand and the rest of the characters and their world seems so absurd that Camilla's crimes become comical. This is the essence of a type of humor that American filmmakers avoid, and British and European filmmakers thrive upon: black comedy.

There are very few truly great American black comedy films, and we rarely get the privilege of seeing the best British examples. Many of Hitchcock's films are peppered with black comic touches, and his single venture into total black comedy, The Trouble With Harry, in which Harry's corpse lies onscreen throughout most of the film, and is dragged, tripped over, and generally regarded as nonchalantly as a piece of wood, is a classic. (Psycho could also be considered a classic of black comedy, however the comedy is so black that few besides Hitchcock recognize it as such.) Dr. Strangelove and The Fearless Vampire Killers are two more successful black comedy efforts. What constitutes black comedy, is a neutral, almost indifferent attitude towards bizarre, exaggerated characters and situations. If the tone is bitter, the film becomes some sort of serious social statement, and the comedy is weakened. If the tone is sympathetic, like many American black comedies, the black is diluted. In some instances, the blend of diluted black comedy and pathos is admirable, The Hospital, for example; however most of the time, as in Where's Poppa? and Harold And Maude the alchemy is unsettling. French filmmaker Truffaut has given Americans something they don't often get: an entirely successful, pure black comedy.

A sociologist, doing research for a thesis on Criminal Women, interviews Camilla Bliss in prison, and through a series of hilarious flashbacks we witness her often ingenious and always immoral struggle to survive. Ingenuity and immorality constitute what she terms her "fate bets", i.e. her personal vengeance schemes. In the first flashback, we see Camilla as a grubby, neglected little girl, strolling aimlessly around her dilapitated farmhouse. Her father, a hulking drunkard, staggers out of the house kicking chickens and sputtering swear words and saliva. He climbs up a ladder into a barn, and the slovenly child, taking her first "fate bet" removes the ladder "needed to wash the windows," and her father falls to his death. Throughout the remainder of the film, she exploits or dispossesses anyone, with more forethought than afterthought in her effort to satiate her nymphomania and singing star aspirations. Yet her serious crimes seem no more than dismissable manifestations of eccentricity because every character in the film is completely ridiculous; the overbearing official sociologist who propounds his psychology textbook analysis of where poor Camilla went wrong, the devoutly religious exterminator who gets all heated talking about bugs and spiders and can make love to her only if she accidently trips and falls into him. (he consequently arranges such tumbles), the vain nightclub singer, who pops on a record of car racing at Indianapolis everytime he has sex, Camilla's moronic husband with his officious gun. It's a dog eat dog word, but somehow Truffaut manages to make all the devious devouring totally appetizing.

Bernadette Lafont in Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me.

Yet Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me is by no means typical Truffaut fin. The romance and nostalgia, the gentle and sympathetic treatment of the characters, the effortless amiability, all of what have come to be known as the components of Truffaut's style, are almost exclusively absent here. The Truffaut touch is evident occasionally; his tribute as a film historian to other genres, when the film lapses into mock melodrama (with Georges Delerue's Bernard Herrmannish music farcially pumping us on) or screwball comedy. Also it's evident in obsession with idiocyncratic secondary characters and, most obvious, his preoccupation with the born loser. But Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me is most remarkable for its difference in tone from other Truffaut films. Camilla, as well as the other zany characters in the film, are unsympathetically presented. They are exaggerated, and comical, but not really likeable. This is interesting to note especially when one takes into consideration that he has proven to have a seemingly effortless ability to create some of the most memorable, compassionately portrayed characters in film: Catherine in Jules and Jim, Charley in Shoot The Piano Player, Antoine Dornel in The 400 Blows, Stolen Kisses, and Bed and Board, to name a few. But the unsympathetic treatment is not a weakness in the film; it's consistently neutral tone is, in essence, its strength. By setting aside established propensities and talents, he has succeeded in unearthing new abilities with handling a most difficult genre. What he has given us, with Such A Gorgeous Kid Like Me, is a perfect, unadulterated, black comedy.

Slither: A Satisfying Little Picture

By Joe Kelley

directed by Howard Zieff; with Sally Kellerman, James Calan, and Peter Boyle.

Slither, the first feature film by former director of the Alka-Seltzer TV commercials Howard Zieff, is a screwball comedy with a difference. Though the film retains the comic flavor of a world of completely insane happenings, director Zieff has presented us with a new type of comedy, in which the traditional romantic entanglement which we have come to expect between a hero and heroine fails to materialize. Slither also contains one of the largest casts of almost totally unsympathetic characters I have come across in my film experience. It is largely this unsympathetic quality of character, joined with each character's individuality and consistency of action, that makes Slither such a satisfying little film.

Dick Kanipsa (James Cann) and an older friend have just been released from jail. Stopping at the broken-down house of the old friend for a few beers before setting out on the road, Dick stands nonchalantly in the backround while his friend turns on the TV set, pulls up the window shade, and promptly gets shot in the stomach by persons unknown. Dick hits the floor in panic as his friend clutches his stomach, walks calmly across the room, and sits in an armchair. Dick's main concern at this point is to try to pull the window shade back down. His efforts are greeted by a shower of bullets, and his friend, realizing himself to be near death, begins very sedately to relate the story of $312,000 that he and his partner Barry Fenaka (Peter Boyle) had stolen years before and entrusted to a third party for safe-keeping. This long story is punctuated by such dead-pan remarks as "You know, I really feel terrible." Dick learns the name of the man who is holding the money, but he must contact Fenaka to find out where the man lives. Dick's friend tells him to go down into the potato cellar through the trap-door conveniently located in the center of the living room floor. As Dick disappears beneath the floorboards, the dying man takes two bundles of dynamite from a nearby trunk, lights them up and settles back to watch TV as the fuses shorten. In a few seconds the house explodes in a storm of fire and rubble. As the smoke clears, we see Dick struggling out of the wreckage and high-tailing it down the road in search of Barry Fenaka, closely followed by a very mysterious large black van...

All of the above action takes place in the first five minutes of the film, before the credits have been flashed on the screen. This insane plot structure continues to complicate itself for the next ninety minutes, until the secret of the $312,000 and the mysterious black vans vearing the words "Willow Camp for Boys and Girls" is revealed. Zieff's main comic technique is to provide the viewer with typical screen images, and then allow the dialogue to comment ironically on the screen image. In the pre-credit sequence Dick's badly bleeding friend gives a long speech, seemingly unaware that he is wounded. This technique of incongruity between visual image and dialogue can also be noticed in Zieff's TV commercial work, most notably in the famous "I can't believe I ate the whole thing" advertisement. In the course of his travels, Dick Kanipsa is joined by Kitty Kopetski (Sally Kellerman), a speed freak who consumes candy by the ton and has a tendency to shoot up roadside diners for small change. They are in turn accompanied by Barry Fenaka (Peter Boyle) and his wife (Louise Lasser). Fenake has forsaken his criminal ways to host testimonial dinners for the Elks and to travel around in his house trailer. Their search for the mysterious and elusive man-with-the-money forms the basis for the comic suspense of the tale. The single black van following Dick multiplies to two identical vans, which closely shadow the trailer of the four main characters, trying to keep Dick and his friends from locating the $312,000.

Director Zieff has succeeded in making one of the most satisfying commercial film comedies in a long while, largely by undercutting our expectations of the ways in which films traditionally work themselves out. According to traditional form, there should be a Clark Gable-Claudette Colbert type romantic relationship between James Caan and Sally Kellerman, but Kanipsa and Kopetski just can't seem to pull it off. As they move toward each other for their first screen kiss, at the precise moment when the violins on the soundtrack should soar, Caan stops to take a wad of gum out of his mouth. In undercutting so nearly the sexual attraction that the viewer may feel for the characters, Zieff keeps our feelings toward the characters from weakening the full comic possibilities inherent in their actions. Everyone in the cast can be milked for gags, as none of the characters exude enough finesse to emerge as stars who dominate the action to the detriment of the sustained comic tone set by Zieff.

James Caan emerges as one of the best comic male leads in recent years, synthesizing the screen characters of Robert Redford, Eliot Gould and Burt Reynolds, without falling prey to the weaknesses apparent in their screen characterizations. He does not dampen his comic bite by becoming overly-coy like Redford, or excruciatingly dumb like Gould, or caught up in his own macho-mystique like Reynolds. Caan's role in Slither is essentially a self-parody of the image which the fan magazines have set for him: that of the athletic womanizer. The character of Dick Fenaka has the outward appearance for the role, but he is unfortunately a little uncoordinated, both in body and in brain. No matter how hard he tries, he always ruins whatever small semblance of jock coolness he can muster. Two minutes after he buys the obligatory pair of "Robert Redford" mirror sunglasses, Caan drops them on the sidewalk, smashing the lenses and his ego simuiteneously.

Sally Kellerman, as the speed-freak Kitty Kopetski, becomes a very annoying personality in the course of the film, as one comes to feel that the off-screen Kellerman has the same character as the hyperactive freak she portrays in Slither. With her brittly angular sexiness, her features becomes almost frighteningly jagged in close-up. Director Zieff seems to have noticed this propensity, and continually underlines the kinky schizophrenia of her screen role by giving us huge close-ups of her sharp features. By the end of the film, we are as glad to be rid of her as Caan is.

Zieff has succeeded admirably in keeping a sustained comic tone of total insanity through the full length of the film. In an age when the successful Hollywood-produced comedy seems to be an institution of the past, it is reassuring to have films like Slither around.

Anderson's Sprawling, Off Base Epic

By Robert Nesti

Oh Lucky Man!
Screenplay by David Sherwin, from an idea by Malcolm McDowell; directed by Lindsay Anderson; with Malcolm McDowall, Ralph Richardson, Rachel Roberts, and Arthur Lowe.

Lindsay Anderson's O Lucky Man! is a bitter, cool contemporary equivalent of the picaresque tale of the young man who travels from the country to the city in search of his fortune. This guileful, charming, and, mostly lucky young man usually started out a rogue who, after a series of amorous adventures and financial swindles, becomes a titled gentleman, but without the stuffiness. It wouldn't be unlike him to flip a common, cursory gesture at a world which brought him such good fortune. In O Lucky Man! the situation is given an ironic twist and is played for quite a few hard laughs. The young man, here named Mick Travis, (Malcolm McDowell) is the naive, young hero prime for success in a world which gobbles him up without regret. A world where a British industrialist uses him to deliver napalm jelly to a group of African nationalists who plan to use it on their rebellious citizenry; a world where mad doctors trap patients and turn them into sheep in a series of bizarre experiments; a world where bullish policemen intimidate witnesses to a fatal automobile accident so they might loot the victims. In short, a malignant, chaotic universe where Mick, for all his charm and guile, is little else than a pawn in the big guy's game. Mick, like a latter-day Candide, trusts in his masters and peers, and is nearly destroyed by consequence. His story is rooted in the picaresque tradition; director Lindsay Anderson uses it to shape his hero's adventures.

O Lucky Man! is divided into sections named for the geographical area of Britain where the story takes place. It's a sprawling, satirical epic with a punch; a hard film, and a brilliant one in an insular, almost too clever way.

The film is Anderson's contribution to a Sixties hybrid form of the message film: the Existential Schtick Picture. Fellini gave form to this subgenre about a decade ago with 8 1/2 and the broodings of its director hero. American, more than European, filmmakers picked up on this kind of movie and in the late sixties led the barrage of bear-their-soul epics. These films, such as Mike Nichols' Catch—22, Arthur Penn's Little Big Man, Richard Lester's Petulia, and more recently George Roy Hill's Slaughterhouse—Five, feature a protagonist at odds with a hostile, unfeeling environment. This isn't anything new; witness films from The Last Laugh to Umberto D to Shoot The Piano Player, the theme of social alienation has long been popular. The new twist is the obvious symbolic identification patterns these pictures evoke in their audiences. Just plug in to them and any number of the rotten agitations which beset your life can be simplified and easily assimilated for mass consumption. Our consciousness have been so raised or so these films suggest, that we now can root for Indians as they massacre cavalry officers or laugh at a hysterical woman's fatal auto accident because the values being destroyed in each instance are so rotten that they need to be purged in a ritualistic, audience participatory way. These films present the agony of existence on their sleeves, then proceed to make villains of the latest group of social bogeymen, be they capitalists or rednecks. O Lucky Man! doesn't do this as obviously as Little Big Man or with as much venom as Petulia—Lindsay Anderson is too good a filmmaker to allow his film to slip into polemical dribble; yet the film suggests the same paranoid logic and concludes with the character awakening scene common to these films. They make you long for a time when film directors didn't feel obliged to answer the problems besetting manking.

Malcolm McDowell

O Lucky Man!, then, represents the kind of film which lays philosophical groundwork as it unwinds its story. It's a one-two punch that means knock you silly, but only leads you to ponder why anyone would contrive such a film. This, though, with O Lucky Man! is somewhat unfair since Lindsay Anderson is one of the most meticulous, poetic, and dynamic filmmakers working on the commercial features today. Even a flawed work, such as the short, delightful The White Bus, is filled with a rhythmic spunk and a casual beguiling comic sense few fantasies films can attain. And a very fine film such as If . . . tears you from your seat. Few films of the past ten years are as good as If . . ., released some five years ago and winner of the Grand Prix at Cannes. It shimmers with the vibrance and excitement of its subject, and a violent youth rebellion in an oppressive British Public School. It's a beautifully etched portrait of human struggle with a cast of British schoolboy Everymen so identifiable that the revolutionary sweep of the narrative becomes irresistable. Much of the beauty of If . . . comes with the precise, exciting cinematic shape Anderson has given it; some sequences are so brilliantly conceived that they return to the mind long after seeing the film. The idyllic tone of If . . . is in pervect pitch to the lingering, ambivalant style of Anderson. It seems like a documentary from memory. In O Lucky Man! the fable becomes hard-edged, surreal, and much of the beauty is lost. The tone is now cynical, playing with both cinematic and social conventions. For instance, its opening sequence: Prior to the credits, the film opens with an old-fashioned title which reads "Once upon a time . . ." then cuts to a short parody of a Russian silent film concerned with the struggling worker and his oppressive master. The master is punishing a young man, a Latin American coffee bean picker, in a most extraordinary cruel way: the boy's hands are to be chopped off. As the machete falls on the hands, the film cuts to the hands of Alan Price at the piano in a recording studio as he hits the opening chorus of the title song.

This bizarre emotional clouting continues throughout the film, and the satiric tone remains as clever and astringent. Anderson has a wonderful, off-handish way with comic bits and O Lucky Man! finds its sense of direction and charm through its eclectic humor. The story begins with Mick (Malcolm MacDowell) as a coffee salesman whose sincere smile catches the eye of a seductive Public Relations officer, broadly played by Rachel Roberts in one of her three roles. She sends him upcountry to fill the vacancy of a regional executive. He is told to make a connection at a location which turns out to be an atomic energy research site. He is captured, tortured, and escapes, only to be picked up and brought to a hospital where a mad doctor is performing horrible experiments upon unwilling victims. Again escaping, Mick is picked up by a rock group headed for London, en route he is seduced by the young woman, named Gloria, who travels with the group. She turns out to be the runaway daughter of a wealthy industrialist and Mick, always wanting to get ahead, uses this chance meeting as an excuse to see her father, Sir James. Mick becomes Sir Jame's valet but is incriminated and jailed in an international business deal. In jail Mick becomes pure, spending his time reading the great books and philosophers. Once out again, he attempts to live by these great books, but is quite nearly killed for being so naive. It's a crazy quilt of a picture, jumping from episode—to—episode with a logic determined by sections on a map and, ending with a hard-core, philosophical scene the likes of which haven't been seen on the screen since David Hemmings picked up the imaginary tennis ball and the game went on. Here Mick is picked out of a crowd by a movie director casting picture in a most unorthodox fashion by inviting young men off the streets and into a crowded audition hall. The director orders Mick to smile. "What is there to smile about?" Mick responds. "Don't ask why," the director retorts. Mick smiles and the picture ends with a wild, Felliniesque party, reminiscent of the ending to 8 1/2.

The film is bursting with cross-references to other directors, it's all part of Anderson's sly humor and your appreciation of the jokes hinges on how many of these bits you recognize. Since humor pretty much propels the film, these references work well into the whole. The only problem they present is if people begin to take them seriously, especially in terms of the salient similarities to A Clockwork Orange, which is referred to explicitely, a number of times. This would be a grosse error since much of the writing of the film is autobiographical for McDowell. David Sherwin worked from a conception by the young actor (who was once a coffee salesman and was once arrested at a military base as Mick is) then collaborated with Lindsay Anderson on the finished script. It's awkward and rambly, but filled with enough clever perversities and situations to keep this three hour and six minute film entertaining. Anderson has a great sense of rhythm and O Lucky Man! is beautifully modulated; building, peaking, and climaxing effortlessly, and the film is shot with casual, slightly off-handish, hard look by Miroslav Ondricek, who also shot If . . .

Mick Travis, for those familiar with If . . ., is the same name as the McDowell character in that film and the treatment of the character in both works suggests the differences between them. In If . . . Mick is tremendously entertaining, intelligent, anarchial; a character whose personality makes for a personal definition of freedom. In O Lucky Man! he's a cipher; partly out of satrical reasons, but mostly because he appears to have been conceived as a victim, and the film suffers as a result. His world is a paranoic fantasy come real; it reminded me of the nasty world of Thomas Pynchon novels where paranoia is the watchery of existence. There's a catch to this conception of Mick: since he is such a vacuous character we can fill his void with our own special quirks. He becomes an Everyman by default and his story becomes ours through a calculated blunder. It's as if Mick character was drained for a joke but the joke was on him and he'd always remain that shallow. Malcolm McDowell is an actor with an irresistible screen presence (if If . . . didn't prove that, then the opening shot of A Clockwork Orange did), but he's lacklustre as this vacuum-packed Mick. McDowell seems to be little else than a dazed youth during the first part of the film and an awkward do-gooder (who gets it good) during the latter half; it's impossible to think of one memorable moment similar to the bravura strokes he brought Mick in If . . .. His supporting cast is, for the most part, fine, although Rachel Roberts appears a bit too old as the modish ingenue and Ralph Richardson isn't sinister enough as Sir James.

O Lucky Man! is such an expansive and eclectic work that it registered an ambivalent chord in me. Having seen the film at a special preview showing over the Easter weekend, it left me excited and bewildered, entertained and disturbed, somewhat exalted and a bit depressed. I found myself equally attached and detached from the film at the same time. Lindsay Anderson is such a master of cinematic technique that his films go beyond mere craft into an area of great, lyrical filmmaking. If . . . will remain one of my favorite films; an epic on a small scale containing a perfectly balanced image of the intimacy of friendship and the power that friendship contains. His new film is more ambitious, and is a harder film to like. Anderson's canvas with O Lucky Man! is a bit too broad, a bit too crowded with the chaos he sees is life, but I can't think of a better man to watch go slightly astray.

Two Years Makes Some Difference

By Laura Dubowski

Written by Herman Raucher; directed by Paul Bogart with Grimes and Jerry Houser.

Why can't they just let a good film alone? This is the question that confronted me when I heard that Class of '44 had been released as, of course, the sequel to Summer of '42. It was with a cynical eye that I went in to see for myself the continuation of events in the lives of Hermie, Oscy, and Benjy. The boys are now two years older as the story opens on their high school graduation. At this point, the trio separates and its bye-bye for Benjy, for he has joined the Marines and leaves his astonished cohorts and the movie behind. Hermie and Oscy have acquiesced to their parents wishes and try out a year of college instead of signing up for their stint. Predictably, Hermie is the more serious of the two as he studies, writes for the campus newspaper, and eventually finds a girl for himself. Oscy, as one can expect from his performance on the beach two years earlier, is out for all he can grab. He tries out for the football team and is always on the lookout for a good lay.

In the meantime, Julie, Hermie's attractive, slick, and worldly girlfriend persuades the pair to join a fraternity. Accordingly, this situation is capitalized on to the fullest extent-all the way from the initiation scenes (with the usual sufferings inflicted upon freshmen) to a fraternity formal (with everyone comfortably settling down to their new lifestyle).

In the final scenes of the film, tragedy occurs, which of course, can be expected by knowing Summer of '42. Hermie's girlfriend leaves him and his father suddenly dies. It is at this point in the film that the director, Paul Bogart, weakly attempts to give insight to the character of Hermie, who up until now has lost all semblance of the qualities he once possessed two summers before.

After the funeral, Hermie goes out on the town with Oscy who has been expelled from school. He was pimping for a 32 year old prostitute named Glenda and was caught in the act by a school official. (In those days it was a major offense to be apprehended with a girl in your room.) This is alright with Oscy as he is allowed to enlist in the army, but much to his chagrin he is stationed on Governor's Island. Hermie manages to get drunk and start a barroom brawl. After finding his way home and somewhat shaking off his stupor he begins to ask the inevitable questions: Who was his father? Why did he never get to really know him? Director Bogart apparently comes to the realization that it is too late in the movie to try to develop any of the characters so he immediately abandons the attempt and thrusts Hermie back to school and into the arms of Julie who has nobly decided to take our hero back.

If Class of '44 were a film on its own, instead of a sequel to another, it could be considered a tolerable movie. It is funny - with such shots of Oscy's antics on the football field and Hermie parking with his girl in a car equipped with a stick shift. It is touching - with the naive and childish Benjy leaving his best friends for the Pacific, and Hermie carrying his dog around after the death of his father. However, there was such a movie as Summer of '42 and it is hard to forgive the producers for ever creating a continuation. But they did and the results are comparably below par. The characters are superficial, the situations are snoliceably contrived, and the humor a shade overdone.

Class of '44 is content to be a funny movie, full of situations designed in such a way so that the audience can identify with them. The music, the clothes, the men in uniform, seen on every street are all part of war time United States. Growing up during this period are memories still deeply imbedded in the minds of at least one generation of movie-goers. And naturally college, with its fraternities, boring professors, and other trials can be related to a great part of the film audience. From Julie's red lipstick and ankle socks, to the guy's sweater vests, from the Uncle Sam Wants You posters on the campus bulletin boards to Oscy's cry of "Hubba, hubba," the sights and sounds of war time America are evident and accurate, without being overdone. Paul Bogart manages to convey the very culture and images of life in the mid-forties.

The young men of Class of '44.

Yet Class of '44 is not up to be caliber of its predecessor. Where Summer of '42 was bittersweet, tender, and sensitive, Class of '44 is merely humorous and occassionally sad. In two years Hermie has progressed from a sensitive, idealistic boy to an average, everyday college kid. This is disappointing, but perhaps it can't be helped. It would seem hard to follow up the closing scenes of Summer of '42 and Class of '44 has aptly proven that fact.

The older Gary Grimes and Jerry Houser, the stars of the film, are capable of handling their not-too-demanding roles. It is a pity that they weren't allowed to escape the shadow of their former movie. In fact, it's a pity that Class of '44 had to be so named. If it was able to stand on its own and not ride on the coattails of a previous success, it could be considered an above average film.

SPRING CONCERT FEATURING: IT'S A BEAUTIFUL DAY, COLD BLOOD, BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN

All right, this is the big one of the year; the one that you've been asking all your friends about—who's gonna be here?

Bruce Springsteen—hyped as "a cross between Van Morrisson and Bob Dylan," as the press releases say.

Cold Blood is a San Francisco outfit which has been tagged jazz-rock. They have a fine vocalist in Lydia Pense.

It's a Beautiful Day gained some notoriety years back (the third generation of San Francisco bands) with "White Bird". Classy, funky hard rock.

Sponsored by the Concert Committee, and it will take place at 1:30 p.m. in the Stadium.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC FESTIVAL

The second and third in a series on concerts highlighting contemporary classical music (the first being the performance of the Juilliard String Quartet on Thursday). If you want to find out what's been happening since Tchaikovsky split the scene check it out.

Contemporary Chamber Music on Saturday night, the University Wind Ensemble on Sunday. Call 545-0202 or visit Herter 125 (Fine Arts Office) for details on place of performance, exact time, and admission price.

ALICE ADAMS (1935)

Adapted from a novel by Booth Tarkington, this astringent social drama about a young girl's attempt at social climbing is most memorable for the splendid performance of Katherine Hepburn in the title role. Director George Stevens' s first film; he's very good at portraying the Babbitt-like hypocricy of the small, Appalachian town where the film takes place. The low keyed tone captures the mundane reality of life in the Thirties. Hepburn's performance is filled with force and energy—it remains one of her finest. The supporting cast, led by Fred MacMurray as the rich boy Alice finally latches on to, is equally fine. One of the best social dramas of the Thirties, sadly ignored by most. One faist note: the foolish happy ending. With The Women. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 5/8, 7.

BEFORE THE REVOLUTION (1962)

Bernardo Bertolucci's first commercial film, an extraordinary debut at the age of twenty-two. The film is sweeping, lyrical, celebration of youth; a one-of-a-kind film, bursting with energy and such natural cinematic strokes that the somewhat loosely congealed story works. The story is a modern adaptation of Stendahl's "The Charterhouse of Parma" which Bertolucci adapts with the skill and sobriety of a master. Bertolucci was a prize-winning poet at the age of twenty-one and he has a poet's gift for using objects, landscapes, and humans as part of his artistic syntax. Playing with The Spider Strategem. Amherst Cinama, Amherst.

BODY AND SOUL (1947)

A young man, beautifully played by John Garfield, from the slums battles his way to the top of the fight racket, only to learn that the crooked way isn't necessarily the best. Hard-hitting melodrama, crisp and rugged, with some excellent prizefight sequences. Recommended. Lilli Palmer is near perfect in one of the best films ever made about boxing. Camous Center Auditorium, Monday, 5/7, 9.

BROTHER SUN, SISTER MOON

Franco Zefferell's youth operatta about the life and times of St. Francis of Assisi. He escapes the materialistic vacuum of his father's home, sees visions, and builds a commune-like mission for his band of fellow believers in the outskirts of Assisi. The film ends with a visit to the Pope and the sumptiously appointed finale recalls the best of Cecil B. DeMille by way of the worst of Busby Berkeley. A hokey stab at relevancy, beautiful to look at, but shallow and shapeless. Graham Faulkner plays the limp-wristed Francis, his sexless laison with Judi Bowker is meant to represent the purity of the celebite life, but it appears to be a fag-to-fag hag relationship. Alec Guiness plays the Pope in the greatest headdress since Carmen Miranda last blessed the screen with three-foot garlands of fruit piled on her head. With Guiness its bejeweled, Donovan plays the plodding score, Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

THE CHEERLEADERS

CLASS OF '44

The inevitable sequel to Summer of '42. Directed by Paul Bogart, with Gary Grimes and Jerry Houser. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE DEVIL IS A WOMAN (1935)

In Spain at the turn of the century, a beautiful vamp, Concha Perez, played by Marlene Dietrich, captivates an aristocrat, Don Pasqual, who protects her but whom she dominates sexually for years. She falls in love with a young man, Antonio Galvan (Romero), and, after the two men fight a duel, she leaves with him for Paris. Director Josef Von Sternberg had wanted to call his film "Capriccio Espagnol" but Lubitsch (then head of production at Paramount) rejected both this and the English title of the novel, The Woman and the Puppet. Though less indicative of plot,

In his autobiography Sternberg wrote: "With the dice loaded so that I could not win, I paid a final tribute to the lady I had seen lean against the wings of a Berlin stage..." If The Devil is a Woman is a "final tribute" to Dietrich's femme-fatale qualities, it is also a successful blending of the decadent romanticism of Pierre Louys's novel and Sternberg's own preoccupations with authoritarianism and personal freedom. The unorthodox qualities of the film infuriated critics and audiences alike in 1935. For many years it had an underground reputation as a "lost" classic. Its recent reappearance in general circulation has only increased its reputation and many now consider it among the most beautiful films ever made. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, 5/11, 7.

THE DISCREET CHARM OF THE BOURGEOISIE (1972)

Luis Bunuel has spent most of his long and erratic career ferfently satirizing the attitudes, behavior, and institutions of the privileged classes. This film crystallizes this director's philosophical themes in a single image, that of a dinner party of six, three men and three women, which is constantly interrupted. Bunuel uses this party as a metaphor to portray both the resiliancy and the underlying destructive urge of the Middle Class. It's a perfectly toned film; the seventy-two year old Bunuel has never been in as firm control of his material and it's a celebration of his social politics and bitter wisdom. One of the best films of last year. Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Calvin Theater, Northampton.

THE EMIGRANTS

Jan Troell's second film was recently cited as the most successful film ever shown in Sweden. It is the first half of a two-part film concerned with the emigration to America of a group of Swedes during the 1840's. It is a historical film of great resonance; the journey of this small group of travelers is made into a vivid and compelling experience. The film lost some thirty minutes in its American version, but the two-and-one- half which remain introduce us to a filmmaker of unique talent and vision.

Troell is a former cinematographer and his experience behind the camera evidences itself in what visually is the loveliest film of the year. He frames each image as if it were his last, but because of his strong-bored plot the film never becomes a mere succession of pretty images. It is a film which grows with each viewing, with evocative images that stay in the mind/x. The film suggests a breakthrough for the historical film. One which builds from the experience itself and doesn't impose upon history melodramatic conventions. The film leaves you yearning for its second half, titled "The New Land" and scheduled for release early next year. It was one of the few films this past year worth recommending without qualification. Two strong performances from Max Von Sydow and Liv Ullman as the couple frustrated by an unproductive farm and longing for the change the New Land offers them. Paris Cinema, Springfield.

EVERYTHING YOU EVER WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX ... BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK

Six questions from David Reuben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?;) and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the Inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy the Fifties, sci-fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag coquettishly dancing in front of a mirror or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of ejaculation. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 5/6, 7 and 9:30.

EXIT SMILING (1926)

A wonderfully funny comedy, presumed lost byt happily recovered recently by the American Film Institute. Bea Lillie can do more riotously funny things with a string of pearls than most performers can do with ten pages of dialogue and 100 props. If you don't laugh hysterically at the great Lady Peel's seducing a reluctant gent, you'd better rush to your doctor and check your eyesight and funnybone. Directed by Sam Taylor, this film reminds us how tragically the motion picture industry wasted Lillie's superb talents over the Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 5/5, 7:30.

FELLINI SATYRICON (1969)

Fellini's journey through antiquity, staggering visual experience. Adapted from the first century Roman novel by Petronius, the film concerns the exploits of three bisexual boys in Rome before Christ. Fellini has said he hoped to use all the dream imaginery he had ever wished to film. The images are memorably bizarre. Spoken in the original latin, it is a modern film master interpretation of a dead culture. Mahar, Friday, 5/4, 7, 9, 11.

A brilliant comedy, presumed lost, but recovered by the American Film Institute (the people who gave you REEFER MADNESS). It is one of those silent comedies in which the plot doesn't matter, only the manner in which the star makes her way through the film. THE GARDEN OF THE FINZI—CONTINIS
Victoria DeSica's first major film in decades is this haunting, stunning essay on the tragedy of Jews in Fascist Italy. The story, based upon the semi-autobiographical novel by Giorgio Bassani, concerns how a middle class man finds himself involved with the decaying world of the Finzi-Continis, a rich aristocratic Italian family of landowners. He witnesses the languid, insular behavior of the family's two youngest children. The film makes a life-like corrolation between their lifestyle and Mussolini's half-hearted attempts to rid Italy of Jews, which were sufficient enough to wipe out the Finzi-Continis and all they stood for. Probably the most beautiful film of the year. Compassionately told and moving, with Deminique Sanda, and Helmut Berger. DeSica's best work since Two Women. Cinema X, Springfield.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES
The film biography of the popular pop singer from the Thirties and Forties Billie Holiday is mounted with care and style in this enjoyable throwback to the three-handkerchief Hollywood bio's of the Fifties. It is reminiscent of I'll Cry Tomorrow and The Helen Morgan Story in its tragic story of an entertainer who slowly destroys herself from problems not truly her own doing. Its fascinating performance by the female star. A star is born in Diana Ross who may not be Billie Holiday, she is a pop singer not a song stylist as Ms. Holiday was, but is an enchanting screen personality. What is best about her performance is that we are never reminded that Ms. Ross was once the plastic queen of Motown. She performs with a spontaneity in the early sections then admirably the intensity of Ms. Holiday's struggle with heroin. Her acting is the film's best point. Her singing is good, it has a tight, raspy, sensuous quality; but it doesn't suggest Billie Holiday's reading of a song. Diana Ross sings all the Holiday standards, but you have to return to the originals for their definitive interpretation. Director Sidney Furie makes the entire mess very agreeable and, in the end when Ms. Holiday stands on the Carnegie Hall stage, quite moving. Hadley Drive-in, Hadley.

MARJOE
A cinema documentary by Howard Smith and Sarah Kernochan of the "Village Voice" about a kid brought up from the age of three to be a revivalist preacher, though his true wish is to follow in Mick Jagger's footsteps as a rock superstar. Leon Russell recently introduced him at a West Coast concert and his visits to the talk shows are beginning to make him one of television's most fascinating personalities. His film works sometimes and his story is told with a good deal of sympathetic irony that makes Marjoe seem less a shyster and more a victim of circumstance. Cinema X, Springfield.

M*A*S*H (1971)
The most memorable film comedy of 1971 and the best military satire since Kurbrick's Dr. Strangelove in 1964. Robert Altman has structured a loose, profane, comedy about the way three surgeons manage to keep their sanity during the Korean War. Their behavior may lead you to think the war was one big fat party, nonetheless their exploits are both hilarious and irreverent as they nearly quite literally shoot the bird at the Army Manor.

Saturday, 5/5, 7, 9, 11.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM
Woody Allen's stage success was brought to the screen by Herbert Ross, but the movie remains all Allen's His brilliantly conceived story revolves around a movie reviewer who sees old movies all day and when he's not he fantasizes about his hero, "Bogey." Woody Allen plays the shy, bumbling fool who gets divorced and enters his own world of fantasies. Ross' direction is perfect in the scenes which justapose old footage from Casablanca with scenes of Woody and his girlfriend, Diane Keaton. At the very end of the film Woody says goodbye to Ms. Keaton at the airport in a direct which is so inspired that only Woody's ingenious mind could conceive of such a set up. The comedy is less verbal than many of Woody's previous successes (Bananas, Take the Money and Run) but his slapstick style and sympathetic nature make it just as funny. Diane Keaton, Michael's second wife in The Godfather, gives a tender comid performance as Woody's best friend's wife. Hadley, Drive-in.

SLEUTH
One of those filmed plays which shouldn't succeed but does (and brilliantly) thanks to an exciting and ingenious screenplay by Anthony Schaeffer and the awesome acting abilities of Sir Laurence Olivier and Michael Caine. The film works by providing us with traditional formula mystery situations; and then refusing to let these situations play themselves out in a traditional manner. Joseph L. Mankiewicz's direction keeps the film from being too verbal, his camera probes and weaves in and about the English manor house where the unusual set of parlour games takes place. Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Academy of Music, Northampton.

SOLYENT GREEN
A futuristic detective thriller, with Charleston Heston, Leigh Taylor-Young, Chuck Connors, and Edward G. Robinson. Palace Cinema, Springfield.

THE SOUND OF MUSIC (1965)
The musical, with Julie Andrews, neatly dressed children, smiling, singing nuns, Nazis, the Alps, and music and lyrics by Rodgers and Hammerstein. Directed by Robert Wise, now in super-wide screen which means the tops of the mountains are probably chopped off. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SPIDER STRATEGEM
Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE (1951)
Blanche (Vivian Leigh), the daughter of a once wealthy southern family, goes to live with her sister, Stella and her husband, Stanley. Her refined nature is disgusted at their squalid apartment and animal-like vulgarity. She is courted by Mitch, a shy, middle-aged man, but he leaves after Stanley recounts her past history and how she had to leave the town where she was a schoolteacher because of her numerous men. Elia Kazan had originally directed the play on the stage with Marlon Brando and Kim Hunter in the same roles. This skillful screen adaptation is much aided by the sets and low-key lighting, which convey an atmosphere of fawdry squalor. Kazan himself describes it as "a beautiful play that I shot without softening or deepening it, filming it as it was because there was nothing to change." The performances of Vivien Leigh and Marlon Brando (convincingly vigorous and primitive as a Polish immigrant) won them a number of awards. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday, 5/7, 7 and 11.

THROUGH A GLASS DARKLY (1961)
On a remote Baltic island, Karin, a schizophrenic, lives with her doctor husband, Martin, her father, David, a famous novelist, and her teen-age brother, Minus. All feel an inability to express feelings for each other. Minus is worried about sexual problems and his father's departure on a lecture tour. Karin's mental illness is intensified when she learns that her father is almost clinically observing her deterioration and she rejects reality for the world where her mysterious voices announce the coming of God. In this state, she seduces Minus then asks to be sent back to the hospital with Martin. David and his son are left alone and David tries to explain his new understanding of what love and God mean.

Through a Glass Darkly forms the first part of a kind of trilogy with Winter Light and The Silence. In it Bergman seems to search for a new interpretation of "God" other than the conventional one with which he was raised. Though the ending of the film is unconvincingly rhetorical (Minus declaring joyfully "My father spoke to me," and David orating on the nature of God) its theme is lucidly developed and it is full of some of Bergman's most unforgettable sequences—Karin lost in her own world, the seduction of Minus, and the slow descent of the helicopter as Karin screams "God is a spider!" Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Sunday, 5/6, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE WIZARD OF OZ (1939)
Despite decor which now seems vulgar this well-loved film survives as Hollywood's best retelling of a fairy story, mainly because of the delightful score by Harold Arlen and E. Y. Harburg, and because Judy Garland, though actually too old for Dorothy, successfully portrayed the essential innocence and wonder which make such stories live. An excellent supporting cast included Ray Bolger as the Scarecrow, Jack Haley as the Tin Man, Bert Lahr as the Cowardly Lion, Margaret Hamilton as the Wicked Witch and Frank Morgan as the Wizard, Victor Fleming directed the Technicolor which added so much at the time now seems garrish. Smith College, Saturday, 5/5, 2 p.m.

THE WOMEN (1939)
Clare Boothe Luce's wonderful play about women is a delight on the screen. Comedy-drama with a load of plots, but for the most part a top female cast makes merry with Mrs. Luce's dialogue. A splendid cast, all women led by Norma Shearer, Rosiland Russell, and Joan Crawford. Directed by George Cukor. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 5/8, 9.

Working People: Express Your Anger

On May 5th in the major cities across the nation mass demonstrations against high prices, unemployment, budget cutbacks, and the wage freeze are planned. On that day in Boston a march assembling at the JFK Government center at noon and a rally on the Common has gained widespread support in the Boston area, including local #1199 Hospital workers, the Amalgamated Meat cutters, various Third World community groups, consumer unions, NOW, the National Peace Action Coalition, and the Socialist Workers and Communist parties.

The purpose of the protests is to express the anger of working people against inflation and unemployment and their determination to independently force the governing parties to take effective action against these problems. Over the past two years, but especially in the last four months, it has become 'perfectly clear' that inflation is not receding, but rather intensifying, making record leaps in price increases and undermining the real wages of working people. Likewise unemployment has not dramatically decreased, despite Nixon's statistical manipulations, and the figures for Third World communities, especially among urban youth, are astronomical.

It has also become 'perfectly clear' that Nixon's claim that wage increases are the source of inflation, and that worker and owner are equally sacrificing, are simply lies. The real cause of inflation is capitalism itself, an economic system based on the pursuit of profits for a tiny minority, and under the kind of monopoly capitalism that we have in this country inflation has become a permanent characteristic. Even government statistics show that over the past ten years real wages have always remained below the rate of inflation, and since Phase I began in August 1971 wages have risen only a fraction of price increases. Also as only 25% of the American workforce is unionized the majority of working people face an even more severe attack on their standard of living.

Secondly, the corporations have been and are reaping tremendous profits from the squeeze working people face. Since Phase I the major industrial corporations and many smaller companies, have reported historic and absolutely unprecendented profits, the highest in the history of the U.S. Lately such trends have continued such that Iowa Beef Processors, who handle 1/8th of the nation's total beef, made at 95% increase in profits during 1972, the first quarter (1973) reports of most corporations detail more of the same.

Inflation and unemployment are inherent in capitalism, and these problems are exacerbated by the government's wage controls, high taxes on workers, and Nixon's cutbacks. To effectively fight these problems working people are going to have to fight for cost-of-living escalator clauses in all contracts and pension payments, an end to the wage controls and the right to strike guaranteed for all workers, a shortening of the work week with no reduction of pay to spread the work around, and an end to all war spending and social cutbacks. Ultimately working people are going to need their own political party to fight for these demands against the Democratic and Republican parties who own and control this country.

May 5th is a crucial first step in the struggle for immediate gains and in developing the long-term struggle for a permanent end to inflation and unemployment, a struggle independent of the two capitalist parties. So join the unionists, community groups, consumer unions, feminists and antiwar activists on May 5th to demand an end to inflation, unemployment, and cutbacks! ! !

In Defense Of AIM

To The Editor:
After reading the AIM article, we felt that more should be said in defense of recent actions and the overall purpose of AIM. First of all, what kind of advantage does one get from reading a South Dakota newspaper? No advantage. Who writes articles in South Dakota papers? People who are the major contributors to the Indian suppression today.

It is unfortunate that other Indian Americans supposedly resent these courageous actions by the AIM. These action-orientated militants are risking everything they have, including their lives, to make this country more responsive to basic inadequacies and atrocities that have remained with the Indians throughout their involvement with the Whiteman. There is no room for resentment from these victims of White assimilation, only room for encouragement.

Why are some Indians seemingly apathetic about the AIM activities of liberation? This is not apathy but fear. Fear of racist law enforcement officers who reach for their guns instead of reaching the people involved. (Southern University, Kent State, Attica and Chicago 68') It is no wonder that Indian Americans are not flocking to Wounded Knee. Would you want to be facing the gun of a federal marshall who is devoid of any understanding and sympathy for your cause? It is long overdue that someone "thoroughly scare the hell out of" people in South Dakota and elsewhere in the country. White backlash can in no way be justified. In light of past history, any means Indians see fit to attain their goals, to us is condonable. The ones who should be apprehended by the F.B.I. are not the members of the AIM, but the "armed and organized" ranchers and those who simply believe that the National Guard should go in and "clean AIM right out."

It is just grand that Richard Nixon's government, chocked full of credibility, has decided to "investigate" Richard Wilson and the B.I.A. Can a governmental investigation be considered valid when they are carried out by people like John Dean? Investigations are not the answer. In moving towards a resolvement of the present crisis, all demands should be met and immediate concessions are totally in order. The Bureau of Indian Affairs should be disolved and AIM should assume complete administrative and governmental responsibilities pertaining to Indian Americans. Full cooperation of the U.S. government is mandatory! The AIM should be supported in their cause. By sending money in support your are not "perpetuating the potential for disaster," but you are helping innocent people in their benevolent struggle. The only potential for disaster lies in the minds of White racists who once again are exercising destructive attitudes of White supremacy.

Neutrality

To The Editor:
It is of great interest to me to observe the new Daily Collegian handle the matter of the proposed parking fee increase. Suddenly there is a very restrained, cautious, conservative trend and none of the fire which has characterized many comparable issues in the past. This almost seems as if the editors have decided that their policies should be such as to insure the fee increase but to leave the back door open so they could point back to a position against the increase, if they were ever challenged.

Has the tactic of "divide and conquer" succeeded in achieving this near neutrality on the part of the Collegian? If so, what has been promised in return? – Assurances that the free buses would continue at the expense of others? Or perhaps the phony issue of eliminating congestion, pollution, etc., etc. The parking fee increases are not in the best interests of faculty, students or employees and should be vigorously opposed at all these levels including what is alleged to be the students' newspaper.

Walk Together

To The Editor:
I'd like to invite the UMass students to participate in a walk for Medical Aid to Indochina. The walk starts this Sunday, 12:00 A.M. at the Northampton City Hall on Main Street. There are two routes; 15 miles and a 20 mile route. You will need to con some friends into sponsoring you for a few coins/mile.

It was only 2 months ago that the peace treaty was signed. I had just started my walk to Washington last February for the same fund as this walk. Everyone kept asking me, "Don't you know the war is over?" The bombs continue to fall in Indochina and I can only ask "Doesn't Nixon know the war is over?"

If you are one of those naive people that refuses to accept the inevitability of war, I hope we'll walk together this Sunday.

Deborah A. Peck

Needed Humor

To Mr. Tripoli:
In response to your editorial which appeared in the Collegian of May 3, just a few points -

1.) The students who went to Wounded Knee were asked to do so by Mr. Vernon Bellecourt, a spokesman for the American Indian Movement who arreared at UMass just a few days before their (This is, of course, quite contrary to the method of our involvement in Viet Nam)

2.) While it is generally recognized as impossible to overthrow the existing form of government using violent means, the act of conscientiously provoking one's own imprisonment does not go without significance. (Witness C.O.'s draft-card burners, the Catonsville 9, etc.)

3.) You are quite correct in predicting a right-wing overthrow of the present Nixonian regime. My only hope is that you will find a suitable position on the future 'Thought Control' Committee.

4.) As a UMass 'Left-Over,' I, for one, have no objection to reading the editorials of Mr. Bob Estelle. In my opinion, however variant it may be from the rest of the 'Left Overs,' Mr. Estelle does more to raise Socialist consciousness amongst his readers than any type of argument we would care to present. He is a perfect self-parody.

5.) Please continue with your excellent editorials. We, as 'Left Overs' need a bit of humor in our otherwise serious attempt to make the condition of the world a bit brighter for all.

Project Ten Community

To The Editor:
In response to the recent publicity concerning Project Ten in this newspaper we, as members of P-10, would like to make known some of the facets of life there. The reasons we enjoy living here go beyond the overpublicized academic program or a massage parlor. Less than one third of us are in this program, which is an attempt to duplicate what is going on at Hampshire College and is rapidly becoming a miniature university complete with bureaucracy.

Contrary to popular belief, there is a community in Pierpont. By community we mean not the superficial structure of a parliamentary society but a feeling of togetherness and belonging. Not only does there exist the recently publicized "acadmic quiet" corridor and "organic-meditative" corridors but we also have a late-night anarchistic corridor. We have many parties, boogies, corn starch wars, Peter Lewicke, Lambda Sigma Delta and related activities, courtyard and roof parties. These things arise from a spontaneous attempt to enjoy ourselves and break down the walls between ourselves as well as our rooms. We're not entirely successful but we have a good time trying. To us living and learning mean learning to live together, not living in the same place while trying to learn.

Pierpont is not a drugstore. Neither is it a Whitmore or a dining commons. It is our home. We live with each other, not just our roommates.

If you have the spirit and energy to participate in a more open, lively, and supportive community; we want and need you. If you are not interested in our community and lifestyle, please, stay where you are.

Imposing Morals

To The Editor:
On page 3 of Tuesday's Collegian, an article appeared which contained the startling bit of information that an organization known as "Medical Emergency Loan Fund" was being funded by the Student Senate for about $2,000.00. We avid Collegian readers know that this group was formed during the recent abortion controversy. According to a letter in the Collegian at that time, I believe they stated that their objective was to form a loan fund primarily if not exclusively to enable students to obtain abortions. Therein lies the problem.

I'm sure most people would agree, that I can believe whatever I like as long as I don't try to impose that belief on everyone. Now, I happen to feel that abortion is killing. Everyone else can believe whatever they want. I believe abortion is killing, and since I am of the opinion that killing is wrong, I have to conclude that I cannot aid or support any abortion. Unfortunately, that choice is not being given to me.

By funding M.E.L.F., the Student Senate has decided that they have the right to do precisely what the Roman Catholic Church has been condemned for - impose morals on others. I am being forced to support a group that I feel is morally wrong. If I follow my conscience and refuse to pay any or all of my Student Activities Tax, I will not be permitted to be a UMass student. Quite simply, this is a moral dilemna that the Student Senate has absolutely no right to put me in!

Therefore, I strongly urge if not demand that the Student Senate act on one of the following three alternatives:

1.) that all funds be withdrawn from the M.E.L.P.; or

2.) that all funding of M.E.L.F. be done on a voluntary basis, possibly similar to the method now employed by W.M.P.I.R.G.; or

3.) that M.E.L.F. be allowed to keep their funds, but that the anti-abortion group P.A.A.C. be comparably funded.

Any of these three proposals would guarantee those of us with different morals from the Student Senate a chance to be true to ourselves. Don't force anyone to support what they believe is morally wrong!

And The Jews Are The Meekest Of Them All

To The Editor:

Many a man speaks about the "Arab world" and about the "Arab Nation," but the Arabic speaking people are as diverse as the English speaking people.

The Middle East as North Africa-distinct from the rest of Africa-is seeking for an identification. Islam found this identification once. The Turkish Empire under the Caliph in Istanbul had it till the end of the Empire (as a result of World War I). But the Arab World is a myth. Certainly the persecuted Blacks of the Sudan are not Arabs; neither are Egyptians, Tunisians, Morrocans or Algerians. The real Arabs are the Saudi Arabians and the Beduins of Jordan. The "Palestinians" are mostly immigrants from neighboring countries. Many of the rest are probably converts to Islam from the remnants of Jews in Palestine, who bowed to the sword of Mohammed.

It is just as incorrect to say that the Arab people fought for the liberation of Palestine. This is a distortion of history. The revolt against the Turkish Empire was made only by the Beduin Tribes of the Saudi Desert under the Emir Feisal and his two brothers, one of them the grandfather of the present King Hussein of Jordan. Col. Lawrence tells it in great detail in his book, "The Seven Phillars of Wisdom."

It should be noted that he led that revolt and distributed the British gold that paid for it. The only significant deed of the revolt in the desert was the blowing up of the Hejaz Railway that was constructed to carry pilgrims to Mecca and Medina. The only people who actually raised an army for the Allies were the Palestinian Jews-the Jewish Legion that fought in Gallipoli and across the Sinai with General Allenby all the way to Jerusalem.

The revolt in the desert was achieved due to the British promises to Feisal, to give the Hashemite family the area of Iraq; Syria and Lebanon; what is now Saudi-Arabia.

It is a fact that Palestine, the whole of Palestine was explicitly excluded from the promised domain. That the British did not keep faith with these Arabs and concluded what is known as the Syks-Pico pact, dividing the whole area betweeen the British French interests, but this is another story too complicated for these short lines. However, it is a fact that in the Syks-Pico pact Palestine was also excluded. To verify this, one only has to read the press of those days and the books that followed the war: Lawrence, St. John, Philby, etc. The British Colonial Office (the clique of Cleiton, Stores, Philly, etc.) later on tried to circumvent the Balfour Declaration in a very elaborate manner. It is a historical documented fact that Emir Feisal in his letter to Dr. Haylm Weizman welcomed "The Jewish Cousins" to their home, Palestine.

Now, to repeat in the year 1973 all the cliches of the anti-zionists of the 20's, is an historical shock. Not to have learned anything from the recent history of World War II with all its attending calamities, is a real folly. To ask again the Polish or the German Jews to be "Good Poles" or "Good Germans" of Jewish religion is ironic, pointless and even insulting to Jews. Even these Jews who felt after the horrors of Hitler years in Poland, that it was their duty to help to resurrect Poland now find themselves again as refugees in Denmark and Sweden.

Zionism is not an invention of Theodor Herzl. Zionism is the unfulfilled story of the Jewish people. It is not for the Egyptian, who has enough to cope with his own destiny on the Nile, nor for the Sudanese who are still massacring the blacks of the Sudan, to be angry because the Jews are resettling the hills of Judea. It is not for the Syrians nor the Iraquis to declare war over the restoration of the Negev Desert to its fertility. The Jewish people are coming home after being kept out by cruel and unjust persecutors. Many have conquered their home. Many trampled it. Many have used it as a highway to conquest. But only the Jews have restored that little desolated country, they made it bloom, even in the deserts. For them it is really home. No other people could or did respond to it as did the Jewish people.

And all this pious talk of becoming Middle Easterners is political hogwash. Denouncing Western culture, Europe and the U.S.A. which represent what all developing countries aspire to be, will make little difference.

Nasser could have had peace as the Jews accepted it. Nasser could have, certainly, had peace if he would have accepted Ben Gurion's proffered hand of peace in 1954 when Nasser took power in Cairo. Nasser can have peace again today. Boundaries have really no meaning. It is what you do across your neighbors, boundaries that counts. When Nasser amassed in 1967, 100,000 soldiers; 1,000 tanks, and many hundreds of planes, and proclaimed by day and night that he would drive the Jews into the sea-then the boundaries become important to the small embattled Jewish nation. Size of territory isnot the decisive item in its national destiny. If Nasser would have wanted peace he could have had it. I mean real peace, not a return to the instability of 1967. Israel needs peace. Peace with all the peoples of the Middle East. With the cooperation of Israel's scientists and industries, skill and abilities, the Middle East can be surely restored to its prosperity of old.

Without peace Israel will struggle along yet make progress, for its own self preservation. But the countries around Israel festering with the refugees-of their own cynical creation-will sooner or later fall prey, as in Lebanon and also in Cairo, Damascus, Amman and Bagdad, to the aggressiveness of the refugee's vanguard the Fatah who might even take them over.

And yet, as strange as it may seem today, these refugees, these Fatah, frustrated as they again will of course be by the defensive power of Israel, when in possession of the acquired lands of their erstwhile hosts, and with a base for their power to rule, will then choose in their Middle Eastern shrewdness to make peace with Israel and take part in the rebuilding of the Middle East together with the same Zionists whom they fight today.

For the meek will inherit the earth. And the Jews are the meekest of them all. They shall inherit, again, the only sliver of earth they need; this small part of earth they must have to nourish their national genius and restore their membership in the family of nations and man, this single part of the whole earth they can call, by right and not by sufferance, their own. And the Palestinian pawns in that vicious game, played by imperial planner and Middle Eastern power hungry, self appointed rulers, these rag-tag Fatah of today, will also inherit, together with the hungry, diseased and for centuries exploited masses of the Middle East, the lands from whence they came to Palestine, in search of bread, from the Khoran of Trans-Jordan, and Syria, and Iraq.

Gutter Reaction

To The Editor:

For one whose political views supposedly closely resemble those of YSA, YWLL, the UMass Committee to Support Wounded Knee, and the Committee on Poverty, Editor Tripoli certainly does not demonstrate this very effectively in his commentary, "The Leftover Left" (Collegian, Thursday, May 3). The editorial is hardly an example of constructive criticism, but is rather a vicious, dubiously directed, and unsubstantiated attack on four organizations. He crudely lumps them together and labels them "leftovers", making no attempt to differentiate one group from another in terms of strategy, program, or objectives.

Editor Tripoli states that these organizations "pull off some really inane things", but never quite mentions any specific significant actions to support this assertion, save his haughty criticism of those students who travelled to Wounded Knee over the last few weeks. From his corner deep in the rear of the Collegian office, Tripoli brushes aside their actions as "stupidity". This comment only serves to belittle the significance of the events at Wounded Knee and implies that active resistance to the forces of oppression in a planned, organized manner is not an essential part of "consciousness-raising". No doubt, according to the reasoning of Editor Tripoli, the actions of Frederick Douglass, Eugene Debs, the Berrigans, Angela Davis, and others would be further examples of "stupidity". It is also curious that he fails to mention the numerous consciousness-raising activities and programs that are carried out by the groups he attacks.

If Editor Tripoli's printed remarks are any indication of the brand of consciousness-raising that he advocates, then that brand of consciousness-raising is sadly lacking. In fact, the type of criticism that he exhibits bears close resemblance to that offered twenty-five years ago by those purporting to be left-liberals. It was used by such people as Hubert Humphrey (at that time a leading left-liberal and a founder of ADA), who repeatedly resorted to it in his 1948 campaign for Mayor of Minneapolis. At that time the term used as "reds": apparently it has now become "leftovers". It was a clever device that became known as "red-baiting", which helped to lay to groundwork for what was to become the most reactionary period in memorable American history. Many liberals joined the right in rounding up the "reds", who were no doubt considered "disgusting" and "hypocritical fascists". Not only Communists were jailed, silenced, or lost their jobs, but nearly everyone who dared to criticize American society was subjected to the same type of repression as well. Editor Tripoli's remarks clearly border on being a latter-day equivalent of "red-baiting", and serve to do little other than contribute to a rise of reaction in this country which apparently if not ironically, the author seems to fear. This is not consciousness-raising, but a reincarnation of Cold War rhetoric.

It is undeniable that the left is in constant need of 'careful, constructive, and meaningful criticism from within, and from outside of the movement as well. But "The Leftover Left" offers very little in that sense; instead, despite its intentions, rests as one more piece of trash in the gutter of reaction.

Asian Studies Has Language, Lit Majors

The Asian Studies Program announces the appointment of a new faculty member for the fall semester:

Mr. Ching-mao Cheng, Associate Professor of Chinese, received his Ph.D. in Chinese Literature from Princeton University. He has been teaching Chinese at the University of California at Berkeley for the past five years. He will teach courses in Chinese language and literature, and advanced Japanese literature.

The Asian Studies program now offers majors (B.A.) in Chinese and in Japanese. These majors emphasize the study of language, literature, and culture, and are designed to develop solid foundations of language facility within humanistic curriculums. Starting in the fall, the Program will offer four years of modern Chinese (Mandarin) and Japanese – the latter two years of each language are devoted to the study of various aspects of literature – and three semesters of classical Chinese, plus many lecture courses (in English) on various aspects of literature, linguistics, and culture.

The Asian Studies Program also participates in the administration of an interdisciplinary Certificate in Asian Studies. This Certificate is not a major but is designed to supplement established majors (such as Anthropology, History, etc.) and certify that a student has completed a substantial amount of interdisciplinary study in courses pertaining to Asia, in addition to the completion of a B.A. degree. The Certificate requires the completion of 24 credits from among the courses on the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST within at least three different disciplines. Credit applied to the Certificate. The Certificate Program is open to all students.

For more information on the many UMass and Five-College courses dealing with East, South, and Southeast Asia, please see the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST, and the FIVE-COLLEGE COURSE LIST.

For information about Chinese and Japanese language study, the majors in Chinese and Japanese, and the Certificate in Asian Studies, please contact the Asian Studies Program office in 804 Thompson Hall (545-0886).

Dance And Meditation Offered

Daria Weklind of Athol is offering a class dealing with Creative Dance in relationship to meditation and development, both spiritual and physical, over the summer.

Weklind has been offering the informal class during the past semester, and says anyone interested in the class should come to the ground floor lobby of John Adams tower Thursday, May 10 from one to two p.m., or contact the academic affairs office before May 10.

According to Weklind, meditation is a way by which a person can increase his own inner awareness, and that the creative dance is a way to express the inner awareness and experience found in meditation.

Draft Termed Waste Of Money

By JERRY T. BAULCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The National Council to Repeal the Draft told Congress Thursday that the standby draft system is a waste of money because the machinery can be revived in plenty of time in a wartime emergency.

John Hancock, executive secretary of the organization, said Selective Service's estimate of a start-up time of six months is not supported by experience in World War I, World War II and Korea.

"The history of the agency shows that it has never taken this long to start a draft and has taken as little as two months," he said.

Hancock and other witnesses said it would be a waste to vote for the $55 million that Selective Service is seeking for the next fiscal year. In addition to that, they said, $15 million to $17 million would be wasted in renting office space and "a great deal more money will be expanded" in pursuit of draft law violators.

The witnesses testified before a Senate appropriations subcommittee presided over by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., author of a bill to dismantle Selective Service.

With the actual drafting of men halted and the presidential draft authority due to expire June 30 no hearings have been scheduled on draft legislation, aside from Proxmire's subcommittee.

Hancock said it took only 110 days after the World War I draft law was enacted to induct men, 63 days after the 1940 draft law was enacted and 131 days after the draft law revival in 1948.

MILK SHAKE MAMA GOES MOBILE -- Betsy Keefe, (left), a resident of Mary Lyons dorm, yesterday began pushing an ice cream cart for the UMass Food Services dept. She confessed that business was slower than she expected, but then, there are worse ways to make a buck. Eurydice Hershey (right) became one of Keefie's first customers as she stopped beside the bus waiting station across the street from Morrill. Food service spokesmen say more cold carts will be pressed into service if Keefie's single cart proves to be in demand.

Americans And Mid-East: 'Addict And Pusher'

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) - Americans and Middle East oil interest enjoy an "addict-pusher" relationship, according to a Harvard University expert on Middle Eastern affairs and oil economics.

Dr. A. J. Meyer, addressing fuel retailers at the annual meeting of the Connecticut Petroleum Association, said Thursday that in 10 years half the energy used in this country will come from oil resources in the Middle East. He warned that as a result of such a dependency, the United States "will become very vulnerable" to pressure from the oil-producing Arab nations.

"We have to begin to think of our interest on all sides," Meyer said, suggesting that the time has come for the U.S. to start cutting back on weapons sales to Middle Eastern countries in order to ease tensions and insure an uninterrupted oil supply.

"Our relations with Israel is one of the real problems facing this country," he said. "We have to both Israel and other Middle Eastern nations. If the supply of arms was lessened to all buyers, it would help ease tensions and provide less chance for supply interruptions."

At the present time, Meyer said, the U.S. could get along without Middle East oil supplies by drawing on other avialable sources. But he said that in five years the nation's oil needs will require a continuous source of supply from the Middle East.

Music Festival To End On Windy Note

An evening of contemporary music for wind instruments will be presented by the UMass Wind Ensemble Sunday, May 6, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

This will be the finale of the first UMass Contemporary Music Festival which the music department and Fine Arts Council are sponsoring May 3-6. The Ensemble is conducted by John Jenkins and Assistant Conductor Joseph Duchi. There will be no charge for the concert.

William Schuman's "Chester Overture" will begin the program. The song "Chester" was published by William Billings, a composer of American choral music during the 18th Century, and rapidly became popular as the most representative American protest song during the Revolutionary War. Schuman uses the tune as the thematic basis for two pieces, one of which is scored for symphonic wind ensemble.

Also on the program is Paul Hindemith's "Symphony" in B flat.

The Wind Ensemble will premiere Jerry H. Bilik's "Introspectus et Exulte," commissioned by the UMass Fine Arts Council. The piece is for solo oboe and winds; and Karen Barch, a junior in the music department, will be the soloist.

Your Head

Be Cool This Summer

By DRS. ANDREW W. McCASHIN and STEPHEN M. KLEIN

With the vacation almost upon us we thought it appropriate to focus this last column of the semester on coping with summer. Many students have indicated to us that the economic situation this year is forcing them to spend the summer at home, which in previous years they have been able to get jobs away from home. Here are six easy steps to keepying your mental health this summer.

1. Keep your composure when parents remind you that you are living in their house. This is especially difficult if your folks are having their problems in accepting the fact that you are not 15 years old any more. Parents often have uncanny skill in encouraging regression in their children so they can then smugly point out how child-like and irrational the "smart guy college kid" still is. Remember, the environment is loaded in their favor. You are sleeping in your old bed, in your old room and sitting in your old chair at the dinner table. You've spent many years as a child there; you know that and they know that. Keep in mind at all times that it will be harder for them to relate to you as a child, if you relate to them in an adult-like manner.

2. Don't pe,sonalize rejections of your job applications. Things are tough all over and offers are not likely to roll in. The financial pressures of not working are difficult enough without worrying about "what's wrong with me." Once that feeling sets in, it makes things worse on several levels, not the least of which is subtlely communicating a negative self-image to prospeective employers. Don't give up hope. Something may yet come along.

3. Avoid the summer doldrums. Boredom, aimlessness, and loneliness are problems at anytime, but the summer's heat, t.v. reruns, and absent friends can make the situation particularly oppressive. Overcome your inertia and find a project that can capture your interest. Volunteer for some service or political work in your community.

4. Be patient in adjusting to your old town. Remember that you've been out of touch with what's happening at your old hang-outs. Your favorite cor.,er, drug store or your parking lot may just not have the old appeal. Old flames and friends have probably found other significant relationships and may see you as an outsider and relate to you with suspicion.

5. Don't despair the loss of your mate for the summer. While he or she returns to the corn fields, keep in mind that a good relationship should endure a summer's separation. If it's any consolation your mate will probably feel as miserable as you.This may be the least easy of the six easy steps.

6. Living without the University can be surprisingly difficult, especially if you're already having problems in one or more of the areas noted above. Try to focus on some of the less than ideal aspects of the college experience. Think about eight o'clock classes; having three papers due tomorrow, and you've only put in one hour of work on one of them.

Free Concert Buses

(Editor's Note: This is a schedule of the free bus service to and from this year's free concert to be held at Alumni Stadium this Sunday, including the times and places of departure of the buses. The service is being funded by the Commuter Assembly in the hope that people going to the concert will leave their cars at home and not duplicate the problem of traffic jams which plagued the concert last year. Your cooperation in this would be appreciated by everyone involved.)

Harlem Prep Headmaster At Amherst

On Sunday, May 6, Edward F. Carpenter, Ed. D., headmaster of Harlem Preparatory School, N.Y., will speak on "The Purpose of True Education." Dr. Carpenter will speak at 2 p.m., in Converse Assembly Room, Converse Hall, Amherst College, at the corner of Rte. 9 and North Pleasant Street.

As headmaster of Harlem Prep, Dr. Carpenter is a pioneer in alternative education. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Junior League; the Harlem Advisory Council to the Board of Higher Education of New York; and the Advisory Committee on Education for Model Cities of East and Central Harlem.

Dr. Carpenter was appointed Commissioner on the Governor's Commission for the study of the Causes of Violence and Unrest on College Campuses for New York State. Along with Queens College and the United Federation of Teachers, Dr. Carpenter established Freedom Schools in Prince Edward County, Virginia, where public schools had been closed to black students for four years. In 1963, Dr. Carpenter became director of community services of the Queens College Children and Parents Center. He has served as a consultant for Dr. Sidney P. Marland, United States Commissioner of Education; The Urban Education Center in Providence, R.I.; the National Education Association, and a host of other educational, social, and community agencies.

Aid For Veterans

Public Law 92-540 provides for a work-study allowance for veterans pursuing a full-time program of education or training. The maximum allowance is $250.00 for 100 hours of service agreed to be performed during an enrollment period. All approved applicants will have to perform their work between now and June 30, 1973.

In selecting the veteran for this program, preference is to be given to disabled veterans rated 30% or more.

Other criteria include: 1. Need of veteran; 2. Availability of transportation; 3. Motivation; 4. Compatibility of duties with disability.

The University of Massachusetts, Amherst may be granted from 3 to 5 openings. The final allocation will be made by the Veterans Administration Office, Boston.

In order to take advantage of this program applicants should apply by May 10th.

For further information contact Diane Hubbard, Veterans Affairs Office, Room 239, Whitmore Building.

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

"I am wondering if vegetarians have something in common in their horoscopes. I belong to a group interested in the welfare of animals and some of us are vegetarians. We all seem to have Leo prominent in our charts, either Sun signs or the Moon in that zodiacal sign. I would be interested in your comments about whether Leo is associated with those who are vegetarians." - Ruth E. Brauck, Highland Park, Ill. Answer: I can say that persons born under Leo and Sagittarius seem to display a love for animals. I want to hear from readers who are vegetarians. Let me know your astrological sign. Let us see if there is, in fact, a predominance of Leo among those concerned with vegetarianism.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some relatives may appear heavy handed. Key is to be mature, patient. One in position to enhance your security could be crusty, insistent and stubborn. Sense of humor here would aid. Know it and laugh at your own foibles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money pinch is but temporary. You can, however, learn some valuable lessons. Don't overextend resources. Gemini, Virgo individuals could be featured. Emphasis is on consolidating, protecting and properly utilizing resources.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family obligation could dominate. You get nothing for nothing. Know it and act according. One who promises pie in sky is feeling you out. Protect yourself in clinches. Don't duck responsibility. You gain by being aware.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid tendency toward self deception. What is due to be finished should be permitted to run its course. You will understand. Pisces might be in picture. Look behind scenes for answers. What appears obvious may be the opposite.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your path may take surprise turn. Be ready. Don't be too set in your ways. Older individual is in picture. Your wishes can be realities only if you are realistic. You are due for valuable lesson.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Key is advancement. What you feel might stop you really lacks substance. You are stronger than might be suspected. You are due for promotion, more money and responsibility. If single, marriage might be upcoming.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Now is time to expand, to seek new avenues of expression and distribution. Aries could be involved. Finish what you start. Let others know you are not without resources. One who wants to help you does need reassurance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Strive for more independent stance. Creative efforts should be emphasized. Make your own decisions. Those who try to influence you may merely be on ego trip. Know it and respond accordingly. Check activities of Leo.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be dealing in illusion, before cameras, microphones. You find yourself able now to express yourself through symbols. Indirect approach is apt to bring most constructive results. Aquarian could be involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What appears immovable is actually flexible. Do some personal probing. Turn on charm. Social contact made now can blossom into important relationship. You may find cheaper, more efficient way of achieving tasks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend who is "poetic" may also be confused. Be sympathetic. Know it and keep an open mind. Romance may lack solid base. Protect yourself in clinches. Promises are fine but you need something more material.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Work from bottom up-expect nothing for nothing. Gemini, Virgo person could figure prominently. Where you live and home improvements are featured. Change occurs but you may not be aware of it.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY June could be your outstanding month of 1973. You are frank, basically honest, stubborn, determined and capable of upsetting odds to achieve your goal. You deal extensively with Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons.

Netmen Drop Springfield Despite First Set Blues

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Something about the netmen from UMass tells me they like tension. Maybe it's just a lingering effect from the Conference, or maybe they've forgotten how to crush an opponent into oblivion. The adversion to winning first sets continued, but despite all, a sickly battered Minutemen crew knocked off Springfield last Wednesday 6-3. Upping their mark to 7-1, UMass looks ahead to win number eight, a near certainty against a terribly weak Holy Cross team.

With four courts available to them, UMass-Springfield roared off to a strong start, for the hosts at least. All four sets on all four courts had gone to Springfield, and quickly the nerves got jittery. No longer could the Minutemen afford to relax. They had it again-forced themselves into a "must" situation.

No doubt one reason for the harder-than-expected-time was the injury list. And long it was. Ted Donahue reported in with a pulled hamstring. Garry Ney was having back problems, while Fred Braley and Steve Ferber were caught up in viruses. Ferber's was severe enough to force him to sidecourt in singles play. The captain's absence necessitated a double switch, and for a while it almost proved deadly.

Donahue, Robert Schpeiser, Ney and Mike Philipp, playing one through four, had each fallen in set number one. Comeback time was their game and Donahue and Ney responded best.

Limping badly Donahue somehow overcame his opponent in three sets 4-6, 6-2, 7-5. Ney did likewise as his scores went 3-6, 6-2, 7-5. Schpeiser and Philipp came up empty, although the former did move his match into a third set before falling.

As expected, Don Douglas, at five, and Braley, at six collected two points for UMass with Douglas following in the grand tradition of losing the first set, only to storm back for a three set triumph. Braley's 6-0, 6-3 win was the only romp of the day.

That is, at least, until he teamed with Ferber for the doubles. At 4-2 UMass going into doubles play the outlook was far brighter for UMass. No more than 45 minutes later it was all over. Ferber and Braley had clinched another match, winning handily 6-2, 6-3.

In dropping Springfield to 7-3, UMass added yet another point at first doubles. But was that won easily??? Oh come on, no way, that was a three setter too. And as if there wasn't enough for tightness going, Schpeiser and Philipp came down to a third set tie-breaker only to drop the match 6-1, 4-6, 7-6.

By far the toughest opponent that UMass will face prior to the New Englands, Springfield caught UMass at their mental and physical worst, yet they failed to make good on what has turned out to be an annual UMass victory. In fact flipping through the clippings indicate that Springfield has never beaten the Minutemen. Guess that coach will just have to wait another year.

Stockbridge Golfers Boast Perfect Record

The Stockbridge Golf Team to date has had five matches and have been all wins. The first match April 23 at Franconia Golf Course vs Springfield Technical Community College ended Stockbridge 17-STCC 4.

The Second match April 25 at Southampton Golf Course vs. Holyoke Community College and Greenfield Community College finished Stockbridge 17 1/2, Holyoke Community College 3 1/2, Stockbridge 17 Greenfield Community College 4.

April 28 at Southampton Golf Course Stockbridge vs. Willaston Academy resulted Stockbridge 5 1/2 Willaston 1 1/2.

April 30 at Hickory Ridge Golf Course Stockbridge vs. UMass medal play Stockbridge 405 UMass 406. A return match at a neutral course Longmeadow Country Club Stockbridge vs. UMass is planned for May 7. Stockbridge has six matches remaining, four at home and two away.

Stockbridge team captain Greg Graham is the medalist with match rounds of 74, 75, 72 and 79. John Renner, Paul Petrarca, Dan Litteer and Pete Fontaine round out the starting five. The remaining two positions are ably filled by Randy Mook, Jim Leger, Brian Sylva, Rich McNabb and Mike Conn.

Norton-Ali!

NEW YORK (AP)—Ken Norton, exuding supreme confidence, and former world heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali, his confidence quieted by a broken jaw, announced Thursday they would meet in a 12-round rematch Sept. 10 at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif. Norton, bursting with pride following his surprising 12-round split decision victory over Ali March 31 at San Diego in which he broke Muhammad's jaw, said at a news conference that "I think I'll win again because I'm a positive thinker."

Hawks Top Habs

CHICAGO (AP)—The Chicago Black Hawks blitzed the Montreal Canadiens with four first period goals, two of them shorthanded, within one minute, to score their first Stanley Cup final round victory 7-4 Thursday night.

The Hawks' triumph in their first home start after 8-3 and 4-1 defeats at Montreal left the Canadiens leading 2-1 in the best-of- seven championship series. The fourth game will also be played at Chicago Stadium Sunday.

UMass-URI Baseball

UMass wins two) the Minutemen will be looking forward to next weekend's contest with UConn (defending District 1 champs) where a split would give UMass the conference title.

The baseball Rams have had their problems this year. They have a fair hitting team, a better than average defensive team but their pitching. . . There's the probelm that Coach John Norris has his work cut out for him on last year four senior hurlers graduated leaving a skeleton pitching staff in its wake.

Freshman Ed Zavilski has accounted for two of the Rams' three victories, and Ed has the potential to go a long way. The workhorse of the staff Geroge Ellis (1-3) is the experienced starter on the staff being a junior. These two guys, both coming off wins over Brown will take to the mound against UMass. They may get plastered, who knows, hurling at a team which has banged around "solid" baseball squads for a .317 average. Who knows what they'll do against URI (15-0, 9-0 laughers a year ago.)

Friday at Kingston, Saturday here at Earl Lorden Field. Wins a must in both. The nine have a long way to go (six victories) as they begin the stretch drive to the wire. Maybe, just maybe, the Minuteman will win by a nose and travel to Omaha as a representative of District I in the College Baseball World Series.

Russell In Line For Supersonics Coaching Post

SEATTLE (AP) - Bill Russell, former Boston Celtics' great, is expected to decide by Friday whether to accept the post as head coach of the Seattle SuperSonics, the Seattle Times reported Thursday.

The job was offered Russell by Sam Schulman, president of Seattle's National Basketball Association club, at a meeting in New York last week, the newspaper said.

The Sonics have been anxious to get the coaching job settled because Schulman is scheduled to leave next week for Israel.

Neither would comment directly on the situation. "It could be all wrapped up or we may simply be starting all over, Volchok said.

Russell, except as a television commentator, has been out of basketball since retiring as player-coach of the Celtics after the 1968-69 season. In his three years as coach, Boston won 162 games and lost 83. The Celtics won two NBA championships under Russell, who led the team to seven previous titles as a player.

Schulman has said he wanted an established coach to replace Bucky Buckwalter, who took over as interim coach following the firing of Tom Nissalke.

Several persons have been mentioned for the job, including Gene Shue of the Capital Bullets.

Shue, whose contract expires June 1, said in Baltimore Thursday that he had not been offered the Seattle job. "I was away for a week in Jamaica," he said, "and just got back yesterday."

Women Top AIC In Softball

By MDC STAFF

The rain was rather evident this afternoon and it couldn't have come sooner for a bevy of gals from American International College. The good Lord and the umpires allowed 4 1/2 innings to be played yesterday in which time the UMass Women's Softball team pushed across eight runs with Patty Glispen showing her worth at the plate for the winners in an 8-0 whitewash of the Yellowjackettes in a game at AIC.

Glispen had a field day as she whacked a home and a triple to pace the UMie attack. Jane Hopkins added a pair of singles before the rains came. It was a solid day at the plate for the winners but Michelle Locke stole the show on the mound.

Jane threw blanks at the lasses from Springfield all afternoon long. Success one day on the mound for the gals, but it was a dose of disappointment yesterday. Hurler Colleen Belisle, who was to start yesterday, broke her leg while sliding into home plate on Wednesday. Invariably she'll miss the remainder of the season.

A shutout in women's softball is rather rare but it just goes to support the fact that the gals have been getting the job done on the mound while Patty Glispen and her mates seem to have all well in hand offensively.

The umpire's arm goes up and everyone in the place, especially the batter, knows what the call is. The strikeout was registered by UMass hurler Tom White who was brilliant in a 6-3 victory over Springfield.

Coming back to action after a foot injury, Jack Maloney tops the field in the half-mile run. Maloney beat out nationally-ranked Rich Comeau for the victory. The Minutemen easily outdistanced Holy Cross by a 96-58 score.

Track n' Fielders Dump HC

By EARLE BARROLL

Yes, it rained yesterday. It rained so hard that after the UMass-Holy Cross track meet the steeplechase water jump was so inviting the Crusaders deposited their coach into the drink.

Maybe it was the wrong coach or maybe it was just out of frustration or maybe a joke for in the preceeding two hours the Minutemen had easily handled the Cross, 96-58, to round out an exasperating week (they also lost to B.C.) for the Worcester delegation that rendered them a very tired contigent.

The story of this meet was "on-paper" as the Minutemen did just about everything that was expected of them plus a little to spare in administering a healthy dose of take that. The Cross was given their proportion of the whole in the hammer, the high jump, a relay, and quarter mile of hurdles.

But that was it. In the meantime the Minutemen blasted the expectantly tired but still dangerous Crusaders with a smothering display on the track that at one juncture early in the program had reached the ridiculous proportions of 23-0 and 39-2.

After this the main concern was keeping the rain in the clouds and seeing who could come up with the best comment on the persistant gale forces that juggled times completely out of perspective. These ran the gamut of the more conventional "This is no day for times" to the creative "You got to be a torpedo to run in this weather" to the scientific deduction elicited by co-captain Steve Levine who said "My 50.4 quarter mile time in the wind is computed to 49 seconds without the wind."

Of all those who made this rout possible the names of Jack Maloney and Tony Pendleton stick out, but this is not to overlook the performances (see summary) of a Dennis Busa, a Peter Trow, a Tome Beland and a Jim Hennessev.

Maloney, in the half mile powered by nationally ranked Rick Comeau come on in the final 220 to take a first that was at the best a dark horse effort. Pendleton, besides winning the 100, nearly blundered the 440 relay away when he left the mark too soon on the anchor leg. But after a "still-action" hand off from Busa, Tony P. trucked on in for the victory and a brain session with sprint coach Errol Prisby.

As the meet proceeded the rains came and so did a near casualty that forced the termination of the pole vaulting. Holy Cross' Jim Hamiltom was on his way up when the slippery pole reduced his hands to grease and his body to a perfect firemans entrance that almost splattered him on the tarton. Fortunately it was only his hand that needed administering to and trainer Bill Sangster saw to that.

Trow and Bill Gillen had notable distinctions battling the elements. While Peter was the final survivor across the line in the final event; the mile relay, Gillen had the mark of longevity splashing through three miles in 14:23.

Stickers Romp, 14-5 Win Division Crown

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Five hundred fans showed up at Boyden Field yesterday to watch a lacrosse game but the rain came and dispersed most of them. However, Garber's Gorillas won the U.S.I.L.A.'s Northeast Division crown by trouncing Williams College, 14-5. This victory also upped UMass' record to 8-2.

The Gorillas drew first blood when Hirsch Seidman collected a pass from Fred Michels and put it past the Williams goalie at 5:52 to make the score 1-0, UMass. Williams' Jim Dietrick tied it up three minutes later.

The tie did not last long though, because two minutes later the UMass team got a fast break with Frank Garahan gathering in a pass from Jack Moran for the goal. Dwight Blomquist made it 3-1 less than thirty seconds later on one of the prettiest plays of the day. About fifty feet from the net Blomquist faked the Williams defenseman off his feet and fired a shot into the net. That goal began a barrage of six straight UMass tallies.

With about two minutes left in the opening quarter Pete Conolly got the ball behind the Williams net and passed to Blomquist who made another super move and finished by passing to Garahan for the goal.

The second period opened with another UMass goal. Goalie O.J. Rutledge made an eighty foot pass to Blomquist at the midfield line. Conolly broke in front of the net all alone, collected Blomquist's pass and fired the ball into the net. Seven minutes into that period, Andy Scheffer beat his man behind the Williams net and made a quick pass out front to Michels who scored the goal which made the score 6-2. Michels scored another goal less than a minute later when the ball was knocked away from the Williams goaltender near the restraining line. Conolly picked up the lose ball and gave it to Michels for the tally. Frank Garahan closed out the scoring in the first half at 10:11 with an assist from Michels. The halftime score was 8-2.

Williams came into the second half hoping to catch up. They scored first after only eight seconds had elapsed. The Gorillas retaliated fifty seconds later when Seidman scooped up a loose ball and passed it to Blomquist who scored. A few seconds later Williams scored again. However, UMass netted two more goals in the third quarter, the first being an unassisted goal by Andy Scheffer, and the second coming when Garahan, leaping in the air in front of the Willaims net, received a pass from Conolly and popped it into the net over the goalie.

Williams scored once in the final period while UMass netted three goals. Peter Conolly again helped Frank Garahan to score. Larry Knowlton scored unassisted and Bruce Sibson was assisted by Michels, nine seconds before the end of the game.

UMass coach Dick Garber called this match "one of the better games we played all year. It was a real team effort." Frank Garahan shone for the Gorillas as he netted his thirty-sixth goal of the year and he needs only five goals within the next three games to break the UMass single season record of forty goals. The next game for the Gorillas will be at home on Saturday against UNH.

Scouts Flock To Lorden

"Last Sunday in the terrible weather (temperature in the 40's and a chilly, gusty wind) at least 12 scouts were in the stands."—baseball coach Dick Bergquist.

Unlike other major sports, baseball was two drafts. First, they pick the best high school talent and then, a second chance is provided as the athlete reaches 21. So, a college coach is faced with a twofold problem. If the pros don't get what they want, they'll be back when that player turns 21.

Add to this that the Minutemen are locked with defending District 1 champ, UConn, in a battle for the Yankee Conference crown and a chance at New England and national honors, and the coach's dilemma is heightened. So far the season has been good with the record now standing at 17-6-1, but from the coach's viewpoint, success depends on the remaining six games. First, there is Rhode Island for two, then Boston College, with the emphasis to be put on the last weekend home and home with UConn and finally Harvard which has been breezing through its schedule with a 22-2 slate.

If one gets away from the record a bit, it's easy to see why the scouts are coming in droves to view the Minutemen. First, there is the fact that both senior Tom White and sophomore Mike Flanagan were drafted out of high school by the Houston Astros and both decided to continue their education. Others rating raves in recent weeks and also draftable are shortstop Ed McMahon and leftfielder Steve Newell.

At the top of the list has to be Flanagan. In two years the southpaw has never lost a game for UMass. Last year, he was 3-0 with an ERA of 0.47. When he wasn't pitching, he was in rightfield and hit .298 in 19 games, which isn't too bad for a freshman.

This year, the fiery soph from Manchester, H.N. has been unbeatable. He leads the conference in every pitching category with 7 straight wins, an ERA of 1.61 and 66 strikeouts. Hitting-wise his mark is at .362 with four homeruns (three of them were in his last outing Sunday). After the game he was admitted to the infirmary with a temperature of 103 degrees.

Coach Bergquist said this about Flanagan, "Strange as it may sound, I think he can pitch a little better than he has and with the good weather he should improve. As a 21 year old soph, he's being considered by every pro team in the country."

The next prospect is White who was the backbone of lat year's staff with a 4-2 record and an ERA of 1.29. After a slow start this year, he evened his record at 3-3 with an impressive win over Springfield to add to his 3 saves. At 6'6" and 220 pounds White presents a very awesome sight on the mound.

Junior Ed McMahon is noted for his quick hands while playing shortstop. A slick fielder who batted .407 last year and is batting at a consistent .320 clip thus far this year, McMahon is also getting the exposure.

Another possibility is a .158 hitter last year, who has matured into the squad's leading hitter and a terror around the league. With three hits against Springfield, Steve Newell pushed his batting average over .400 (he was third in the conference last week). With five homeruns and the conference lead in runs (26), doubles (11) and runs batted in (29), he's been stealing some of the limelight from the other prospects.

"A great stroke at the plate and a definite pro prospect," said Bergquist who was still marveling over Newell's line drive double with two outs in the ninth, which set up a win over Maine in the second game of the doubleheader.

Whatever happens, three of the four still have eligibility at UMass. "Whether they sign is up to them and they have to decide when and if they do want to interrupt their education."

Rink Outlook Good For UMass Future

By STEVE CROWE

The long-awaited ice facility for the UMass community appears to be nearing a reality. Endevor Inc., an architectural firm from Cambridge, Mass. has been meeting with members of the athletic department for the past few weeks and are nearing an agreement.

The facility would be built across from Alumni Stadium on the other side of Rt. 116 in Hadley.

Frank McInerney, director of the department of athletics, explained that they were "not talking about a university rink for university use but rather a community rink for the Amherst area that would be used by the university."

University participation, according to McInerney, is a major factor in the planning of the facility and the representatives from the firm, Gilbert Boro and Jim Sutherland, have been getting information from the department on how much use the university will make of the facility.

Presently, the basic proposal is for a two-rink facility with 1800 seats, but there is now talk of adding either another rink or an extra 1700 seats. The cost for either addition would be about the same. The firm is deciding whether it would be more beneficial to build the extra rink and give the community more ice time or to build the additional seats and provide a larger seating capacity for hockey games.

Besides the use of the facility by the UMass hockey teams and by the general public for "free" skating, the firm is also looking into the possibilities of using the rinks for intramurals, physical education classes, little leagues, ice shows, etc....

The UMass hockey team presently plays its "home" games and practices at Amherst College's Orr Rink. But, according to McInerney, Amherst College has been put under great stress under these circumstances and "there has always been the hope that it would only be a temporary use until the University built a facility of its own." But the lack of state funds haited all plans for an ice facility.

A permanent lockerroom for the UMass team would be provided in the pre-engineered, pre-fabricated facility, architect Boro said.

The cost of ice time (for at least the first four years) would increase "about 50% over the Amherst rate," said McInerney. He also said that this rise in cost could possibly reduce the ice time of the hockey team.

McInerney said that, of all the private companies that have shown interest in building an ice facility in the area, Endevor Inc. was the one that has "impressed me that they're here to do business". The facility, if the company decides to go through with the plan, would probably be ready "in early 1974," according to McInerney, but it "could be built as early as this fall," he added.

Baseballers In Crucial Weekend Series With URI

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The UMass baseball squad has a task ahead of them this weekend. If they have any hopes of a Yankee Conference Title, or a trip to the College World Series in Omaha, they must survive this weekend with two victories.

The foefor this weekend's work is "The Texas Rangers of the Yankee Conference," the Rhode Island Rams. The teams will play this afternoon at Kingston, and then return to Earl Lorden Field to conclude the two-game set tomorrow afternoon.

Coming into this weekend's action the Minutemen sport a 16-7 mark (3-1 in the conference). The outlook for the remainder of the season is bright, with the return to form of Tom White, the backbone of last year's pitching squad.

Ace sophomore lefthander Mike Flanagan (7-0) will hike to the mound Friday for UMass seeking to maintain his undefeated record in a UMass uniform (10-0 in two years). On Saturday, Coach Bergquist will come back with either Tom White (2-3) or junior John Olson (4-2), and hopefully (if

It Was A Beautiful (But Cold) Day

By DON BISHOP

Under the constant cover of rain-threatening skies, the second annual Spring Concert became a part of UMass history yesterday afternoon, witnessed by an estimated crowd of 17,500 people.

The Alumni Stadium event, featuring a bill of Bruce Springsteen, Cold Blood, and It's a Beautiful Day, ran without any major difficulties, and in general seemed to surpass the initial stadium concert of one year ago.

Aside from the physical discomforts of a brisk wind and damp grounds, an improved stage and sound system, coupled with the non-occurance of the long delays between groups that hampered last years concert, all served to enhance yesterdays performances.

The gates to the Stadium were opened shortly before 12 p.m. with an approximate 200 people already waiting to get in. Most of the large crowd had made their entrance by the time Bruce Springsteen struck the first note of the afternoon.

It seemed as though a good part of the crowd had come from off-campus. Some notice of the concert had appeared in other parts of the state in preceding weeks.

As the opening act, Bruce Springsteen came here as virtually a complete unknown. His group was received quite well, however, as indicated by the crowd's ovations after each number.

Springsteen had been a last minute replacement by the UMass Concert Committee for the Elvin Bishop Group, who cancelled out of yesterday's engagement after the break-up of the group three weeks ago.

Cold Blood, the second act of the afternoon, swung into gear at approximately 2:45 p.m The concensus of those individuals this reporter talked to, seemed to be that this group had provided the best entertainment of the afternoon.

Whether it was the brief period of sun that brought out the best in the group is a matter of speculation. Whatever, their set seemed to be the most pleasing of the afternoon. Lead singer Lydia Pense performed exceptionally well at one point, hitting a set of notes so high as to bring a round of applause from the crowd.

It's A Beautiful Day was the finale to the day's festivities and probably disappointed those people who were expecting to here the It's A Beautiful Day of a couple of years ago.

The group that appeared yesterday has changed it's emphasis to a more consistent rock. Lead singer Patti Santos was the main attraction for a good deal of the men in the audience, and one had to wonder how she kept warm in her rather scanty outfit.

They closed out the concert at about 5:50 p.m. with a considerable number of those who had been sitting in the east stands having already departed.

A large amount of trash littered the stadium grass, which had not been totally cleaned up by nightfall Sunday.

No major problems were reported by the Concert Committee. They were forced to take down the rain canopy which covered the stage after the Springsteen set. According to one member, the wind had been blowing the canopy enough to start pulling the stage apart.

One other incident of note was the decision of one person in the audience to sit on the top of the stadium wall. A potential catastrophe was averted when the individual climbed down.

The concession stands ran a successful day for the benefit of Community Homes for Children, an organization which will be attempting to set up half-way houses for children from Belchertown.

On the whole, the Concert Committee must be congratulated for successfully carrying off Spring Concert 2. Hopefully the Committee will be allowed to continue these ventures and maybe next year we'll finally have a sunny day.

Indians, Govt., Agree To Disarm

By TERRY WOSTER
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S. D. (AP)—An agreement for disarmament and further negotiations to end the 68-day occupation of historic Wounded Knee by militant Indians was announced Sunday.

The further discussions are to involve representatives of the White House who will come to the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Deputy Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Hellstern and American Indian Movement AIM attorney Ramon Roubideaux jointly announced the agreement and said it is to be effective Wednesday, beginning at 9 a.m. EDT.

At that time the government will remove all armored personnel carriers, while occupants of Wounded Knee are to lay down their weapons, ammunition and explosives.

The agreement calls for the Indians to evacuate their bunkers and assemble at their tepee chapel in the village to surrender their arms to personnel of the Community Relations Service CRS of the Justice Department.

Journalist Predicts War In Middle East

By BILL DENSMORE

Egyptian-born Eric Rouleau, Middle East editor and chief correspondent for Paris' influential daily newspaper LeMonde, said last night that a fourth Arab-Israeli war is "a real possibility."

But, he added, "I don't think its going to be a very big war or a very long war."

Rouleau spoke at Hampshire College at the tail end of a two-week tour of U.S. cities. He is scheduled to discuss the Middle East with a member of Henry Kissinger's staff today in Washington.

He said that while the U.S. now takes only 6% of its oil from Middle Eastern countries, by 1980 it will take 33% and he said, "these figures which were given to me in the White House, are supposed to be conservative."

As a result, U.S. pro-Israeli sentiment is not likely to be countered by oil politics at least until the end of the decade, his comment suggested.

But, he said, "Europe is becoming somewhat of an all of the Arabs," because Europe, like Japan, has come to rely heavily on Arab oil production.

Rouleau said the only chance for a lasting settlement in the Middle East would be a joint U.S.-Soviet pact or a change in the diplomatic positions of the countries.

"When you have two parties reaching the conclusion that neither can have a total victory over the other you have the basis of a compromise," he said, indicating that Israel and the Arab states have not reached such a conclusion because Israel is clearly more powerful militarily than the Arabs.

"Israel has said: territory equals security," according to Rouleau. "The Israeli's are asking for three times the price of peace they were asking in 1947 - all they rest of the discussion is polyemics."

There's a fire in America . . .

The World's A Stage . . .

By AVIS YUNI

The new Theatre Department will initiate a new program for its majors in the fall. As far as it is known to its originators and designers, Jeffrey Fiala and Virginia Scott of the Theatre faculty, it is the only one of its kind in the country.

The program is divided into three levels, Fiala and Scott explained to the Collegian on Friday. Students who have an interest in theatre will be encouraged to enter level one, taking Theatre 115, Introduction to Theatre.

Theatre 115 and Theatre 152, Oral Interpretation, will be the only two course which will remain as courses under the new program. Theatre 115 will continue to carry a C core credit. It will remain much the same as it is now, Fiala explained, but will include more demonstration of what theatre is and can be, point out the many varied forms of expression in it, and teach the student to access what he views with a critical eye when he goes to the theatre. The course will also require a certain amount of participation in a theatrical event of some kind.

Level two of the program consists of a sequence of training in basic skill areas. Majors, before progressing to the project stage which is level three, must first show basic competence in each of three skill areas - performance, scenography (costumes, scenery, lighting, design, technical skills and production), and dramaturgy (history of theatre, analysis and criticism, dramatic literature).

Students will earn three credits in each area when they can demonstrate a mastery of the basic skills required, when they first enter the class or after six months. Scott explained that students will progress at their own rate through the basic skills.

Theatre majors will be encouraged to complete their core requirements during their first two years at the university because once they are in level three, they must reserve every afternoon from 1-5 o'clock for the theatre program.

Majors will still be able to take morning courses and after their project hours are determined they can fit in afternoon courses ifthey wish

It is required of each major to complete nine hours of credit in each of the three basic skill areas at the project level.

Under level three, students will be able to sign up for generative and productive projects and satellites of projects which Fiala explained would hopefully, over a two year period, teach them what a major might learn through a sequence of courses.

Many of the projects will start as generative ones where the students will work with the faculty and graduate students or advanced undergrads doing historical research, critical thinking, helping with the ideas for concepts, etc. - doing the generative work which is necessary before a play is produced.

They will also work on projects which have moved from the generative to the productive level - building sets, acting, etc. At both levels there will also be satellite projects.

These satellites will teach things that will be useful in a variety of situations, not only with the play they are initially used for.

As an example of what the satellites might be like, Scott explained how all the actors in the present University Theatre Production of Macbeth were required to take a stage combat course.

All the projects and satellites working on a play will meet once a week to keep the students informed as to what is going on in every aspect.

After a mjor has completed his required 27 credits at the project level, he will be able to concentrate in one area if he desires to and receives the consent of the faculty in that area.

Majors will need a minimum of 39 and a maximum of 57 credits for a theatre degree.

Fiala and Scott explained that once this new program gets underway, what plays and projects will be worked on will be decided far in advance.

No all the plays worked on as generative projects will be produced. Depending on the play, a project might be generated for one semester and produced the next or generated for as long as one and one-half years before production.

The number of plays that will actually be performed for the public, Fiala explained, will depend on the number of undergrad and grad theatre majors, the faculty load, and money. "Theoretically, we will be able to do more plays but they will take longer to produce," he said.

Next year, Scott and Fiala said that there will be more generating products than production ones since the program presently is not big enough to do very many plays and the department will be spending a lot of time moving into the new Fine Arts building.

Next year will also be the time for thinking and working through the program so as to work out its bugs, they said. After one year in operation the program must be passed by the Curriculum Committee.

Old majors will have to choose from the new program those projects which satisfy their old requirements. Graduate students will also work the same projects as undergrads but they will be more advanced.

Graduate students might work as leaders in the projects. The department might also offer a few sort of content oriented seminars for graduate students.

Since plays from start to finish will be treated as projects, non-majors will no longer be able to just come in and audition for the otherwise take part in plays. A non-major may engage in a project if he has completed the basic skills in that area.

However, he must sign up for the project and its credit, and thereby leave his afternoon free since all

New Talks Coming For Wounded Knee

The weapons will be processed by government officials, and legal weapons will be returned to their owners within 24 hours, Hellstern and Roubideaux said.

CRS personnel will then divide Wounded Knee occupants into three groups—those with outstanding arrest warrants will be taken to nearby Rapid City for legal proceedings; permanent residents will be allowed to return to their homes; and all other occupants will arrange for transportation from the reservation.

The agreement was signed by 11 Oglala Sioux tribal elders and by Hellstern, Interior Department Solicitor Kent Frizzell and director of U.S. Marshal Service Wayne Colburn.

Roubideaus said Ennis Banks and Ca

Roubideaux said Dennis Banks and Carter Camp, AIM leaders at Wounded Knee since the start of the occupation Feb. 27, did not sign the agreement.

The attorney made public a letter from Banks saying: "I have reviewed the agreement, and find that the document falls outside the protection of the U.S. Constitution. I will submit to the arms laydown because the chiefs and headmen have agreed.

"Also, AIM's job is done here. It must be understood AIM was called on to aid these Oglalas in their struggle against repressive government forces."

Frizzell said the disarmament would clear the way for a meeting between White House representatives and Sioux elders on the Pine Ridge Reservation "to discuss and explore the 1868 treaty."

Athletic Dept. Tightening Finances

By DON GLICKSTEIN

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney said in an MDC interview Wednesday that he had found "a certain laxness or slowness" in Athletic Department financial affairs, and that he is in the process of changing the Department's financial arrangement to insure that "the disbursement of funds from various programs will be controlled."

McInerney said that his major accomplishments during his first year as Athletic Director were in the areas of tightening financial procedures, human relations, sports promotion, and women's athletics.

He also reiterated his belief that students are "more than adequately represented" in Athletic Department policymaking.

Financial Reorganization

McInerney announced that he was setting up an Office of the Comptroller within the Athletic Department. The Comptroller would prepare the budget and set up financial systems to speed up and regulate the processing of bills. The present Financial Manager, Aloysius Rufe, will become the Comptroller and incorporate his present duties with the new ones.

McInerney said that he had figuratively found "bills coming out of no where" and that he didn't want "that kind of surprise."

"We want to make sure," he said, "that a purchase order is issued, and that we know exactly how much is left in the coach's account so that there's no mistake made in that area."

Last March, the Collegian reported that retired Athletic Director Warren McGuirk had approved purchases for personal gifts and other questionable expenditures such as cigars for the coaching staff of the New England Patriots.

McInerney said that he has set up "adequate controls" since coming to UMass, and that purchases in most areas the Collegian reported would not reoccur.

"I am super-sensitive to the fact that the student is contirubting substantial money to this program," he said.

But McInerney defended other expenditures reported by the Collegian, including gum and oranges for the teams, arguing that they are "important in the sports culture that starts back in junior high school and presumably extends up to the Patriots."

McInerney said that he wanted to be able to jusify every expenditure, although others would not necessarily agree with his conclusion.

The Athletic Director said that the "horrendous stories" he had heard about complimentary tickets were "not quite as bad as people suspected" and that beginning in Spetember, he would be able to adequately justify any complimentary ticket situation.

McInerney said that meetings between the coaches and Dr. James Cotanche of the Infirmary could lead to the elimination of pregame steak meals for the teams on the basis of nutrition.

A comprehensive written policy on financial expenditures is currenly being formulated, according to McInerney. It will be released to the Department and to the press during the summer.

Lack of Control

The Athletic Director said that he does not have control over all aspects of his budget. He pointed especially to maintenance, which, in the fiscal 1974 budget includes $1500 for the painting of the Stadium's Facilities Building and a $1000 increase in the cost of utilities.

"I don't make the decision," McInerney said, "as to whether the grass is appropriate or the facilities building needs painting. . .I've been amazed at the number of charges we get from the physical plant for the stadium."

McInerney said that he had no control over these budget items, and that he did not have an answer as to where or when he would complain to the university administration about expenditures in his budget he had no control over.

"Who knows?" he mused. "In a year I might complain, particularly if I can't support the cheerleaders next year. Then I might start."

Besides financial affairs, Athletic Director McInerney felt that he had accomplished much with human relations, especially in the Intramural Program, where there had been some racial and other disturbances.

Intramural officials have participated in human relations seminars, according to McInerney, and the seminars have been so successful that they will be expanded to encompass the entire Department.

Promotion

The Athletic Director said that "significant strides" were being made in the area of sports promotion. These include renting of billboards during the football season, a sales research project, a revitalization of the Minutemen radio network, and an "intensive study" currently underway of the Sports Information Office operatvons.

McInerney explained the promotion efforts by saying that a responsibility of the Athletic Department was to "convey its image of success and excellence to the constituency it serves".

"Athletics has always had a unique and strange hold on people," McInerney continued. "In the culture in which we exist today, it almost seems incredible the amount of attention we pay to athletics. . .Therefore, there are many, many people throughout the society that look at a university, not in terms of its academic accomplishments, but in terms of its athletic accomplishments, which feed into a beautiful system nationally of publicity. . .

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney

"It's an injustice", he observed, "and it's difficult for me to understand, but if that's it, that's it. I accept it for what it is."

Women's Sports

The Athletic Director pledged "equality across the board" for women's athletics, but warned that women have unique needs and that they would make a "very serious error if they tried to simply copy and follow the men."

He said that if the Women's Physical Education Department requested scholarships for women, he would grant them, but noted that other women's teams which do not receive grants might not wish to play UMass.

Whatever happens with women's athletics, McInerney said that the decisions will be ultimately made by women.

Next year's budget includes money for the improvement of existing women's programs and for the establishment of a volleyball team. The improvements include better food, equipment, and publicity.

"I was amazed to find out the women didn't have these things," McInerney said.

Student Control

In regards to student control of the Athletic Department's decision-making processes, McInerney said that student "participation" is the "most vital ingredient in any successful educational program", but he said that if students were able to "control and administer" the Athletic Department, if they were "that capable and that well-trained", then they did not need to spend four years in college.

(The only program which students control on campus is the $825,000 collected from the Student Activities Fee. The Campus Center Board of Governors consists of both students and administrators and sets general policy.)

McInerney said that the Athletic Fee is about 30% of the Department's total budget, but that students are represented through the Athletic Council, where they comprise 46% of the membership, the highest allowed by the NCAA. McInerney did not relate this representation and participation to actual control of the budget.

The Athletic Director said that student participation or control should vary from program to program, depending on the students' ability to enable the program to fulfill its stated goals. "It would have absolutely no relationship to fee schedules or ability to pay," he added.

McInerney said that his department had large amounts of student input from the Intramural Advisory Committee, the Black Student Athletic Council, and the Director's Advisory Committee.

. . . Come Be A Player

the work will be done then. Since he will be participating in the project, Fiala explained, he will not, for example, just be acting for the show but learning about acting and doing other outside assignments.

Since Roister-Doisters and Music Theatre are not a part of the University Theatre Department, majors and non-majors alike will still be able to participate in productions of these two groups without signing-up for courses or leaving their afternoons free since rehearsals will be in the evenings.

Scott explained that through this new program they are trying to solve what they found to be problems in the present program, basically, the fragmentation of the smaller programs within the overall theatre one.

Scott and Fiala said they want to solve the problem of "techies vs. actors", for example, and make the whole process of theatrical production more coherent.

Scott explained that students are usually plugged in late in the process. The designer and director work out their jobs and the students are cast and build the set. The students don't get experience with how the whole thing is generated except theoretically in class.

Fiala explained that the intent of the new program is to give the major a well-rounded education in theatre. Through the basic skills areas students will learn what they need to learn further about the three areas of theatre.

Then through the project level requirements they will learn about various aspects of theatre rather than just about the one area in which they may be interested. Through the concentration they will then be able to pursue their chosen area if they wish.

Women, Minorities Can Make It In Media

By DEBBIE MORIARTY

Representatives from CBS, WEEI, and The Boston Globe were in the Campus Center Friday from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. to talk to students about perspective careers in the mass media. The representatives were here in connection with a seminar, sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Office, on job opportunities for women and minorities in the media.

The purpose of the seminar was not specifically for job placement, but rather for information regarding the "ins and outs" of entering various fields. According to the representatives the emphasis in the mass media is on jobs for women and minorities. A woman or minority person with the same talent and background as a white male will have a better chance in being hired for the job.

Approximately twenty-five students during the four hours attended the seminar, possibly due to a lack of publicity of the seminar.

Chopper Fired On

Viet Fighting At Three Week High

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—Fighting across South Vietnam was reported Sunday to have soared to its highest level in three weeks, and an international peacekeeping helicopter was fired on over a "contested" area in the Mekong Delta, commission sources said.

It was the third time in a little more than a month that helicopters of the four-nation International Commission of Control and Supervision have been fired on. The first incident, April 7, caused nine deaths, but the latter two have resulted in no injuries and no damage.

The latest incident is certain to stir new protests in the commission, particularly from Canada, which may decide to pull out of the peacekeeping force at the end of this month. The commission has curtailed its flights to essential missions, restricting its movements and thus making it ineffective as an observation force.

The latest helicopter carried four Poles, a Canadian, an American contract employe and an American crew, commission sources said. They reported that it drew "a couple of bursts" of small arms fire while flying from Tri Ton, near the Cambodian border, to Vi Thanh, 110 miles southwest of Saigon.

At the same time, the Saigon command said Communist-led troops fired small arms and a Soviet-built, hand-fired, Strela heat-seeking missile at three government helicopters in another contested area of the Mekong Delta, about 50 miles southwest of Saigon. Two of the helicopters were lightly damaged and there were no casualties, the Saigon command said. The helicopters were on liaison and resupply missions, a communique reported.

The Saigon command said the thrust of the increased action again was aimed at the western defense line of the old imperial capital of Hue.

Despite the intensification, no major battles were reported and the fighting remained on a small scale, although government positions on Hue's western defense line took about 600 rounds of mortar fire.

At the same time there were reliable reports that North Vietnam had improved its nearly 100-mile road network from Sepone, in southern Laos to the A Shau valley in the northwestern quarter of South Vietnam. Reports reaching Saigon said the North Vietnamese had rebuilt the A Shau Valley into a major supply base as a threat to Hue, 25 miles to the northeast.

At least eight surface-to-air missile sites have been established along South Vietnam's northwestern border between A Shau and Khe Sanh, to the north.

The road network was said to be virtually an all-weather supply line from Laos, which would allow war materials to move if necessary during the current monsoon season.

North Vietnam's intentions were not immediately clear, but it was presumed Hanoi was keeping its options open should it decide to launch an all-out offensive in the northern quarter of South Vietnam.

Guerrillas Kidnap, Free Lebanese Police

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Guerrillas kidnapped and later released 11 Lebanese policemen Sunday as Arab mediators worked to arrange a summit meeting between Lebanese and Palestinian guerrilla leaders.

The Defense Ministry reported the guerrillas kidnapped the policemen after attacking a northern border post with rockets and machine guns. Army reinforcements moved in and drove off the Palestinians, the ministry said, and the 11 captives were turned over unharmed to the regional military command a short time later.

One of the mediators, Secretary-General Mahmoud Riad of the Arab League, met with President Suleiman Franjieh and later described the situation as "improving." But a dusk-to-dawn curfew remained in effect, indicating continuing uneasiness about the hostility that erupted into bloody clashes last week.

Envoys from Egypt, Syria, Algeria and other Arab countries also had contacts with guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat, who withdrew a threat to break off talks and leave the country. No fresh clashes were reported.

War At Suez-So What?

By HAL McCLURE
Associated Press Writer

ISMAILIA, Occupied Sinai (AP)—If war is about to explode across the Suez Canal, the would-be combatants don't seem to be greatly concerned.

"There's more tension on Dezengoff Street," snapped a young officer at an Israeli bunker on the canal. Dezengoff Street is one of Tel Aviv's main boulevards.

Egyptian and Israeli soldiers along the 103-mile waterway show no evidence they are listening to Cairo or Jerusalem. Egyptian President Anwar Sadat has declared that confrontation with Israel is inevitable and that the Egyptian army is only waiting for his orders to move.

Israeli Premier Golda Meir has warned Sadat that Israel would win any renewed battle and added that she hoped "for the sake of the Egyptians," fighting would not resume.

Kissinger Believed Arranging U.S.-Soviet Summit For June

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Henry A. Kissinger and Leonid I. Brezhev continued talks Sunday at a country hideaway and were believed to be arranging a summit conference next month in the United States.

For the first time since the presidential troubleshooter arrived in Moscow on Friday, the U.S. embassy disclosed he was meeting with Brezhnev and top officials who would accompany the Communist party leader to America.

"Dr. Kissinger and aides continue to meet with Soviet officials," an embassy statement said. "Participating on the Soviet side, in addition to General Secretary Brezhnev, are Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and the Soviet ambassador to the U.S., Anatoly F. Dobrynin."

Both sides have kept a tight news blackout on the talks since Kissinger refused comment on arrival and was whisked to a forested government compound along the Volga, 60 miles north of Moscow.

Pravda, the Communist party organ, was equally laconic Sunday. Commentator Tomas Kolesnichenko made only one brief mention of the Kissinger visit, in the paper's weekly international review: "As international observers point out, the arrival in Moscow of U.S. presidential assistant, H. Kissinger, provides an opportunity for a detailed and businesslike discussion of perspectives of Soviet-American cooperation."

A visit to Washington by party chief Brezhnev, expected sometime in June or July, is believed to be one of the more pressing matters in the deepening Russian-American detente.

But Kissinger also was expected to discuss a wide range of topics, including trade, arms limitations, troop reductions in Europe and Soviet policy on Jewish emigration.

Attorneys Ask Charges Dropped In Ellsberg Case

AP Photo

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Defense attorneys in the Pentagon papers trial said Sunday that they will go to a federal appeals court to ask that the charges against Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo be dismissed immediately on grounds that the White House tried to compromise the judge.

The attorneys said they were working on a petition for a writ of mandamus to be filed Monday with the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal. They said they would ask the court to order U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne to dismiss the charges of espionage, conspiracy and theft against Ellsberg and Russo.

The appeal to the higher court comes after Byrne refused on Friday to dismiss the case. The dismissal motion was based on the defense's contention that Byrne had been prejudiced during the trial by a White House offer to consider Byrne for the post of FBI director.

Byrne is still considering the possibility of dismissal of the case because of a link between the controversial Watergate incident in Washington and a burglary at the office of Ellsberg's psychiatrist. He has taken a motion to that effect under submission for further consideration and said he would not make that decision until he has received all facts in his probe of the matter.

He is seeking to find out whether the Justice Department used "tainted evidence" illegally obtained through the burglary.

The attorneys said Sunday that they will contend in their appeal that the court was "compromised" by two meetings with former presidential advisor John D. Ehrlichman last month.

Byrne has announced in court all details of the meeting, attempting to set the record straight. He said that at Ehrlichman's request he visited the Western White House on April 5 and was approached about becoming FBI director. Byrne said he refused to consider the position while the Pentagon papers trial was going on. He said he had no discussion about the trial with Ehrlichman or with President Nixon, whom he met briefly.

Later, Byrne revealed that he was contacted again by Ehrlichman and met again with the presidential adviser on April 7 at an unspecified location in Santa Monica. He said that he continued to refuse to discuss the possibilities of his taking over the FBI job and said there was no talk about the Pentagon papers trial.

Defense attorneys argued that although Byrne assured them there was no discussion of the trial, it was still improper for him to have had contact with White House officials during a case involving charges of violation of government rules.

Ellsberg, 42, and Russo, 36, are charged with espionage, conspiracy and theft for copying the Pentagon's top-secret study of the Vietnam war.

The situation was complicated further when defense attorneys elicited from Byrne another detail—that he had been introduced to President Nixon's foreign policy advisory, Henry Kissinger, at a party during the same week he met with Ehrlichman.

The attorneys noted that Kissinger's name has been mentioned frequently in testimony at the trial because he was a key figure in the Vietnam war negotiations.

John Raps Martha, UPI On Watergate

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Martha Mitchell's reported suggestion that President Nixon resign because of Watergate "is ridiculous," her husband, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, said Sunday.

Mitchell issued a statement saying United Press International, which carried the suggestion in a story, took advantage of a personal telephone call from Mrs. Mitchell to a UPI reporter Saturday.

Meanwhile, Sen. Edward J. Gurney said, "We have a governmental crisis at hand in this country." The presidency, he said, is "sort of adrift, like a ship with its sails torn by a storm and without a rudder."

The Florida Republican, a member of the Senate Judiciary and Watergate committees, was interviewed on the CBS broadcast "Face the Nation."

Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, former Republican national chairman, said the Watergate scandal has damaged President Nixon's credibility, but "I don't think it is fatal . . . much depends on what happens as the facts come out in the Watergate."

In another development, Time and Newsweek magazines said ousted presidential counsel John W. Dean III is prepared to testify that President Nixon personally congratulated him for covering up the administration's involvement in the break-in and bugging of Democratic national headquarters in the Watergate building complex.

Newsweek said Nixon remarked at a meeting in the Oval Office last September with Dean and White House chief of staff H. R. Bob Haldeman: "Good job, John. Bob told me what a great job you've been doing." Time said the meeting was among Nixon, Dean and domestic-affairs adviser John D. Ehrlichman and that Nixon said: "John here tells me you've been doing fine work."

Neither magazine identified its source in announcing that the stories would be published in issues that reach news stands Monday.

Dole, interviewed on ABC's "Issues and Answers," said an administration shift toward more liberal, or centrist, policies "might be helpful politically now that some of Nixon's top aides associated with more right-wing policies have left the White House.

Both Gurney and Sen. John Tunney, D—Calif., who appeared on the program with him, agreed it was improper for the White House to offer the judge in the Pentagon Papers trial a top government job while the trial was under way.

The President and Ehrlichman met with U.S. District Judge Matt Byrne to approach him about taking over the FBI directorship. Since then, Byrne has disclosed evidence of White House involvement in the case against Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo.

She was subpoenaed to give a deposition in a civil damage suit brought by the Democratic National Committee over the break-in last June at the Watergate headquarters. Mrs. Mitchell wore sunglasses and clutched a worn Bible (lower left, below microphones) when she arrived.

The Economy

Price Violations Suspected

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Cost of Living Council suspects that many companies, anticipating either a price freeze or stronger economic controls, have boosted prices recently in violation of government standards.

The council, however, has yet to get the goods on any firm that has gone beyond the rules in this way. And it may be mid-June or even later before it has the evidence to roll back any such price increases.

Council officials believe President Nixon's decision to tighten Phase 3 price controls will help in nailing down anticipatory price increases and forcing them down.

Nixon last week ordered large companies to notify the government in advance when they increase average prices more than 1.5 per cent above the levels of Jan. 10, the day before the largely voluntary Phase 3 price-control system began.

He also ordered these firms to report to the government all their price actions since Phase 3 began through April 30, These reports will be used to zero in on any illegal price increases.

But the council said the public should not expect massive price rollbacks.

In the first place, the reports do not have to be in until about the middle of June. And the council isn't expecting many companies will be reaching the average 1.5 per cent level in price boosts very soon.

But William Walker, general counsel for the agency, said there probably will be some rollbacks on the reports are analyzed. They will be studied on a case-by-case basis.

sts very soon.

But William Walker, general counsel for the agency, said there probably will be some rollbacks on the reports are analyzed. They will be studied on a case-by-case basis.

According to the government's price guidelines, price boosts must reflect legitimate costs. Hiking them merely in anticipation of costs is considered illegal.

The anticipatory price increases came while Congress was considering extension of the Economic Stabilization Act for another year, to April 30, 1974.

Congress debated price freezes and rollbacks before finally killing all such proposals and giving President Nixon the one-year extension of the law he wanted.

Not only did some businesses push up prices in anticipation of a congressional freeze, but others believed Nixon was going to pre-empt the situation with strong action of his own, council officials said.

Food Programs Only 50% Effective

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Hunger Committee said Sunday that federal food programs are serving only half the nation's poor.

The Midwest appears to be most lax in seeing that federally subsidized food programs get to their residents subsisting in poverty, the committee said, while Southern states, pinpointed as the worst offenders five years ago, are now much more responsive.

The staff of the committee prepared current statistical profiles on counties showing the number of poor and how many are helped by either surplus commodity distribution or by food stamps.

The comparison with a pioneer 1968 hunger study by a Citizens' Board of Inquiry into Hunger and Malnutrition showed only a minimal drop in counties considered to be offering inadequate anti-poverty food programs.

In 1968, there were 280 such counties; in 1973, there are 263. The report estimated the number of poor persons at 13.7 per cent of the nation's population, or 26.7 million, and said 48 per cent of these persons received no food assistance of any kind, despite assurances in recent years from the Department of Agriculture that the "food gap" was being closed. The report said great progress had been made in the years since the conclusions were made public by the Hunger USA report of 1968—that congressionally mandated federal food programs were not being used by hundreds of counties are still rated as "hunger counties," the report said.

In 1967, the federal food stamp and donated foods programs served only 5.4 million persons, provided very limited benefits and varied widely in administration, the Hunger Committee report noted.

The spotlight put on the original "hunger counties" and greatly expanded federal programs has brought a dramatic tripling in the number of persons benefitting, the report said, but there is much still to be done and no time for self-congratulations.

"Census statistics indicate the incident of poverty and so of hunger has risen since 1969," the report said. "Food assistance is minimal at best and still does not help about half of our poor."

The committee report noted that states such as West Virginia, Alabama and Mississippi have relatively few jobs available and have a lower than average standard of living.

"But they are also states in which a clear effort has been made to get the food assistance to the eligible poor," the report said.

"By contrast, states such as Iowa, Nebraska and Wisconsin have numbers of counties doing a poor job of providing food assistance but few or no counties in the poverty column with above average numbers of poor persons," the report said.

Some of the most heavily urbanized states, such as Massachusetts, Ohio and New Jersey, reach less than two-thirds of their poor with food aid, the report said.

"It would appear . . . that the states which do the best job of feeding their poor are the New England states and the states of the far West," the report said. "In California, for example, 30 of the 56 counties provide food assistance to over 60 per cent of the poor in those counties. On the other hand, the states in the Midwest are least successful in terms of the percentage of poor who participate in the food programs."

Bruce Leaves For Peking

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Veteran envoy David K. E. Bruce left for Peking Sunday to open the United States' first diplomatic post in the Republic of China since the Communists took over a generation ago.

In an airport interview, he said he approached the job "with great enthusiasm."

Bruce was escorted to the airline entrance by Chinese diplomat Han Hsu, who will be deputy chief of the liaison office scheduled to be opened here later this month.

From here, Bruce and his entourage were flying to Seattle and then to Hong Kong where they will spend five days before proceeding to Peking.

The Effects Of Watergate

A forum on the Watergate scandal will be featured on WMUA's "Focus" series tonight at 10 p.m.

The discussion, centering on the effects of the Watergate incident on future Presidential pllities, was taped last Thursday evening during a lively session of Project Ten's Political Campaigns Seminar in the Moore House apartment in Southwest.

Guest panelists for the forum were Robert S. Weiner, a staff member of the Democratic National Committee during the 1972 campaign, and John D. Lawlor, Jr., who was a First Congressional District Delegate to the Democratic National Convention in Miami last July.

The forum was moderated by "Focus" host Ken Mosakowski, who is also Seminar instructor.

30 Prisoners Ransomed For U.S. Consul General

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP)—A Cuban Embassy official said Sunday afternoon that 30 prisoners whose freedom was demanded as ransom for the kidnapped U.S. consul general, Terrance G. Leonhardy, had arrived safely in Havana.

The final step in the bargain-releasing Leonhardy unharmed—was up to the guerrillas who abducted the American diplomat.

The embassy official said Jorge Reyes Vega, first secretary and charge d'affaires, went to Mexico City's major television studio for a nationwide broadcast telling of the prisoners' safe arrival in the Cuban capital.

The kidnappers pledged they would free Leonhardy after such a broadcast.

Leonhardy, 58, was kidnapped near his suburban home Friday afternoon by a revolutionary guerrilla group calling itself the Armed Revolutionary Forces of the People.

There had been no word of Leonhardy's condition or whereabouts since he was seized.

All state and federal police were directed to do nothing in the case until Leonhardy's safety was assured.

The 30 prisoners freed were accused of bombings, bank robberies, shootings and subversion. They were released from seven jails across Mexico during the afternoon and night and brought to Mexico City. They were taken in army trucks to the side of the plane and departed on the 5-1/2-hour flight to Cuba at 7:45 a.m.

Former White House Aide Ordered Ellsberg Break-In BOSTON (AP) - Former White House aide Egil Krogh Jr. says he ordered the controversial breakin at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's California psychiatrist for "national security" reasons, according to an interview in the Christian Science Monitor.

The Monitor's Gordfrey Sperling Jr., in a story to be published in Monday's editions of the Monitor, said Krogh indicated he was rebuked for the incident by John D. Ehrlichman, former chief domestic advisor to President Nixon.

"It was made abundanctly clear by Mr. Ehrlichman following the Ellsberg incident," Krogh said, "that this activity went far beyond any general grant of authority for covert activity which he had in mind."

Krogh said he had been ordered by Ehrlichman to "undertake immediately a comprehensive effort to determine sources, causes and effects of the unauthorized disclosure of the Pentagon papers."

Asked who had specific responsibility for authorizing the breakin of the Ellsberg psychiatrist's office, Krogh said:

"It was my decision under my understood supervisory responsibility. No prior authorization was received from John Ehrlichman or any other individual.

"By nature of the assignment as given to me by Mr. Ehrlichman I felt I had this authority, rightly or wrongly."

He added, "There may well have been elements of inexperience, amateurism and overzealousness on my part."

He said he was speaking because "it was imperative to clarify misleading accounts ascribing responsibility for this decision to Mr. Ehrlichman or anyone else."

Krogh said the reasons for ordering the rifling of the psychiatrist's office stem from "the Pentagon papers release and the questions as to who might have been involved in their dissemination and how the information came into the possession of unauthorized people.

"I'm also referring to the disclosure of extremely sensitive intelligence information regarding the strategic arms limitation talks and information regarding the Soviet move to avert a war by entering into a pact with India.

"The cummulative effect of these and other unauthorized disclosures led to my judgment that we faced a deeply serious situation."

Asked to be more specific about the possible threat to national security, Krogh said this was high sensitive information which he sent in an affidavit to federal judge William M. Byrne Jr., who is presiding over the Ellsberg trial in Los Angeles.

Impeachment Study Urged

NEW YORK (AP) - Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.1, says she will cosponsor a resolution asking the House of Representatives to conduct an inquiry on whether grounds exist for impeaching President Nixon.

The resolution will be introduced this week, she said in a Saturday appearance at Columbia University, "to demonstrate that the President is not above the law."

The congresswoman rejected the argument that even if Nixon were implicated, it should be overlooked for the sake of government stability."

Dade County: 'Huh?' In Two Languages

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP)—Dade County has been officially declared bilingual and bicultural, but no one is really quite sure what it means.

"I really don't know," confessed Dade County Mayor Jack Orr, who should have because it was his resolution which the county commission adopted recently.

"But we'll almost certainly have all street and office signs printed in both English and Spanish and have bilingual people in all the government offices," Orr said.

"And we should have county tests, such as contractors; qualifying exams, in both Spanish and English," he added.

The resolution called for creation of a division of bilingual and bicultural affairs in the county manager's office to implement the proposal.

County Manager Ray Goode said that he wasn't sure who he would appoint to the agency or just what its duties would be.

Despite the uncertainty, the Miami area's huge Latin colony of 300,000—90 per cent of whom are expatriate Cubans—was delighted by the decision. They considered it a victory in a campaign seeking better local government services for the Spanish-speaking.

The prime mover behind the resolution, Cuban-born banker Bernardo Benes, told the commission, "Today is a beautiful day for Dade County and its Spanish-speaking people. You are making official what is already a fact of life, that Dade County is already a bicultural county."

Dr. Carmon Marina, director of Biscayne College's Bilingual Institute, says many Cubans "are realizing that this is their home, and they want to participate in the community. But when you don't speak the language you are shut off—completely."

The few criticisms expressed have come primarily from private citizens, some of them anonymous letter writers to Orr and the commission. Some people sympathetic to the Latin community believe the resolution will further discourage some Spanish-speaking residents from learning English.

Are AP And UPI Obsolete?

By JIM WILLSE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The major news services face a variety of problems in meeting the need for fast reporting on increasingly complex issues, according to a panel of journalists.

The journalists were considering the question, "Is Wire Service Reporting Obsolete?"

The seminar was held Sunday as part of the A. J. Liebling Counter-Convention, sponsored by MORE, a New York-based journalism review.

Taking part were present and former newspaper editors and newsmen with United Press International and The Associated Press.

The session concentrated on the Washington performance of the two largest news services, AP and UPI.

Among the questions discussed were how much of the capital should be and can be covered, whether a newspaper should rely solely on AP and UPI for coverage, and the job done by the news services in investigative reporting, particularly of the Watergate scandal.

Representatives of UPI and AP conceded that their coverage of the Watergate case depended in large measure on disclosures reported elsewhere.

"A large part of the UPI report has been reporting what other people have been digging up," said Grant Dillman, Washington bureau chief of UPI.

Big Bad John

To the surprise of no one, former Democratic Governor of Texas, John Connally, officially became a Republican last week, in the wake of President Nixon's tearjerking speech on the Watergate. Connally is fondly remembered as the national head of the Democrats for Nixon during the '73 election, in which post he distinguished himself by turning his back on the political party that had supported him and elected him all these years. In his press conference last week, he made it clear that the Democratic Party had moved too far to the left and consequently out of the mainstream of public thinking. The Republicans, on the other hand, have slid from the right wing and nestled themselves in the middle, somewhere among the great silent majority that elects Presidents, and to Connally that last point is most important.

It is taken for granted that the man wants to be President, a sure sign being his lack of willingness to discuss it. That is the irony of American Politics, one can learn more about a person's objectives by what he doesn't say, than by what he does say. Ambition is a way of life with big John, and when the opportunity doesn't present itself, he changes the scenery so that it does. When he was working in the campaign he stated that the Presidency is above politics, and it seems he still feels that way, for what is a political party if the Presidency is not far off.

But why jump onto a sinking ship, when everyone else is bailing out? The answer to that lies in the nomination speech at the '76 convention, when big John is praised as being the man who helped the party in its darkest hour, and wasn't afraid to support the President when his "most trusted aides" were deserting him left and right. And when compared with Agnew the Silent, John will come off like Ev Dirksen. And Nixon himself has stated that Connally is capable of taking on any job in the world, and who better to judge character than Nixon, why just look at the capable, honest, God-fearing men around men. And who would ever dispute that no finer men were ever assembled to advise the President of the United States than Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Hunt, Liddy, Dean, McCord, Magruder, Mitchell, and on and on. So with the blessings of Richard, I'm sure that John will go a long way in the Republican Party. I, for one, shed no tears upon his leaving.

And I sincerely doubt his exodus will throw the Democratic Party into tantrums, just as no Republican eyes watered when John Lindsay took the ferry. But I doubt that Lindsay owed as much to the GOP as Connally does to the Dems., and that's the kind of thing that is not easily forgotten. If Connally should receive the nomination of "his" party, he will most certainly have a fight on his hands, for opportunism is despised even more than ingratitude. I guess there is something about Nixon that attracts people like Connally and the above mentioned henchmen. Perhaps it is because of the great shape this country's in, or the calm and credible manner of the administration. Or it could be the President himself, the sincerity of his speeches, and the confidence he exudes. The quality is hard to put your finger on, but it was somewhere in that speech of his the other night on Watergate. Maybe it's the casual way he calls on the Almighty to bless us all, every one.

That speech must have been the turning point for Connally, for immediately afterward he was on the telephone congratulating our fearless leader for a job well done. But big John missed the boat there too, because if he had any sense at all he would have congratulated us that night, for having the intestinal fortitude to sit through the whole thing. But big John thought it was great. See Johnny run.

Four Years After

In three weeks there will be a ceremony in Alumni Stadium that seems to be more for the parents of the graduates than for the graduates themselves. This ceremony will cap-off primarily four, but in some cases three, in some cases six years of undergraduate experience. The majority of students graduating, however, were freshmen during the 1969-70 school year.

I don't know the experience of everyone, but freshmen year sort of went like this for me:

College . . . the American dream . . . the center of "the government" . . . I couldn't wait to get here . . . I grew my hair until it got good in the back . . . I was going to be a hippie (with qualifications of course).

I'm a revolutionary . . . peaceful of course . . . don't forget "peace". I'll smoke a lot of dope . . . Friday night's meant rushing back to the dorms in order to get high for the rest of the night . . . I was back to nature, on the commune, stop the war, smash the state, go to the city, fuck "the pigs", fight for socialism . . . black power . . . gay power . . . women's power . . . no power . . . power to the people . . . down with suburbia, dorms, frats, UMass, middle class, upper class, Nixon, Nixon, Nixon, Agnew, short hair, jocks etc., etc all at the same time. I can remember seeing students attend classes on a "moratorium day" and wondering what was wrong with them; were they traitors or something?

Spring rolled around and I was ready for anything. I got all I could ever hope for. The "Strike" hit UMass. God I loved it to death. Kent State and Cambodia really bothered me and I really wanted to do something about it. I was glad to see 250 colleges go on strike and give Nixon a boot in the ass. Besides canvassing, picketing, leafleting, attending rallies and giving money, I went swimming, tripping, balling, traveling, sleeping and a lot of other things I couldn't do during class time.

The Strike was a big deal. In a sense it was the peak of my undergraduate years. It was the nervous breakdown of the American student condition. It was Eric the Rat demanding a "tribal space" in the front of a bandstand. It was going to Washington, D.C. to demonstrate . . . it was demonstrating on the Amherst town common . . . . it was hysteria, democracy, anarchy, communism, socialism, conservatism, imperialism, liberalism, "objective news," prejudice, bias, racism, sexism, violence, pacifism all at once.

Now of course I am a senior. I am still concerned about many of those things which ran through my head as a freshman, except now it doesn't all seem so confusing and incoherent to me. I feel as if I understand better the context into which it all fits. I feel as if I have better tools with which to assess much of what I confront. I am no longer a freak, a revolutionary or a drop-out, but a graduating senior from UMass. This year I was more interested in getting into law school, learning the journalist's craft and studying and doing well in school than anything else. I guess I am like the kid who enters college in a sweatshirt and dungarees and leaves in a jacket and tie with a briefcase.

After four years of education I have been recruited and mobilized to help carry out the collective goals of the nation. Some of those goals, as they are interpreted now, I have serious disagreements with. I am leaving UMass with probably much the same reflections as many of my fellow graduates. I know that I really wish I didn't have to leave because I like being here. The life has always been interesting and stimulating. I hope I won't be giving it all up by leaving. Farewell UMass.

Sick Cities

By STEVE McMAHON

Since the beginning of civilization, the city has served as the cultural, economic and intellectual center of society. Its greatness and its problems were the pride and concern, whether in large part or small, or virtually every member of that society. But today the city no longer enjoys either the respect or the concern of the people it so selflessly serves. Rather, it has become a breeding ground of crime, pollution and congestion; a place to be avoided.

The city's problems derive from a myriad of sources and cannot realistically be enumerated and discussed here. But in reviewing the problems of the city, one must conclude that much of what has gone wrong in the city is intimately tied to the broader concept of urban growth, or more appropriately unregulated urban growth.

Urban growth in the United States has been sloppy at best. At worst, it has been absolutely chaotic. To a considerable degree, much of the blame must be placed on the federal government. While not directly involved in the planning of the modern city, the national government, through its housing and highway subsidization programs, has greatly accelerated the demise of the city.

There has long been a critical housing shortage in this country. It is a problem that still persists today. For a variety of reasons, construction of new housing lags far behind population growth and the disrepair of existing dwellings. Beginning primarily during the depression, the federal government has attempted to alleviate this problem. Unfortunately, in so doing it has inadvertently fostered the development of what is disdainfully referred to as "urban sprawl". Through Federal Housing Authority mortgage insurance, the national government has made the land-devouring single-family dwelling the realizable ideal of virtually every moderate-income family. A family can thereby insulate itself from the problems of the city, while still reaping its rewards, by escaping to the suburbs.

Fortunately, this trend has been reversed to some extent in recent years through more urban-oriented programs such as urban renewal, which under Title I provides for the power of eminent domain. As can be seen by viewing the large, vacant, bull-dozed lots within many cities, urban renewal still has a number of loose ends. But it at least represents an attempt at control rather than a foolish and wasteful subordination of the city to the whims of the business interests. Like Richard Nixon, big business must be subject to a few rules, lest it get out of hand.

Whether other federal programs have also helped to stimulate the rejuvenation of the city, such as the Model Cities Program, these programs frequently do little or nothing to alleviate the housing shortage. People forced to leave their homes under urban renewal rarely have the wherewithal to live in the new and expensive apartment complexes which often replace them.

In reaction to this sad fact, The Housing Act of 1969 initiated Operation Breakthrough under George Romney. While still in its infancy, this program offers a partial opportunity for the reconstruction of the city. Under this program, radically innovative systems and the older concepts of prefabrication and modular housing are combined in an attempt to create high-rise, inexpensive urban development. The crux of the problem is of course the cost. Employing synthetic materials, semi-skilled and unskilled labor, it can represent considerable cost reduction over union-made dwellings employing costly materials and methods. But it is only with the advent of a large volume market for factory-built dwellings that the cost differential between the new and traditional structures will become evident; a situation which only education, money and effort can attain.

The second area in which the federal government has had a hand in destroying the city is that of federal highway subsidization. Before the advent of the automobile, the city's outward growth was in large part determined by the extent of its mass transportation systems. With the use of electricity, itself a decentralizing force, mass transit consisted of the trolley car primarily. Such a system precluded the possibility of random growth.

This tidy little system worked quite well until the automobile arrived on the scene. With a personal means of conveyance at one's disposal, one could go where one pleased, rather than be restricted to those places to which the mass transportation systems provided access. The federal government then began a highway subsidization program which was gradually expanded over time until it proved to be imminently successful in assisting the mass exodus from the city. The results are an atrophied public transit system, clogged, congested and polluted cities and the consumption of valuable inner-city space by oversized automobiles and acres of parking lots; displeasing to the eye and costly to the wallet.

While many may argue that much of this seemingly culpable activity on the part of the national government becomes evident through the courtesy of hindsight (which it admittedly does), it is difficult to justify the continuance of such programs in the light of present realities. Unfortunately, this is precisely what the federal government is doing. While it has changed its stance with regard to the housing issue (at least to some limited extent), it continues to blunder forward with its inane highway subsidies, further damning both city and citizen alike. The recent House vote to kill a proposal that would make some of the funds in the highway subsidy program available to mass transit studies, would seem to fortify this assertion.

The city has a great many problems. It will doubtless require several comprehensive programs to alleviate many of its ills, if indeed they can be alleviated. Some of the answers can and should be provided by the federal government. But if any answers are to be forthcoming, a new set of priorities must be created; a set of priorities for instance, which put a greater emphasis on badly needed mass transportation systems (as are presently being developed in the automobile-choked Los Angeles area), and less on highways that tear up the landscape and consume valuable land. Whether the city is ever to be humanized and regain its stature as the focus of civilization will be determined by how well its present problems and future needs are dealt with and anticipated. The failure to do so in the past is the cause for concern today.

Letters To The Editor

A Good Jew?

To The Editor:

Over the past week I have heard many responses from Jews and non-Jews concerning the speech made by Mr. Stokely Carmichael. My response must go to a man who's claim to fame is that he was born a Jew and that is Mr. Eric Goldman.

It is evident that certain members of our society feel that whenever one is not on the losing side in the fight against racism and oppression, one is automatically aligned with the oppressor. Well, Mr. Goldman, you are terribly wrong. The Jewish people have been oppressed and, believe it or not, even on this campus lies intense, unfounded hatred for my people. The problem is that persons like yourself forget too soon what the Jewish people as a whole have accomplished to eradicate oppression among other peoples as well as themselves.

The same people, whom you accuse the whole Jewish population of oppressing, Black people, are those that received the first backing in the Civil Rights movement. Mr. Carmichael is a Black Anti-Semite and his justification is as convincing as a Jewish Supremacist. The Jew knew the Black man when it was not fashionable to admit it, and it seems that people like yourself will always put this aside in the name of the entire issue of racism. When it was also not vogue for the rest of the American people to give their time and even their lives for the Civil Rights movement, the Jew was not only raising money for it, but was being trampled on alongside the Black Americans that you claim all of us oppress. While working for the Black movement in 1964, two men of Jewish birth by the names of Schwerner and Goodman, along with a Black man named Chaney, were killed in the name of Civil Rights for Black people as a whole. Blacks have been victims of racism for too long to indulge in racial hate themselves, to come out and condemn an entire race as you and Mr. Carmichael have done.

Claiming you are a Jew touches me very little. It would be as the proverbial Uncle Tom, speaking out for the entire Black Community. Mr. Goldman, you are one of those lucky Jews, never having been oppressed in this country or anywhere else. But let me inform you, it has been perpetrated in the past and still exists in many parts of the world today. Being Jewish and White does not automatically give passage to the millions of Jews throughout the world. If it did, many Jews would not have changed their names from Cohan, Goldman, etc. to names that blend with society. Jews cannot hide their religion, just as they can't mask their race. Being White does not necessarily open doors, and, in fact, being Jewish may often hinder.

I cannot condone any abuse carried out against other men in this nation and throughout the world, but to come out as you have done and blame an entire people for racism is like balming every minority for the crime that is carried out in the streets today, as some White racists would like us to believe.

My parents were lucky to have gotten out of World War II alive, but their brothers and sisters as well as their parents were killed by the same Europeans that you claim to support. And as a child in this country I was beaten up because of my heritage. Then I didn't know the meaning of the word "racism", but I soon learned what it entailed. I was told to grin and bear it. "I was a 'good' Jew."

Mr. Goldman claims that Jews were allowed to stay together to practice their religion and live in peace in this country. Yes, I will admit that the 1970's lend less fear to the Jew. But must we forget the 40's and 50's when we weren't afforded the same social freedoms, and our Temples weren't held as sacred. Because Jewish people have fought hard to achieve a place in this society, you would have liked us to remain passive like many of our elders suggested. NO ONE GAVE THE JEWS ANYTHING OUT OF PURE LOVE. REMEMBER THAT.

Mr. Goldman, you feel that the Jews are wrong to take offense at criticism. Tell me who will guarantee the safety of the State of Israel. No government or ruling body is capable of this, no matter what anyone says. If the Israeli people had not taken the first move in 1967, there would be no State of Israel today, and 3 MILLION MORE DEAD JEWS for the world to mourn. I am sure that the world community would have regretted the destruction of Israel, and great editorials would have been written reminding us that once again we failed this "great race". The Jews prevented the Arab nations from eradicating us and, in doing so, established a place in the world for themselves. It was Israel that, after WWII, took in the Jewish immigrants without question while the rest of the world had quotas in this area and many still do today.

You say that the Jews have one up on the Catholic silence, but silence is at times the only means of existence the Jewish community has had. I cannot speak up for the Jews in Africa for I have not lived their experiences. I can only speak as an American Jew who has felt Racism from the same people that you claim I support.

'No, Mr. Goodman, you have no right to speak out for the Jewish community. You and I are only a small part of an old and complex people, who have not elected either one of us as their spokesman. They have instead accepted us as members of their community with the choice left up to us whether or not to belong.

Pervasive Ripoffs

To The Editor:

In my letter of April 30 the point made was that though people are studying, sunning, living "insulated and protected" there is a many-fronts ripoff financed by taxpayers funneled through the Pentagon to defense corporations. These corporations depend and thrive on huge price increases. Erik Janik (5-2) is confused by the comparison made between Pentagon and food increases. The most recent disclosure of Pentagon public rund ripoffs revealed that "3,652 actions have taken place since 1959 to assist such companies for a total of $85.9 million." (See NYTimes 4-30). This does not include the Lockheed "bailout" which received $1 billion. Lockheed promised the C-5 a cargo plane for $28 million apiece (equivalent to 15 50-bed hospitals) and is getting $62 million a plane which is a 121% inflation rate. This same $62 million could finance 17 health centers treating 40,000 each a year. Most assume this is good and necessary for the economy by providing employment. But as Congressman Aspin (Wisc.) has revealed, government expenditures in public services create nearly 4 times as many jobs per dollar spent as defense jobs.

Type of Work	Jobs Per Billion, 1 Year
Space	10,000
Defense	35,000
School construction	50,000
Public housing	76,000
Public Service	132,000

In reference to "farm economics" the federal agricultural subsidy structure goes at $5.7 billion a year which pays farmers not to farm, not to produce food, which cuts supply, which raises prices. Charles Schultze (former budget director for LBJ) has found that the wealthiest 7% farmers get federal subsidies averaging $14,000 which gives them a net income of $27,500 while the poorest 40% receive on the average $300 which gives them a net income of $1,100. One famous farmer, Senator Eastland (Miss.) gets over $100,000 yearly in cotton subsidies, (while always opposing subsidy programs for the poor).

Seymour Melman adds "military expenditures since 1945 amount to $1,300 billion, a sum exceeding the value of all residential and commercial structures on the surface of the United States. What has been expended is equivalent to the capital needed to reconstruct the country."

To get back to food prices and meat prices in particular, 2 of the nations 5 largest beef packing companies aided by John Connally's law firm, will merge this year and will control 20% of the national market which also allows this company to set spiraling prices. There is a parallel in the beef industry with the defense industry, for the large beef companies employ one worker per 1000 cattle. Lowar Beef processors have the fewest employees generating the greatest amount of sales and ranks as the U.S.'s 164th largest corporation while only employing 3,700 workers.

Given the ripoffs mentioned above, we may be depriving ourselves of alternative systems which would benefit more people without also having to make war on those who refuse to subjugate themselves to profit economics. As for the U.S. military some of the more obvious results of the last 20 years are that Korea and Vietnam have been divided. In the Phillipines, Indonesia and Thailand, opposition populations have been annihilated by vicious military regimes. The Dominican Republic was invaded by Marines to prevent a democratically elected government from carrying out policies which might have benefited the people rather than Pentagon security notions. Iran's and Guatemala's democratically elected governments were victims of CIA coups which installed military rule. In Brazil and Uruguay torture units of their armed services practice techniques learned in the U.S. or taught by U.S. advisors (see "State of Siege"). It is known who directed the actions which resulted in the assassinations of Che Guevara and Amilcar Cabral.

Again, who is flying reconnaissance missions over Wounded Knee? Who is dropping bombs on Cambodia? Who are the campus cronies of Watergate conspirators? Graduates of ROTC? How convenient to have a little military base on every campus and in the major high schools. Given the regression rate of 10 months, by this time next year ROTC could be a requirement for all male graduates, and female graduates since their PR people have become aware of how to appear as an equal opportunity organization. Pressure on ROTC is one aspect of the same effort which prevented the SST from being built and which contributed to the "peace campaign" of Nixon. If people do not act on behalf of their interests (they do complain about escalating costs of food but don't about escalating costs of bombs which they don't consume) or better yet on behalf of others too, then welfare for the rich, wars for the Pentagon and its parasitic corporations, power and immunity to Watergate-like gestapos will increase. The matter at hand is to prevent the $500 million from being appropriated to finance the current bombing in Cambodia.

Editorial Points

Gentlepeople:

To The Editor:

A copy of the commentary "A Sexist Dictionary," which appeared in the April 25 Daily Collegian, has been sent to me by the author, Mary Keane. Since I am cited in the piece, I would like to add a few comments of my own.

(1) I may be the only feminist currently in charge of a major American dictionary, but I am by no means "the only feminist in the ranks"— not while the ranks of American lexicographers include such distinguished women as Sheila Brantley, Myrna Breskin, and Olga Coren, to name three.

(2) In the American Heritage School Dictionary, men and women are defined as full-grown male and female human beings, and the definitions for male and female are perfectly parallel. The fact that the word man has more senses than the word woman is not the fault of the dictionary but reflects the fact that man is perhaps the most overworked noun in the language, being used to mean a person, agent, candidate, member, recruit, and the like. In my opinion, we should give the word man a gold watch and a testimonial dinner and retire it in its extended senses, leaving it to mean only an adult human male. But language users will have to do this before dictionaries can follow suit.

(3) Ms. Kean also brought up the problem of what salutation to use in a letter to a person or persons unknown. She tried "Sirs" in writing to us. Why not use "Madam or Sir" in the singular (in alphabetical order) and "Gentlepeople" in the plural? Where applicable (as in your newspaper), "To the Editor(s)" is an admirable non-sexist solution, and since I began with that greeting, so shall I close.

The War Goes On

To The Editor:

It's a well known fact to students at the university that American involvement in Southeast Asia has not ended. With daily bombings of Cambodia, occasional bombing of Laos, and the continuing threat of renewed bombing of Hanoi, we students find it more and more difficult to swallow Nixon's claim that the war is over and that the prisoners are all returned home.

In fact, there are still more than 1300 Americans Missing in Action in Southeast Asia compared to the 500 prisoners released by Hanoi. Out of the more than 300 MIA's in Laos, none have been claimed as prisoners by the Pathet Lao. They refuse comment on the fate of these men.

During the Eisenhower-Nixon administration, over 300 MIA Americans were left unaccounted for in Korea. We cannot let this happen again. We cannot allow Nixon to persuade the public that we are out of Southeast Asia while over 1300 families suffer with unanswered questions.

Any students who care about these men can help by writing letters to senators Kennedy and Brooke, to President Nixon, and to leaders of the communist groups in Southeast Asia. If the time cannot be found to write these letters, there is a table at the Campus Center with postcards already written and stamped to Senator Kennedy urging him to reconsider his refusal to accept Hanoi's invitation to visit communist leaders there. Also, are cards to Prince Souphanouvong of the Pathet Lao asking for a list of American prisoners. Such a list would force Nixon to admit to these prisoners and add pressure for an end to American political and military involvement in Southeast Asia. Your help is needed.

And It's Fare Thee Well . . .

This is the first part of my last column, and after 4 years, I'm getting sentimental.

I find myself crying when I drive through Hadley (no more Hadley to knock around!), I cry when I look at the towers, I cry when I talk to the kids on the corridor, I cry before Herter Hall, I cry because I'll miss the elevators in the Student Union and Bartlett Hall, the ones students aren't supposed to use.

UMass has been my home.

But most of all, UMass has been people, and what follows are some people who have moved me, who have made UMass that home for me. It's a cheap way of showing great affection, and it's my way of saying thanks.

THE 2ND FLOOR LONG CORRIDOR OF MOORE HOUSE 1969-70. This was it folks, the people who began treatment of all my high school neuroses, sympathetically, compassionately. I understand Mal is a skater, and Bob is off to Harvard, Rich and Reb have just been around and they always will, Eric is gigging in Springfield, Howie -- my friend and roommate -- is hustling at Logan, Duncan's grown up, but Dinkin and Bryant are still trucking on down the road. I've missed a lot of them, but I hope they'll forgive me. Oh yeah, Larry Ladd is President and Les was one, and Cliff is taking judo.

THE KIND PEOPLE OF PROJECT 10, First Gerry and Duban and Sue, then those geodesic domes, Lyssa and Chris and the Ronchester Club, and all the crazies from our first year. The world will someday hear from them.

Dave Hoffman is from Nebraska and that makes him a bit flakey, Charles will someday, and how can I forget the Project heavies that always were and always will be? Whatever happened to Siggy Forsgard and Dick Tedeschi and that English 113 class with Bob Bagg?

THIS YEAR, I'M ON THE 2ND FLOOR AGAIN, so they'll tell me if I miss anyone, so I won't mention anyone except for Chris for his sanity, LaMacchia for the laughs, and the new kids -- the freshmen and sophomores -- who I feel very close to: Mary, Marie, Kevins, Joanie, Nance, Wally, my-god-i'm-going-to-stop-right-now-cause-if-i-forget-someone-they'll-never-forgive-me.

THE FOLKIES. This is a broad category born from orientation and Hello Friend and nurtured in the bowels of Melville, Mirkwood, and alot of other places. Of course, those virgin whores, Karen and Flo, the odd couple, Chuck and Danny, throw in another Chuck who likes James Taylor, the sensational Lynda Brown, Bernie Kaplan, Doc and Ed, Frank Clark, Steve Brennan, Kathy Morrissey, and countless others who go down in the annals of people worth saving when the revolution comes.

THAT DAMNED RAG, the Collegian, causer of countless grief, maker of embittered has-beens has been known to have not a few people of integrity. So I won't offend the "newies", I'll merely mention the "oldies", my first editor, Donny Epstein, Keith Bromery, Rich Hanson, the news broads, Tweedledee Dee and Tweedledee Dum, Jim and Bill and Nate Gorenstein, Crazy Jerry, the Monday nite issue editor I think her name is Denise, Al Oickle, and, very dear to me, Kathy and Jake Edmunds, and Connie Holton.

Don Glickstein, 1969.

I WAS LUCKY, I GOT A JOB AT ORIENTATION. Too little space to mention all my fellow counselors, but they were pissas! And the indominable (if that's a word) Salle J! Thanks! Also to all the thousands of freshmens who had the misfortune of meeting me.

THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION IS SOMETHING ELSE. To say that Dwight had an influence on me--a positive one--is an understatement. The whole school has been my school, from modular credit to TPPC to the Deans to urban ed to reading to media to Marathon. A remembrance of Royce Phillips and Dave Yarington and Jack Hruska and again, I'd better stop; the list goes on. When people ask me where I go to college, I do not say "UMass"; I say the "UMass School of Education."

PROFESSORS. I feel awkward calling them that, because most of them I know by their first names: Kay (so all know, it's Kay Smith in English), Don Freeman, Mark Cheren, Harry Schumer, Bob Wood (he's also president, I think), John Hunt, John Foster, Everett Emerson, Marjorie Merchant, Nancy Stepan, Brian O'Connor, fondly, John Van Steenberg. These are a few of the teachers who prove that teachers are people. I suppose mentioning a few administrators would be appropriate too; Bill Bromery and his family, Bob Woodbury, Bob Gage, Al Southworth, Bill "AV" Bates, Dean Field (That really is his first name), Rob Brooks, and all the rest of the heavies.

STAFF. What a term! They're the people who run the university. The ladies at the Bursar's Office, the Campus Center Print Shop, Jeanie from Scheduling Desk, Terry Schwartz and Barb at Fine Arts, Wendy and Pat Crosson, the kids at the candy counter (including my cousin who I never met before), Dick Rossi (who manages the best dining commons at UMass) and Gerry Baldasarro, Mrs. Dorsey and Mrs. Wirth and all the other dining commons ladies, and even Dirty Alice I thank for the memories, and the people who run the free swim.

GANGS. The Greenough gang, the Louisville gang, the gangs of people I've interviewed, WATS lines, the Student Senate, Eric the Rat, the Faculty Senate (only educators need recognize their name), the gangs from RSO including Spectrum and Index and WTOY and Action Lab.

LOVE. I've loved a lot of people in different ways, at different times, with differing results. Some have been mentioned above; for the sake of their honor (after all, who would admit being friendly with me?) and my embarrassment, I give only initials: SS, NA, HG, KW, MES, DM, SB, DC, AC, DB, DR, and some others whose names I forget.

FORGIVE ME. I know I've missed some people I care for, but it's late already.

PEOPLE WHO NEED PEOPLE ARE THE LUCKIEST PEOPLE IN WORLD.

Parking Fees

Well, people, the "respectable" liberals have done it again. Remember my telling you about the pipe dreams that they try to apply to society that don't work out? Well, the proposed new parking system is a direct application.

The problem seems to be that there are too many cars and not enough spaces. Bill Ballou's survey last Wednesday (in yesterday's Collegian) showed that the problem is really that there aren't enough spaces in certain areas but, if one wants to park one's car, one can find a space to do so.

Another problem is that the Whitmore bureaucracy thinks that any student living on campus doesn't need a car. That's not true. I live on campus. I own and maintain a car up here and I need it simply because I must have the mobility only a car offers in order to carry out my activities. No, I don't drive from class to class. That's ridiculous. I just use my car to go to various off-campus areas, whether it's Barcelotti's or New York (home to me). I couldn't go anywhere if I didn't have that car. And I think a lot of people will agree with me on this.

Another thing brought out is that the fee here is cheaper than most places. Who gives a shit? Whitmore shouldn't try to keep up with the Jones'.

As far as the bus service goes, it can help keep "unwanted" cars off campus. I feel that UMass should buy the franchise Western Mass. bus lines holds from Amherst to Northampton with State Funds to improve it. Then, get more State Funds to build more parking spaces. That will solve the problem.

The only problem left is snow removal, which is always a New England hassle. The thing is that there always will be a large number of cars in certain lots which will always hassle snow removers. There is nothing that can be done here.

The only thing that the parking fee increase(s) will do is to keep the problem at status quo while soaking students, faculty and staff for more money.

Maybe it wasn't as warm and sunny as some people would have liked, but everyone seemed to have a good time at the annual spring-day in the Quad. Teams and individuals competed for prizes in the tug of war, egg throwing contest, three legged race, and a banana eating contest. A free meal was served and Pendrift and Harry Sandler provided the entertainment.

Scholarships Available

"The Board of Higher Education scholarships have just been received by the Bursar's Office.

Students who have money coming to them as a result of this scholarship should stop in the Bursar's Office in Whitmore between the hours of 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Student I.D. Card is required."

Expecting?

If you are a student couple expecting a child, the Pioneer Valley Childbirth Education Association offers classes, film showings, discussions and a lending library to help prepare you for the birth of your child.

The Association was begun in 1964 by women who wished to make information and education for childbirth available to friends and neighbors. These women who had experienced birth with joy and satisfaction and they felt it was the right of every woman to give birth with knowledge and in dignity.

Interested couples may attend the seven week Preparation for Childbirth Classes offered in the homes of P.V.C.E.A. instructors: Norma Hallock, R.N.; Rosemary Kofler, R.N.; and Nancy Loder, R.N. Classes consist of: body building exercises, relaxing techniques and breathing patterns (Lamaze) for use during labor and delivery; lectures and discussions on: anatomy and physiology, medication, labor, birth, hospital procedure, feeding techniques, the newborn, basic infant care, contraception, the postpartum and parental adjustment periods.

Classes are informal and provide plenty of time for discussion and group interaction.

Exercise classes for pregnant women are offered in the spring and fall by the Association through the Amherst Continuing Education program.

P.V.C.E.A. welcomes student participation. Tuesday, May 8, a public film showing is scheduled at 8:15 p.m. in rooms C4 and 5 of the Amherst Jr. High School on Chestnut Street. Dr. Jean Anderson, one of the Association's medical advisors will answer questions and comment on the birth film "Lynn and Smitty" and "The Newborn: First Three Months of Life".

Couples wishing more information about classes and those wishing to pre-register may contact Jeanne Schwartz at 253-5178.

Attorney for students

Now That You've Been Busted...

Last week's column described some of the pertinent rules and responses by citizen's who are placed under arrest. Having covered the matter of getting into the pokey, the following information is designed to help get you out of it again.

I suppose there is a paramount consideration about which everyone should be aware. Once an arrest has occurred, try not to panic whether you are the arrested person or a friend. The procedures for extrication move along at their deliberate speed and very little can be done by way of hastening the process. Over the years, most University students have been released reliably and dependably in most circumstances, serious crimes and multiple offenders being the chief exception. There is certainly an exception where police are unwilling to observe the procedural rules. The protection is ultimate vindication in the Courts. Locally, this has not been a problem. Kentucky, as a letter in yesterday's Collegian suggests, may be an exception.

How Are You Released?

The way you are released will vary depending on the nature of the offense, the time of day or night you are charged, and the availability of a court officer. Usually a judge, clerk of court, bail commissioner, or some other official decides how you will be released. He considers the crime you are charged with, your family ties, financial resources, character, length of residence in the community, your previous record of flights to avoid prosecution or failure to appear at court proceedings.

If the charges against you are dropped, you may go free. You do not have to sign any "release papers".

Ordinarily in Massachusetts, you should be released on personal recognizance. Personal recognizance is your promise to appear in court.

You may be released on bail. Bail is money or other property you leave as security that you will appear in court.

How Can You Get Money For Bail?

You may pay your bail fee:

WITH cash.

WITH a bond on your house, car bonds, etc.

WITH money or property put up by a friend or relative

WITH a bail bond.

What Are The Regulations Regarding Bail Bonds?

Bail Bond may be obtained, for a fee, from a professional bail bondsman. You pay the bondsman a fee, and he agrees with the police to pay your bail if you fail to appear.

Bondsmen's fees vary, but legally they cannot charge more than $5 for every $100 of bail with collateral. Collateral is property you give the bondsman which will pay him for the money he loses if you fail to return-or $10 for every $100 of bail if there is no collateral.

If you ask the police, they will give you a list of bondsmen's names to choose from.

BEFORE TRIAL, AFTER ARREST

The usual course of events from the commission of a crime to the conclusion of court handling of the results is something like this:

1. The Crime is Committe;
2. Discovered and Reported by the Victim;
3. Reported or Confirmed by Witnesses;
4. Investigation by Police, interview of witnesses, physical examination of evidence, identification of a Suspect(s).
   a. Complaint signed by Police Officer usually.
5. Suspect is given "rights", and/or arrested; then may be questioned subject to "rights".
6. Bail is set by Bail Commissioner, suspect in jail;
(7. Bail is set in the form of value and my be usually supplied as cash, collateral or bond, see Bail section.)
8. Arraignment is the first court step and involves
   a. Pleading
   1. Guilty - proceed to sentencing (fine and/or jail). Must be 21, court may require/appoint counsel
   2. Nolo Contendere (literally "I do not contest . . .") Court may find guilty and sentence without objection of defendant, but defendant may appeal both finding and sentence; this plea may be rejected by the Court and usually is only for minor matters.
   3. Not Guilty-a date for hearing and trial is set.
   b. Bail may be set, lowered or raised by the judge.
9. Defendant consults a lawyer and prepares for trial.

No person, not even law enforcement official of the Commonwealth, should be in any way attempt to influence the testimony or evidence of any witness. The act of such influencing or attempting to influence is a crime (Ch. 268 Sec. 13B) worth up to 5 years and $5000. In addition, any such attempt to influence has a very bad effect upon the chances of the principal defendants. The best rule is to stay away from and not talk to any principals in pending cases-at least not about the case. This applies to the general public as well as friends of any defendant.

10. Disposition of cases follows a hearing and may, of course, result in prison and/or fine when appropriate, but there are other possibilities:
   a. Not Guilty - it's over entirely
   b. Continue for an extended period of time and dismiss if the crime is not repeated
   c. Placed on file - like continue and dismiss
   d. Dismissed - not quite "Not Guilty" but almost
   e. Nolle Prosqui - the Commonwealth withdraws from prosecuting, not quite "Not Guilty" either. All of these dispositions are not convictions but are dismissals of one form or another. In some cases the Court may be persuaded to "expunge" the record.

Career Day Conducted For Minorities In Science

Saturday, April 28, 1973 the School of Engineering in conjunction with the Black Scientist Society conducted an Engineering Career Opportunity Day, E.C.O. The day was designed to bring high school students, and their parents, into the university and to arouse interest in the hard sciences, specifically engineering.

The program got under way at 9:30 with a coffee and registration hour for students and their parents. As the morning continued, Dean Marcus, School of Engineering, gave a welcoming address to the group. Following the welcome address, Jim Parks of the B.S.S. ran down the events of the day, and he briefly gave what the objective of the day was. This was followed by the introduction of Chancellor Bromery.

Dr. Bromery discussed in depth the history of many programs initiated to help minorities enter into the realm of science. He also expressed the need to go back to the grammar schools to recruit future engineers. Dr. Bromery also aired his "strong" support of Black Colleges in their endeavor to produce more black scientists, engineers, geo-physicists, doctors, etc.

Jim Parks then introduced Stanley McFarland of General Electric Company. Mr. McFarland showed great concern in the growth rate of engineers in the country. He re-emphasized the need to recruite children at a tender age if we are to adequatly increase the number of engineers.

At this point other distinguished guests were introduced. Mr. Vernon Sport of the NAACP, Abner Corby, Ed Norris, Digital Corporation, members of the faculty, School of Engineering, and members of the B.S.S.

The morning was concluded with a panel discussion. Persons of the panel included, Dr. Bromery, Stanley McFarland, Ed Norris, Dean Marcus, and Carol Ingram and Sharon Miller, B.S.S. Members. The discussion involved students and parents, B.S.S. members not on the panel and some of speakers.

After the panel discussion the group proceeded to specific demonstrations.

Laboratory Demonstrations

a. "Automobile for Urban Areas", Prof. Tartaglia, Mr. Poole, and Mr. Voss (G.L. 15)

b. "Computer Graphics", Prof. Ehrich (E.B.E. 224)

c. "Automation and Manufacturing", Prof. Wilson and Prof. Murch (E.L. 103)

d. "Water in Motion", Prof. Colonell (E.B.E. 13)

e. "Communications in the Modern World", Prof. Hill (E.B.E. 215)

f. "Materials Testing", Prof. Ritter and Mr. Jones (G.L. 18)

The day was concluded by the introduction of Dean Picca, School of Engineering. Dean Picca made a few remarks and spoke of the preparatory courses offered at UMass to help familiarize the incoming engineering student with what is expected of him.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Libra persons have an instinct for bargaining. These persons can close a deal when others have walked away in despair. Libra enjoys attending auctions, can bring together those of opposing views and is a natural mediator. The late President Dwight Eisenhower exemplified many qualities of Libra. When it comes to music, design and harmony, Libra natives are apt to be very much in the picture.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Study contracts, agreements, partnership proposals. Friend who advocates certain course may be a bit off base. Know it and act accordingly. Taurus, Libra persons are featured. You are able to get to bottom of mystery. Security could be enhanced.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hold off on short trips, if practical. Directions change and messages could go astray. Be sure you know what you want before embarking on quest. Relatives may have doubts they are not expressing. Ask questions—obtain answers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be prepared for overtime task, assignment. You get more money and the responsibility to go with it. Older person, probably a Capricorn, figures prominently. Keep track of credits, debits. Look out for your own interests.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money situation is activated. Study Gemini message. What was stalled, delayed gets moving in unorthodox fashion. Cycle is such that you can make right play at right time. Finish what you start. Heed words of Aries individual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Highlight originality, independence. Strive to express yourself. Steer clear of one who constantly complains. You have a right to laugh. If close associate claims you are not serious, then so be it. Important to be pleased with your own efforts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some of your friends, associates seem intent on getting involved in Bizarre situations. Be above petty foolishness. Keep eye on ultimate goal. One who can do much for you is now a close, careful observer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Experiment. Strive for greater freedom of movement. Flexibility now could be a key to progress. Sagittarian is likely to play important role. Reach beyond what appears to be a limitation. Read and learn. Then apply knowledge.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lunar aspect points up need to seek information in out of way places. Obtain valid hint from Libra message. Emphasis is in special study, gain through written word. Schedule program of rebuilding.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent is on change, travel, variety, plus intensified relationship with member of opposite sex. You communicate. You feel needs of others. You impress special person with what you want—personal magnetism flows.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money flow can increase due to professional contact. Means business relationship could prove fruitful. But don't expect something for nothing. Fair trade is key. Family member should be kept informed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look beyond the obvious. Someone may be trying to pull proverbial wool over your eyes. Check with Pisces. See in light of actuality. Select quality. Bargain-basement items may not suit your needs. Choose quality.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Behind scenes maneuver may affect your assets. Be aware. Take nothing for granted where money is concerned. Double play could be under way and you will have to be a good fielder. Older person is in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are basically introspective, not easy to please but just as hard on yourself as you can be on others. You draw to you many persons born under Pisces. You make changes this year which involve travel and special relationship. December could be one of your most important months of 1973.

Attackman Freddie Micheis has been injured all season long. Andy Scheffer (10) hasn't. It's been a breath of fresh air for Coach Dick Garber to call on the diminutive scorer for help when needed. Garber will need all the help he can get as his Gorillas, 9-2, on the season meet Brown for the New England title this Wednesday in Providence. WMUA will broadcast the game starting at 2:50.

UMass Crew Favored To Win Dad Vail

By MDC STAFF

It's nice to set goals at the beginning of anything. And for the UMass Crew Club the sky's the limit. This weekend coach Mike Vespoli's men will have their date with destiny as they compete for the coveted Dad Vail trophy.

And so it comes down to this weekend to see if September dreams are actualized for the Crew Club. This weekend, the Small College National Championships will be staged in Philadelphia and of the more than 100 schools participating, Massachusetts is the favorite. Entries are on file from as far off as California and Florida, but it will be the Amherst school that will carry all the notoriety.

"I think we have the statistics and the potential to win this one," said number one oarsman Peter Bert. "If we can get by Coast Guard we should win it." UMass will be sending a Varsity 8, J.V. and Frosh 8, as well as a Varsity and J.V. four. If UMass cops the Dad Vail, a shot at the Intercollegiate Rowing Championships in early June is a possibility. But that's a Dad Vail win and $900 of expenses away.

At the same time UMass is participating in Philly, in the Eastern and Western parts of the country, the major schools participate for sectional titles. It'll be the East and West winner as well as an at large berth (UMass, if they're the Dad Vail winner) for the National Championships in early June.

after suffering a sore shoulder in California and has been used in relief by Bergquist on a few occasions. "With the present pitching rotation doing so well," he said, "Coach wants to keep me for long relief work. If, in the playoffs, we come to a situation where we need another starter, I have told him I feel ready. I don't know if I could go a complete nine, but I'd sure try."

And although Mike Koperniak is still running like Orlando Cepeda, he is gaining more range at second base every day. "I am pleased with the progress Mike is making at this stage of the season," said Bergquist, "and I am sure he is an asset out there in the field."

The squad's season record now stands at 19-6-1 and they have a nine game win streak on the line when they journey to Chestnut Hill on Tuesday to play an improved BC squad.

Netmen Rack

Newcomer Tom Fentin is a freshmen and playing a substitute role at sixth singles and third doubles (two of the "seven from heaven" were sidelined with injuries) came up with a double win. Fentin joined Douglas at third singles and they two-setted their way to UMass' sixt point 7-4, 6-3.

With clouds threatening, and the noise of a nearby highway bothersome to listen to, the netmen sat atop the Holy Cross hill and watched Robert Schpeiser and Philipp perform. Playing first doubles for the first time this year, the polarized pair found themselves down in set number one when Philipp brainstormed an idea: Why not switch rackets! Schpeiser was more than willing to give Philipp's steal racket a whirl and sure enough the strategy worked as UMass' offensively minded duo made it three doubles victories for the visitors.

A.I.C. appears today in the netmen's final home match. Chances are that just two of the starting seven will compete today as A.I.C.'s weaker club allows Coach Kosakowski a chance to use his second stringers.

Knicks Nip Lakers, 87-83

NEW YORK (AP)—Willis Reed scored 22 points and Earl Monroe contributed 21 as the New York Knicks held off the Los Angeles Lakers for an 87-83 victory Sunday and gained a 2-1 lead in their National Basketball Association championship playoff series.

Game No. 4 in the best-of-7 set will be played Tuesday night at Madison Square Garden.

The Knicks, ice-cold in their shooting in their first half, rallied in the second half to overcome the Lakers, who were hampered by the loss of high-scoring Jerry West. The Lakers' leading scorer through the first two games with a 28-point average sat out the entire final period with a pulled groin muscle.

West got only one point in the third quarter.

The Lakers' 83 points was their lowest in their playoff history. Their previous low was 88 against the Boston Celtics in an 89-88 setback on April 29, 1969.

The game's drama unfolded in the closing minutes when the Lakers cut a New York lead of 10 points early in the fourth period to only two, 85-83, on Keith Erickson's layup with 55 seconds remaining.

The Lakers then regained the ball 19 seconds later when Reed was called for a traveling.

Los Angeles called time out, then set up a play in which Erickson took a jumper from the left side. The ball bounded off the back rim and Reed recovered.

Whalers Challenge NHL

BOSTON (AP)—The New England Whalers made a formal challenge for the coveted Stanley Cup Sunday after winning the first World Hockey Association championship.

The challenge to the winner of the National Hockey League's playoff was issued by New England President Howard L. Baldwin after the Whalers defeated the Winnipeg Jets 9-6 to win the WHA championship series, four games to one.

Baldwin suggested that the winner of the current series between the Montreal Canadiens and the Chicago Blackhawks meet the Whalers in a one-game playoff on neutral ice with proceeds going to charity.

"This challenge is meant in no disrespect to either of these two fine teams Montreal and Chicago of the National Hockey League," Baldwin said. "This is a challenge intended only to restore to the people their right to see a true champion decided in this, the world's fastest sport."

Montreal Takes 3-1 Lead

CHICAGO (AP)—Second-period goals by Yvan Cournoyer and Chuck LeFley in a span of 90 seconds powered Montreal to a 4-0 victory over the Chicago Black Hawks Sunday and gave the Canadiens a commanding 3-1 lead in the best-of-7 Stanley Cup finals.

Goalie Ken Dryden, the Vezina Trophy winner, kicked out only 19 Chicago shots to earn his first playoff shutout. The scene now shifts to Montreal where the Canadiens can clinch their 18th Stanley Cup Tuesday night.

The Black Hawks haven't won a playoff game at Montreal in 13 attempts dating back to 1962.

Montreal jumped ahead at 1:08 of the first period when the puck trickled off Mark Tardiff's stick past goalie Tony Esposito, who had been pulled out of position on passes by Cournoyer and Jacques LeMaire.

Although the Canadiens held the edge in play, there was no more scoring until Montreal put on a tremendous flurry in the second period after the Canadiens had skated off a penalty against Guy Lapointe at 11:08.

Sox Sinking

BLOOMINGTON (AP)—Bill Hands scattered ten hits and Bobby Darwin, Larry Hisle and Joe Lis hit home runs as the Minnesota Twins buried the Boston Red Sox 10-3 Sunday under a 14-hit attack.

Hands stiffened after giving up Boston's initial two runs in the first on an error and Reggie Smith's RBI single and received ample support from his teammates enroute to his third American League baseball victory in five decisions.

Boston right-hander Luis Tiant, 3-3, was the loser.

It's Secretariat

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—The backstretch at Churchill Downs was still breathless Sunday morning after Secretariat's clock-shattering victory in the 99th Kentucky Derby.

Women Netters Ace Dean

By AVIS YUNI

The UMass Women's Varsity Tennis team overpowered Dean Junior College 5-0 on Saturday, May 5th, taking each individual match in the first two sets.

In an overall one hour long match, UMass swept all three singles and two double matches. Playing #1 singles, Freshman Ronnie Sanders swamped her opponent 6-0, 6-1.

Sophomore Betty Londergan playing #2 singles flew plast hers 6-1, 6-1.

In her first win of the season, Freshman Ann Foley overpowered her opposition 6-2, 6-1. She "put on a very good display of her talents," said Coach Sally Ogilvie.

In the doubles, Iris Sanekoff and Karen Wesley playing the #1 spot triumphed 7-5, 6-3. Patti Heslam and Muffy Trafton, #2 doubles, smashed their opposition 6-0, 6-1.

"They all played very well," said Coach Ogilvie. "It goes without saying that Dean Junior was not up to the calibre of competition of UMass. They were good but outmatched," she said.

With an overall competitive score of three wins, one loss, the team will receive one of its biggest tests on Wednesday when they meet Mt. Holyoke on the Boyden Courts at 4:00 for six single and three double matches.

RACE TO THE BAG—Ron Beaurivage beats URI batter to first base to make the out in Yankee Conference action here Friday afternoon. UMass went on to win 7-0, and completed the sweep on Saturday, 2-0.

Diamond Nine Sweep Series As Flanagan, Olson Blank URI

By MIKE BROPHY

The URI baseball team has now been shutout by UMass for two consecutive seasons as the Minutemen neared clinching a tie for the Yankee Conference crown by posting victories of 7-0 and 2-0 on Friday and Saturday, respectively. Strong pitching performances from Mike Flanagan and John Olson were the "Keys to our two big wins," said Coach Dick Bergquist after Saturday's contest.

FRIDAY

Flanagan pitched four innings of perfect baseball before brushing a batter in the bottom of the fifth to end his quest for a perfect game. Despite the brushing, however, Flanagan remained the dominant factor as he held Rhody hitless until the eighth frame when shortstop Jerry Lerner's check swing nudged the ball to the first base side of the mound. All three fielders broke for the ball leaving the bag uncovered and Lerner was safe.

UMass jumped off to a quick 1-0 lead in the first as three successive singles by Eddie McMahon, Steve Newell, and Ron Beaurivage off starter George Ellis were enough to bring McMahon home.

The potent UMass attack drilled out eleven base hits throughout the day and forced Ellis off the mound after three full frames. When Ellis left URI was down by 4-0 and UMass had already collected seven base hits including a double by Dan Kelly that scored the fourth tally.

Flanagan was breezing along for most of the afternoon and had recorded six strike outs before hitting Lorenzo Gallo who was erased almost immediately on a 6-4-3 combination double play. When the afternoon was over Flanagan had recorded thirteen strikeouts and walked no one.

The win was the sixth in a row for UMass and the present pitching rotation of White, Flanagan, and Olson seems to be getting the job done as the squad readies itself for possible playoff games. Flanagan now owns an umblemished 8-0 record.

SATURDAY

John Olson took the mound for UMass on Saturday and, although he did not come near the performance of the day before, turned in a fine pitching performance in his own right. Olson allowed only six hits and again, for the second game in a row, UMass pitching did not allow a single walk. Including Craig Allegrezza's relief performance against Springfield, the pitching staff had not walked a single man in 19 innings.

Olson struck out six batters while surrendering only six base hits on the day and said "My arm felt good. I was still strong going through the ninth and I think I could have thrown some more if I had to."

Throughout the first four frames the Minutemen stranded four baserunners and were unable to score on Zabilski until the bottom of the fifth when Mike Koperniak led off with a double to deep center field. Olson followed with a single that moves Koperniak to third and Fielders' Choices by Pete Backstrom and Newell provided the only scoring for UMass on the day.

The injury situation is clearing itself up rather neatly as senior catcher Bill Ryan is fully recovered from his dislocated finger on his throwing hand. "I feel ready to play whenever Coach gives me the nod," he said. Ryan, however, will have his work cut out for him as sophomore John Healy has been holding down the catching duties in fine fashion.

Allegrezza is throwing again

Garahan Grabs Goal Mark As UMass Romps

By HOWIE BLOOM

It got hairy there for awhile. After jumping off to a 5-0 lead in the first period, Garber's Gorillas sat back and watched New Hampshire out-hustle them into a 7-7 early third period deadlock. But in the end, it was UMass' day, as the home team regrouped to defeat the upstart Wildcats, 15-7, on the strength of six fourth period scores.

Three of those final stanza tallies came from the stick of the new UMass all-time single-season goal scoring champion, Frank Garahan. The junior transfer from New Hyde Park, New York scored five times in all during the afternoon to eclipse by one the old record of 40, set in 1969 by former All American Tom Malone.

The goal that tied the record for attackman Garahan was one he isn't likely to forget for a long time. Midfielder Joe DeRiso made it all possible by lugging the ball the length of the field after a flurry of action in front of the Gorillas' net, and passing it over to Garahan, standing (for the moment) about five feet in front of New Hampshire goalie Tim Troiano. The then record-holder-to-be took the ball with his back to the visitor's net, and as he made his move to turn around, he stumbled, giving the whole scene the look of a busted play. But Garahan has a neat way of fixing things, and he demonstrated his talent when he fired a shot over his shoulder just as he assumed a sitting position. That was number 40.

The record breaker came with about two minutes to go in the game as the culmination of a new play Coach Garber had installed to speed realization of the special occasion. It was called, "Give It To Garahan." Theatrics-wise, number 41 didn't touch the score that tied the record, but Garahan wasn't out to get an Oscar, anyway.

It was the best percentage shot, a bouncer, that put the attackman in the record books. Cradling the ball to the right of the crease, 20 feet away from the net, Garahan dodged one harried Wildcat, moved in to within 15 feet of the goal, bounced it by Troiano, making him to Garahan what Tracy Stallard was to Roger Maris. A wild celebration ensued.

The game was really a prep for the Gorillas' all-the-marbles match against Brown at Providence on Wednesday. The Bruins are currently ranked tops in New England, just ahead of UMass, and in the top ten nationally. The Gorillas have to beat Brown to have any hope of being invited to participate in the NCAA post-season lacrosse tourney, and so, for the middle two periods at least, the minds of the UMass stickers were in Providence, not at the upper Boyden field.

Luckily, though, the Gorillas came up with two solid periods of lacrosse, and it turned out to be all they needed to win their ninth game of the season against only two losses. On to Providence!

UMass Tracksters Outdistance UNH, Vermont In Tri-Meet

By WALT POWERS

He's been saying it all along "overall, this has to be one of the strongest teams, depthwise, I've ever coached". Saturday afternoon Ken O'Brien gave nearly half his track team the day off, and the result was a 114-55-26 humiliation of U.N.H. and Vermont.

Granted, New Hampshire and Vermont are probably weakest teams on the UMass schedule. Both have less organized and less funded programs than UMass does (Our budget pays for our uniforms and that's about it.", complained one UNH runner), but it was the pressure performances of the underclassmen, aided by the versatality of such veterans as Steve Levine, and Dennis Boisvert, that won the meet. Boisvert, in particular was outstanding, overcoming the pain of an injured back to set UMass and UNH track records in the discus, and then winning the shot put in his first try of the year.

The UNH Wildcats got off to a roaring start on the cold, dreary afternoon by taking first, second, and fourth in the hammer throw. They then took second, third, and fourth in the high jump.

Any dreams of a UNH upset bit the dust with the UNH baton on the first leg of the 440 relay, though it was the second time in two weeks that they've dropped it, and from then on the Minutemen were unstoppable, winning fourteen of the last sixteen events. Nearly the entire team took part in this romp, but standing out were people like Co-captain Steve Levine (First in the 440, two winning relay legs, third in the 220), freshman Larry Whitfield (First in the 100, a leg on the victorious mile relay team, third in the 100) and Bob Bocash (lifetime bests in the discus, hammer, and shot put).

For O'Brien's trackmen, the meet couldn't have come at a better time, "It gave me a chance to rest a number of runners with minor, but

Netmen Win 8th Beat Cross 7-2

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

WORCESTER - Holy Cross' tennis team glanced skyward, Praying for inclement weather (and in search of some heavenly inspiration) the only reign the Crusaders encountered was that of the UMass netmen. Outclassing their hosts, the Minutemen captured a 7-2 win that dropped the Cross to a 3-6 seasonal record.

The Minutemen's eighth win (against one loss) featured a sweep in doubles play, four two set victories by UMass (something rather unusual as of late), a stunning loss that no one on the team really believes, a double win for a newcomer, plus a racket switch in time, that saved number one doubles.

Up 4-2 after singles play, UMass' "clinchers", Steve Ferber and Fred Braley, wrapped up dual meet number nine at second doubles, winning easily 6-4, 6-1. It was the third straight time that Ferber and Braley had earned UMass the deciding point.

In producing the four singles points, the Minutemen were led by Captain Steve Ferber at second singles (6-2, 7-6), followed by Don Douglas at third (6-2, 6-2) Mike Philipp at four (7-6, 6-2) and Tom Fentin at six (7-5, 6-2).

The loss that left everyone dumbfounded was that of Braley's who dropped his singles confrontation at number five. In fact to this moment none of his teammates think he was telling the truth in reporting the defeat.

Woman's Crew "Hangs On"

By MDC STAFF

Barbara O'Reilly held on to the side of the boat and the UMass women's crew raced to their first victory of the season Saturday, outpacing Trinity College and Middleton High School at Middletown, Conn.

UMass jumped out to large lead early in the race moving smoothly in the finest downstream pace and looked as though they would glide to a very easy finish. But then Ms. O'Reilly got crabbed.

She fell out of sequence with the stroke of other rowers and got flipped into the water, with half her body in the boat and half in the river. Meanwhile, Trinity and Middletown moved ahead of UMass as the women had to stop and regroup.

Behind the leadership of coxswain Wendy Boothroyd, the crew pulled together, got O Reilly back in the boat and raced ahead of the pack to win by 0.2 seconds.

UMass finished the course in 3.17; Middletown, 3.17:2, and Trinity, 3.19:2.

The crew club finished their first season with one first place, one second and one third in their three races this year. The members were: Mimmie Brown, Missy Mayer (co-capt.), Sue Locks, Debbie Kirchmer, Barbara Andreas, Mary Ellen Dash, Barbara O'Reilly, Mary Ann Fernandez, (co-capt.), and coxswain Wendy Boothroyd. Kurt Betchick, a former UMass rower, was the coach.

Ice Cream Ladies Popping Up On Campus

One thin dime is all it takes to purchase a fudgesicle or a popsicle from the traveling icecream carts, which you've probably seen around campus.

By STEVE FERBER

A glance at your watch tells you you're minutes late for lecture. A dryness in your throat tells you you're desperately in need of some ice cream. But the Hatch is too far away. Suddenly your problems vanish as the ice cream girl appears.

Anxiously awaiting those final minutes of class, you arrive at your favorite resting spot, the campus pond. Your thirst needs quenching, your hunger seeks satisfaction. Heading towards you are the cider and popcorn girls. Poof, your wants are realized.

Yes, vendor operations are springing up all over campus. These ventures are still in the experimental stages, but with the advent of warm weather, the prospects for success are good.

As the steady stream of people approached the ice cream cart stationed across from Bartlett Hall, Joyce Adams, one of four girls "womaning" the truck, spoke of products. Like some ice cream? We've got fudgesickes, popsicles, ice cream bars, sandwiches, drum sticks, creamsicles. We've even got some sundaes."

As she adeptly handled her customers, with a money changer attached to her belt a la the Good Humor Man, Ms. Adams told of her newly acquired job. "I responded to an ad in the Collegian that wanted anyone in search of a warm weather job. I like being outside, and I enjoy the conversations."

The warm weather is the key to business, because as the thermometer climbs, so do the sales. (Sales range from four to seven dollars an hour). Thus far Dan Cololough, a worker in the cash operations office at Hampden, has been moderately successful in the one-week-old venture. But the relatively poor weather has hurt.

Passersby inquire as to how business is going. Others offer suggestions on where to find the most people. The girls seem to have stationed themselves at the obvious spots, across from Bartlett, in front of the Student Union, and outside of the tunnel in Southwest. Only the weight of the truck prevents exploration of non-level sites like the tennis courts or Orchard Hill.

Knowing when classes break is an art, as the girls offer their wares in flavors, such as orange, root beer, lemon-lime, banana, cherry, raspberry and blue raspberry. Price-wise, only the sandwiches try your pocket book. Fudgesicles, popsicles and creamsicles are only a dime, while sundaes are 15¢. The money making ice cream sandwich sells for 20¢.

Last Saturday night, Debbie Pines and Helen Jakubowicz began their project to raise money by selling cider and popcorn, the former for 20¢ a cup, the latter for 10¢ a bag.

Former bake sale workers, the girls temporarily abandoned the cake operation due to the amount of preparation demanded. Now they pop their own popcorn (they've bought a 10 lb. bag) and buy cider for $1.35 a jug. In reselling it by the cup, the girls plan to make approximately $3 per jug.

In their cardboard box, they carry their cider and popcorn from dormitories to the campus pond, from the Student Union into Amherst Center. Unlike the ice cream lady, they approach the students, beckoning "Would you like some popcorn or cider."

Debbie and Helen don't think they'll have it easy. When asked where the ice cream girl was, Helen remarked, "You mean, where's the competition?"

Athletic Council Votes To Accept Budget

By STEVE CROWE

The Athletic Council voted unanimously yesterday to approve a $542,500 athletic trust fund budget for the 1973-74 fiscal year. The budget, presented by the Athletic Director Frank McInerney, showed an increase of $29,800 over the 1972-1973 budget.

McInerney anticipated an additional $26,800 of income from Athletic fees from the projected increase in enrollment at the University. Because of costs involving the upgrading of the women's programs, a football scheduling problem, and inflation expenditures are projected to exceed the revenue by $3,000.

By far, the largest increase was in the football program where an additional $18,200 will be spent next year. The major factor for this was due to the scheduling problem with Holy Cross. The game had to be switched from its normal date in ovember to Saturday, September 8, explained McInerney in his budget. This change will move the reporting time for pre-season football practice from August 27th to August 18th. Therefore, there will be nine more days of pre-season camp, causing the increases in pre-season lodging and meal costs.

Another major increase was in the upgrading of the Women's Athletic Program. McInerney's philosophy of "equality across the board" provided for the increase of $6,800, $1,100 of which went to the new Volleyball program and $2,300, 79% increase to the basekthall program, from $2,900 in 1972-73 to $5,200 next year.

An increase of $7,200 for Sports Promotion was the second largest rise. The renting of billboards during the football season, a sales research project, a revitalization of the Minutemen radio network, and an "intensive study" currently underway of the Sports Information Office operations are responsible for this increase, McInerney explained in an MDC interview May 2.

Some departments were not so fortunate as the Football, Women's Athletics, and Sports Promotion, however. There was a decrease of $12,500 in the "Travel Budget." "It is no longer financially possible to lease station wagons on a long term basis for recruiting, scouting, and small team transportation," wrote McInerney in his budget. These expenditures would now be included in each department's budget separately, he said.

A $1,600 decrease in the gymnastics budget and $300 in Cross Country were due to the teams' alternating schedules with opposing teams; the gymnastics team, for instance, flew to Penn State last year and next year, Penn State will come to UMass, Assistant Athletic Director Robert O'Connell explained.

A Contingency Fund of $18,800, a slight increase of $200 over last year's budget, was provided to serve as an emergency fund for fire, theft, and other damages, a source of athletic awards; and for post-season tournament expenses, O'Connell said.

In other action, the council voted unanimously to recommend to the Director of Athletics to vote for the repeal of the "2.0 amendment" at the next meeting of the NCAA. The clause, as it presently stands, uses the high school achievement of a recruit as a basis for athletic eligibility. In some borderline cases, however, where it is not known for sure whether or not the athlete will receive a 2.0, the coach must wait until he graduates to see if he is eligible.

Bernard Bussel gave a report on the basketball ticket policy for next year. There will be one less home game next season and the price for a season ticket will be $21.00, as opposed to the $22.50 charged last year.

Finally, McInerney gave a report on the progress of the hockey facility meetings with Endevor Inc., a private firm from Cambridge, Mass. McInerney said he was "mildly optimistic that here will be ice here within ten months." Some discussion arose on the possibility that the firm would raise the rate of ice time, once UMass moved out of Orr Rink at Amherst College.

An Era Ends At Melville

By HOWIE BLOOM

Tevya, the poor old farmer in The Fiddler on the Roof, sang its praises. Fraternities, freshman beanie manufacturers, and organizers of freshman convocations bemoan the lack of it. Flo Polanski and Karen Walsh, who run the Thursday night coffee houses at the Top of the Campus (among other things), can't do anything about it.

Tradition. There's even some at UMass. A tradition died last Sunday morning in Southwest when at 2:30 A.M. the last performer sang the last note of the last song to be sung at the Last Melville Coffee House. Flo and Karen, who originated the coffee house idea when they were freshmen four years ago, are graduating.

The first Melville coffee house was so long ago, neither Karen nor Flo can remember exactly when it was held, but they do remember that it taught them a lesson.

"We didn't have any microphones or P.A. system or anything for that first coffee house", Karen reminisced. "You need one, really, because people in the audience want to talk, and if they talk, and the singer has a soft voice, you won't be able to hear him," she continued.

"Ed Vadas, one of our good friends who has played at every Melville coffee house, told us that if we wanted to run good shows, we had to treat the performers well. The first step, at least, was to get a P.A. system," added Flo.

And so, with the help of friends in the Campus Center and campus radio station WMUA, the performers at all subsequent coffee houses have enjoyed the benefits of a very adequate public address system.

Flo and Karen have staged an average of twelve Melville coffee houses a year since they first graced the dorm's corridors in the Fall of 1969. The story of how the two got together is a classic. Flo remembers.

"Karen lived two floors below me. I knew her roommate, and one day I was in the room talking with her, I heard what I thought was a record playing. I asked my friend what record she had on, and that's when I found out it was Karen singing." They became good friends through their common interest in good music, and began to room together starting with their sophomore year.

The two music lovers began to get interested in the coffee house business by attending the now defunct Hello Friends Folk Society in Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest. For awhile, Hellow Friends was the only place in the Connecticut Valley where guitarists and singers had an opportunity to perform before live audiences. When it disbanded in 1970, Flo and Karen decided to form the Melville Coffeehouse. Most of the friends the two had made at Hello Friends made the move over to Melville along with thm. Those who have lasted through the four years include Chuck Hallberg, Charlie Ortolani, Kathy Morrissey, Frank Clark, and most of all, Ed Vadas. He was part of the wildest scene the Melville Coffeehouse saw during its four-year life. Karen related the story.

"It happened at the December 4, 1971 coffeehouse. Ed and his new band were scheduled to play at Melville. There were four other coffeehouses on campus that night, so we were afraid there wasn't going to be anybody at Melville. So, we decided to advertise on WMUA.

"I've never seen a mob like the crowd that was there that night. There were people in the lobby and the hallways and ten people at each window. There were people standing on furniture and on other people's shoulders. What a mob!"

There was such a mob that when volunteers started passing furniture out the back door to be brought around to the front of Melville in an attempt to make room for more people, some of the helpers took the liberty of passing the furniture into their cars and away from Melville forever.

"The next week we had one of only three coffeehouses that we charged admission to get into. They money we raised helped pay for new furniture," explained Karen.

The Last Melville Coffeehouse was a nostalgia lover's dream. All the old gang-Ed, Chuck, Kathy, Frank-were there, playing the songs they did when the foundation for the tradition was just being layed. Vadas played "Buffalo Gals" and Chuck sang "Carry On Karen's Song", both written three years ago, and Karen cried. Flo never made it to the Last Melville Coffeehouse. Six and a half hours of teams would have been too much for her, she decided.

Flo and Karen think that there might be a few coffeehouses next year, if they can get someone to promise to run them before they graduate. But with Chuck, Charlie, and Kathy leaving for sure, and Frank's and Ed's status for next year uncertain, whatever comes along to take the place of the Melville Coffeehouse, ala Flo and Karen, just won't be the same. A tradition has died.

New Journalism Program Sparks Controversy

(Editor's Note: The following excerpted article appeared in the current Smith College newspaper: They discuss the UMass controversy over liberal arts major versus a journalism major. Journalistic Studies is a separate major, with its faculty attached to the Department of English. Professors Emmart, Musgrave, and Ziff will comment on this controversy in Wednesday's Collegian.)

The attempt to institute a new department of journalism at UMass has sparked an intense controversy among some faculty members there regarding the value of a liberal arts education.

Dr. Barney Emmart, former chairman of the Department of Journalistic Studies, has been refused tenure. He has made a formal complaint against those responsible for the decision.

Emmart has been replaced by Professor Howard Ziff, hired with tenure, who plans to redefine the social science major in Journalistic Studies. The new major will offer vocationally specialized writing courses as well as humanistically oriented courses. Thus "Journalistic Studies", which is concerned with research, will be converted into "Journalism".

Emmart, who has a B.A. from Harvard and a PhD. from the University of London, worked in Communications Research for the International Press Institute before coming to UMass seven years ago. His tenure decision came up last year.

Ziff, formerly a professional newspaper man with the Chicago Daily News, was invited by the UMass English Department in 1971 to run the co-curricular Journalism Program at UMass. He was hired with tenure at the time, although he does not have a graduate degree in English or in Journalistic Studies. This year Ziff replaced Emmart as Chairman of the Department of Journalistic Studies.

Professor Ziff hopes to create a Department of Journalism similar to those at midwestern universities. This would enable a student to take a curriculum of 75% liberal arts courses and 25% journalism courses. Courses such as "The History of Journalism" and "Journalism and Government" would be included, as well as technical courses in writing and reporting methods. It is the technical courses and the plan for a professional or vocational major which are causing the conflict.

The University has had a department of Journalistic Studies formally chaired by Dr. Barney Emmart. It is concerned with journalism research, a relatively new social science. No separate major is offered in this field; students combine it with another major such as Sociology, English, or Government and graduate with a double major.

The non-credit program of journalism is for majors in a variety of departments, mainly English. Students in it write for the University's newspaper or for professional newspapers, and are individually tutored in writing by a professional editor. Placement services are also provided.

In Professor Ziff's opinion, journalism courses are a necessity, because "it is absolutely essential, if you engage in a career, that you understand how others feel about it. It is vital that you understand how your career stands in the wider social context."

Arthur Musgrave, professor of Journalism Studies, opposes Ziff's plan.

Globe Offices Held Up

BOSTON (AP) - Instead of the reporter having to go out to cover the story, this crime came to the newspaper Monday afternoon-a robbery at the Boston Globe.

A spokesman said a lone gunman entered the front door of the Globe plant, went up the escalator to the second floor cashier's window took $10,870 at gunpoint and fled down the stairs and out the door.

"The man just said, give me the money," said the cashier, Robert Cassidy, of Charlestown, who said the man was armed with a snub-nosed revolver.

Legal Studies Program Established

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

A Legal Studies Program, offering a major in legal studies, was approved last week by the Board of Trustees. Six faculty members were named to be the core of the program and an inter-displinary curriculum committee, including representation from other law related departments will be formulated in the next two weeks.

The establishment of such a program follows almost two years of study and discussion about the best way to respond to the growing student demand for a liberal arts program dealing with the study of law at the undergraduate level. Two committees, the Quinn Report in May, 1972 and the Summer Planning Committee on the Establishment of a Law Center at UMass in August, 1972, had recommended the establishment of such a major which would lead to a Bachelor's Degree.

The Quinn Report had developed the idea of a law center and this could be a step in its development, if the state legislature appropriates enough money. Otherwise, the program as it will stand will provide courses to provide an understanding of the law, as well as providing an outlet for those interested in pursuing an interest in law, but not necessarily be an introduction for law school.

This places the UMass program in the forefront of the field of undergraduate law study. Other schools are in the process of creating such a major, but it is believed that this is the first time that a department for undergraduate legal studies has been formed in the United States.

Peter d'Errico, the new Director of Legal Studies, said yesterday in an MDC interview, "What we are trying to do is to develop a program that will help people to understand what law is, as a phenomenon of society. Specifically, we are offering an understanding of how the legal system operates and of the actors, involved. Beyond that we will grapple with the notion of decision making and the power structures in any kind of group context."

Others named to the staff were: Stephen Arons, John Bonsignore, Samuel Goldman, Ethan Katsh, Ronald Pipkin and Carol Potter. All the professors on the staff have law degrees and have taught courses in law.

Courses to be offered under the legal studies designation are:

Legal Studies 201--An Introduction to Law (staff)

L.S. 262 -- Corporation in Modern Society (Goldman)

L.S. 264 -- Urban Law (Pipkin)

L.S. 386 -- Legislative Research (Katsh)

L.S. 391 (1) -- Law and Contemporary Social Problems (Arons)

L.S. 391 (2) -- Woman and the Law (Potter)

L.S. 391 (3) -- Law, Money and Power (Goldman)

Also possible is independent study or field work. For further information, contact Peter d'Errico at 201 A SBA or call 545-0053.

Exact requirements for the major still have not been definitely decided. Most of that will be decided by the inter-displinary committee when it is formed, but so far it is expected that the course of study will include between 24 and 30 hours worth of credit in law. This will include the legal studies courses as well as courses in other departments, such as sociology or economics dealing with law. The exact definition of what courses will be considered part of the major will be determined by the university-wide committee.

C.C. Fee Could Go Down, If . . .

(This is the first of a two-part series on the operations of the Campus Center, and on a recently released report on the center made by the Arthur D. Little Co. The second part of the series, by MDC reporter Sharon Hughes, will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.)

By SHARON HUGHES

A recently completed report on the operations of the Campus Center says the Campus Center fee now paid by student could be reduced by July, 1975 if changes suggested by the report are implemented by a "committed" management.

According to Walter S. Jonas, the chairperson of the Finance Committee of the Campus Center Student Union Board of Governors, the fee could "theoretically" be reduced from its present $62.50 to $35 by July of 1975 (the start of fiscal year 1976) through the changes.

These changes, according to a report prepared by the Arthur D. Little Co. (ADL) of Cambridge, Mass., would allow the Campus Center to generate enough revenue to cover its maintenance and administration costs (students contributed $450,000 this year) by that time. Then the C.C. fee would only have to pay the debt service (interest on the money used to build the center)for this year, $600,000.)

Changes suggested by the A.D.L. report include less of a reliance on outside "jobbers" selling goods to the Campus Center store, a moving of all text and trade books out of the store and textbook annex into one location, and an extending of the Campus Center store's hours.

It also suggested the Campus Center hotel should rely on more part time help and offer special weekend packages to students to increase hotel revenues.

(Suggestions made by the study about the Division of Continuing Education, whose offices are currently located in the Campus Center, and the Campus Center food services will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.)

New Financing

However, the building is scheduled to change its form of financing, from short term notes to longer term financing in fiscal year 1975, which means the building will begin repaying the principal (money used to build the center) as well as the continuing interest payment.

This year's $62.50 fee, already one of the highest in the country, could approach $90 per year when the refinancing occurs unless the center generates additional surplus income, the report says.

Contracted by the Board of Governor's last December, for a $35,000 fee, the consultant firm had three objectives:

—to assess present revenue producing operations

—examine the feasibility of new operations

—project the CC financial future

Store Suggestions

Major Suggestions for the University Store:

—management should rely less on "jobbers" to sell them merchandise. "Jobbers traditionally sell a store as much merchandise as they can convince them to take—at high prices and unpopular sizes" A.D.L. said this is probably the reason that the university store has a low inventory turnover.

A jobber is a salesman who sells at wholesale (cost) to retailers.

—move all text and trade books out of the store and the Textbook Annex into one location such as Goodell Library or the Student Union.

—a more detailed accounting system indicating the contribution to revenue made by each product line. "The manager is 'generally aware' of the cost information but not "anywhere the detail needed," the report said.

—a conversion from manual bookkeeping (4 full time employees enter the records they keep by hand) to mechanize.

Mechanization includes conversion to a magnetic tape cash register or the use of an outside data processing service.

—sales and conference information should be supplied in a more "timely" fashion

—A price increase in supplies (currently 20% discount from list)

Supplies include such items as notebooks, envelopes, erasers, binders, and the like.

—extend the store's hours in the evening and on Saturday afternoons

"Their procedures in most places are good, but their facts and figures in some places are "way off," said University Store Manager Winthrop E. Cummings of the report. Cummings, employed by the university since 1959 has a B.S. in Geology.

To the elimination of jobbers he replied, Only one department in the store utilized "true" jobber services and it has the fastest turning inventory. (In other words the department sells the wares it has ordered faster than any other department) in the store.

"Tell them (A.D.L.) to put that in their pipe and smoke it," said Cummings. The type of jobber that Cummings refers to as "true" computes the order, delivers the product and stacks the shelves. He said that jobbers were a "real blessing" to him because without their service he would have to buy directly from the manufacturer.

"We'd have to buy at tremendously large quantities to get a price at all reasonable." He also said that jobbers "saved us a lot of money in excess inventory because it's to their advantage to keep their turnover figure high."

However A.D.L. calculates that the store should have an inventory turnover figure of 4.9 vs. its actual 2.9 figure. They also calculate that the store should have contributed about $284,000 to the income of the Center in fiscal year '72 (last year). The actual contribution was $97,000 or a third of what might have been achieved, according to A.D.L.

Cummings defended the store's loss saying it did "darn good" compared to others, and said the Harvard Coop almost went broke that year. They called fiscal year '72 a "bad year" because of President Nixon's wage-prize freeze, and payroll increases for non-permanent employes.

A.D.L. computed the contribution of different store items per square foot of retail space they occupy to the revenue they produce. It estimates that trade books contribute about $15 per sq. ft., supplies about $88, jewelry about $80, and tobacco and candy about $76.

"Thus, trade books are almost one-sixth as profitable as supplies, yet they occupy approximately half the space in the store," reports A.D.L.

Manager of the Textbook Annex Anthony Pezza said that he also disagreed with moving all the trade books and approved of moving reference books "only under the condition we get a new place, like Goodell."

Cummings agrees that more detailed information about the cost and sales of merchandise was necessary and the first step toward getting that information (breaking merchandise lines into departments) had already been started. As an example, Cummings cited the text and trade book departments. A year ago they were combined but are now separate departments with separate managers.

He also agreed that prices on supplies would increase next year and he "might try" extending the store's operating hours.

Hotel

The report also made the following suggestiong on the operation of the Campus Center hotel:

—the hotel should rely more on part-time help such as students (especially as chambermaids) than on permanent help, as it now does.

—it should reduce laundry and linen costs in the budget

—special weekend packages at low prices should be offered to students as a means to increase hotel revenue

The report says the hotel, with 116 rooms, has enough staff for a hotel with 165 rooms.

Donald E. Witkowski, hotel manager said he has already instituted some of A.D.L.'s tentative recommendations but he is "skeptical about others".

"I'm not the type of person to say to a permanent employee you're through, sorry," he said. Although the hotel does not rely on the proper mix of part-time to full-time employees, he said, the only way to balance the mixture is through "normal attrition."

Although 60% of his staff are students, they receive only $55,000 of the personnel budget compared to the 40% of the permanent staff receiving $66,000.

A.D.L. recommends a "pool of part-time maids" to lower payroll costs ($1.75 per hr. for part-time maids vs. $2.75 per hr. plus benefits for permanent employes.) Witkowski said that A.D.L. was suggesting he hire "cheap labor".

The study predicts payroll savings of about $40,000 are possible with the conversion from full to part time staff and "appropriate" (less) staffing in linen personnel, reservation and room desk clerks.

Laundry costs are no longer a problem, according to Witkowski, because the hotel now charges a labor and room maintenance fee to service employees' uniforms.

As far as offering a weekend package deal for students, he is "skeptical", "I don't know where our market will come from because the student already gets a $9.75 discount price," he said.

"That the CC is a student building is probably paramount in my mind when I make financial decisions," he said.

ADL Report A Long Time Coming

The A.D.L. study is not something one comes by easily. Scheduled to be released publicly a month ago, the release date was successively delayed until last Friday. The Collegian was permitted to borrow one of the two final draft copies.

The study reports on operations, not management, but management will be responsible for implementing the study's suggestions. According to chairperson of the CC Governing Board, James A. Lindsey, "There has been a great deal of mismanagement in the Campus Center at times."

It Started As A Dream

The Student Union was built around 1957 and operated under the Dean of Student office, financed by $25 to $30 fees. In the mid 60's the Campus Center was planned to fulfill a desire to place a continuing education/-conference center on the campus and a need to expand Student Union facilities.

The CC was originally to be funded from a combination of student fees and state monies. In 1967, the University of Massachusetts Building Authority (UMBA) decided that the project could not have multiple financing (financing from two categories of state monies).

They decided that the CC would be financed from a trust fund account operating separately from State financing. Monies not generated by the building income would come from a Student Union/Campus Center fee estimated at $105.

Fiscal year '71 was an unsuccessful one from an income standpoint (most operations lost money), but this was generally attributed to the cost of opening the center. Fiscal '72 was also unsuccessful as revenues at the end of the year were down 60% from what was budgeted.

The Board of Governors, responsible for setting policy in the CC, and Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services, Thomas B. Campion contracted the Arthur D. Little Inc. consultant firm to investigate income areas in the center last December.

Hunt Forged 'Diem Cables' To Implicate Kennedy

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)— White House adviser John E. Erlichman authorized "covert activity" in a probe of Daniel Elsberg, according to Pentagon papers trial disclosure Monday.

It also was revealed that State Department cables were forged to link President John F. Kennedy to the assassination of South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem.

The disclosures were in testimony given before a grand jury in Washington D.C., by former White House aide Egil Krogh and Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt and released by the papers trial judge.

Krogh said is the grand jury testimony that he met with President Nixon, who instructed him to investigate information leaks.

Krogh did not implicate Nixon in a burglary of the office of a psychiatrist of Ellsberg, but said Ehrlichman knew of the burglary.

The report of forged cablegrams was made by Hunt, who said he doctored them at the order of former White House counsel Charles W. Colson.

Hunt said he forged two State Department cables on Colson's orders to make it appear that Kennedy had ordered Diem's assassination.

The judge also released an affidavit by Krogh saying former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover was aware of a White House investigation of Ellsberg and approved it because of Hoover's close friendship with Ellsberg's father-in-law.

In his testimony, Hunt said the plot to link Kennedy to the Diem assassination was hatched as a result of his own analysis of the Pentagon papers and State Department files as a member of the White House undercover unit.

Hunt said Colson wanted to hide direct evidence of White House involvement, calling the plan "too hot."

Hunt said he reported to Colson that there were many gaps in the series of State Department cables concerning the Diem involvements in 1963.

"Mr. Colson said, 'Well, what kind of material have you dug up on the files that would indicate Kennedy complicity?'" Hunt said.

"I showed him three or four cables that indicated that they had pretty close to pulled the trigger against Premier Diem's head," said Hunt. "But it didn't say so in so many words. Inferentially, one would say it was a high degree of administration complicity in the central assassination of Diem and his brother."

Hunt then said, "Mr. Colson said, 'Well, that isn't enough. Do you think you can improve on them?' I said yes, I probably could, but not without technical assistance. He said, 'Well I won't be able to give you any technical help. This is too hot. See what you can do on your own.'

"So with meager means at my disposal," Hunt said, ". . . I set about creating cables."

Post Watergate Coverage Reaps Pulitzer Prize

Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The Washington Post won the 1973 Pulitzer Prize for meritorious public service for its coverage of the Watergate scandal. The newspaper's columnist, David S. Broder, also won a separate award for commentary.

The prize for national affairs reporting went to Robert Boyd and Clark Hoyt of the Knight Newspapers, whose disclosure of the psychiatric background of Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., led to his withdrawal as the Democratic vice presidential candidate.

Associated Press photographer Nick Ut, a 22-year-old Vietnamese, won the spot news photography award for his poignant picture of a 9-year-old Vietnamese girl running naked and screaming from a napalm bombing.

It was the 11th time an AP photograph won a Pulitzer and the fourth time in the last five years.

In the arts, the trustees of Columbia University named Jason Miller's "That Championship Season" as the best drama of the year. His first Broadway play concerns the reunion of a high school basketball team with their coach.

Eudort Welty won the fiction award for "The Optimist's Daughter," while the nonfiction prize was shared by Frances Fitzgerald for her "Fire in the Lake: The Vietnamese and the Americans in Vietnam," and Robert Coles for his Volumes II and III of "Children of Crisis."

The annual awards were established by the late St. Louis and New York publisher, Joseph Pulitzer, who died in 1911. Winners are chosen by the Columbia trustees on recommendation of a board composed of distinguished American newspapermen and the president of the university.

Watergate Prosecutor To Be Appointed

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Elliot L. Richardson pledged Monday to appoint a special outside prosecutor to investigate the Watergate scandal, if confirmed as attorney general, and said he will seek Senate approval of his choice.

The White House, acting on President Nixon's behalf and using language he appeoved, issued a sweeping denial that Nixon was involved in any way in the Watergate affair or its cover-up. "Any suggestion that the President was aware of the Watergate operation is untrue," deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said in Key Biscayne, Fla., as the President wound up a long weekend there. "Any suggestion that the President participated in any cover-up activities is untrue."

Richardson called a news conference to announce he will heed growing demands for an independent prosecutor once he is confirmed as attorney general. He said he will seek approval for the prosecutor from the Senate Judiciary Committee and the full Senate-although such confirmation is not required.

Warren said Nixon had not talked with Richardson about such a special prosecutor nor had the names of any potential condidates been relayed to the President. Richardson said he has not yet found the right person for the probe.

His announcement met with approval in the Senate, which voted last week to urge such an appointment.

He made no estimate of when he will be ready to name the prosecutor, but said he will be given "all the independence, authority and staff support needed to carry out tasks entrusted to him."

The prosecutor, Richardson said, will report only to him as attorney general-implying President Nixon will have no direct hand in the investigation.

In another development, a deputy to former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell appeared before the grand jury to testify about a conversation with Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy after the June 17 break-in.

Robert C. Mardian had claimed lawyer-client privilege for the conversation but was ordered to testify by a federal judge. His lawyer, David Bress, said Mardian "complied" with the court's order.

Bress said Mardian answered all question and he also told newsmen that he know "of no basis by which he Mardian would be indicted" by the Watergate grand jury.

Mardian followed Mitchell from the Justice Department to President Nixon's re-election committee. He had been assigned by campaign director Mitchell to investigate the Watergate affair.

The White House consistently has refused in recent weeks to comment on individual news reports on Watergate. But it broke its silence in the wake of newsmagazine stories that Nixon personally congratulated ousted White House Counsel John W. Dean III last September for concealing administration connections to Watergate.

Time and Newsweek said Dean is prepared to give such testimony.

Dean reportedly is trying to get immunity from prosecution in return for his testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Watergate, which is scheduled to begin hearins about May 15.

The first such immunity was granted last week by Chief U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica for E. Howard Hunt, one of the seven convicted conspirators in the burglary and bugging of Democratic Party headquarters last June 17. The immunity grant was revealed Monday.

It was the second time that Hunt, who pleaded guilty to the charges, was given so-called "use immunity. He and the six other conspirators in the case received similar grants for their testimony before a federal grand jury.

AGREEMENT SIGNED—Government negotiator Richard Hellstern, second from left, announced Sunday that an agreement has been signed between militant AIM Indians and government officials to end the two-month old occupation of Wounded Knee by AIM. New Wounded Knee Treaty Similar To Last Months

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)—The new agreement to end the siege of Wounded Knee is generally along the lines of one signed more than a month ago, but it falls short of what the Indians had asked when they took over the village Feb. 27.

The latest pact deals mainly with disarming the insurgents, dismantling federal positions and establishing a temporary peacekeeping force on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Chief U.S. Marshal Wayne Colburn said the disarmament agreement was necessary because the April 5 truce was "too vague" in that respect.

The original American Indian Movement demands included:

—The Oglala Sioux Tribal constitution be dissolved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs—BIA —and tribal government be administered by the BIA until a new constitution is written.

—Tribal President Richard Wilson be ousted and new elections held.

—The occupation force, except for the leaders, be given amnesty and that the leaders be charged only by grand jury indictment.

—All Indian lands be returned to individual owners and all Indian lands leased to non-Indians be on lease terms of no longer than two years, instead of the present five-year terms.

—The Indian nations in the United States be given sovereignty.

The agreement signed Sunday implements most of the April 5 agreement, with a few exceptions, plus the specifics for disarmament. It provides:

—At 9 a.m. EDT Tuesday the government will remove all its armored personnel carriers from the Wounded Knee and the insurgents will evacuate all bunkers, roadblocks and fortifications and assemble at the teepee chapel.

—All persons and weapons at the chapel will be checked against a list turned in to the government Sunday and processing will begin by the Justice Department.

—The occupants will divide themselves into three groups: those with outstanding warrants against them, permanent residents and all others.

Israel Displays Might Celebrating 25th

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP)—With the precision of a commando operation, Israel's armed forces paraded through Jerusalem on Monday in an awesome salute to the state's 25th anniversary of independence.

Fears of attempted disruptions by Arab guerrillas or Egyptian gunners on the Suez Canal proved unfounded, as tanks and heavy artillery rumbled in the capital and jet fighters thundered overhead. More than 300,000 cheering spectators jammed the parade route and the day seemed more festive than warlike.

Two incidents marred the perfection of the celebrations. A tank, trying to re-enter the parade after pulling out with a smoking engine, lurched into a police barricade and injured at least two persons. Witnesses said they saw a woman being pulled from under the tank treads, but she appeared only slightly injured.

After the march, an army helicopter crunched to earth in a hard forced landing shortly after take off. The military command said nine soldiers were injured.

Premier Golda Meir, President Zalman Shazar and Defense Minister Moshe Dayan reviewed row after row of Centurion, Patton and captured Russian T54 tanks, all remodeled by Israeli engineers.

More than 400 aircraft, led by jets trailing blue and white exhaust fumes, shrieked overhead.

On the streets of Jerusalem, women soldiers and high school cadets marched behind the tanks, missile launchers and big guns. The girl soldiers wore bobby socks and carried machine guns.

The parade route, passing through the former Jordanian sector of Jerusalem, served to underscore Israel's determination never to return the once- divided city to Arab sovereignty.

Most Arab shops were shuttered, but the storekeepers told questioners it was because of the holiday, not in protest.

Protests did come, however, from the United Nations and from many Israelis who thought the parade a needless waste of money and an unnecessary display of militarism. The parade cost $4.7 million.

By dusk, Jerusalem seemed almost back to normal. Tank treads had chewed up the streets and smashed curbs; sidewalks were littered with paper flags and food wrappings and the spectator stands lining the four-mile-long route stood eerily empty.

The parade was a startling contrast to the nation's first military parade, when a major contingent was a team of mules carrying supplies and a signal corps showing off the mainstay of its communications system—carrier pigeons. That was in 1949.

Treaty Time Moved Up

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)—The timetable for the evacuation of Wounded Knee has been advanced 24 hours, with Indian militants requesting they be allowed to lay down their arms at 9 a.m., EDT Tuesday.

An agreement reached Sunday had called for the insurgents to quit the village after 9 a.m. Wednesday. The occupation is scheduled to end 70 days after it began when about 200 Indian militants swarmed into the hamlet and claimed it as their own.

Thomas Oxendine, public information officer for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, said the Indians sent the request out of the village shortly before noon Monday. It was immediately accepted, he said.

Earlier, another government spokesman had expressed disappointment with a list of weapons and personnel turned over Sunday evening by Indian leaders.

The list was the first phase of the disarmament agreement. It was to be used as a check against the arms turned in at the teepee chapel when the disarmament takes effect.

Deputy Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Hellstern told a news briefing the list included only a small-bore pistol and a peace pipe.

Price Ceilings Disregarded

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's more than a month since meat price ceiling took effect, but some consumers don't seem to be paying much attention. "We have to eat and we get what we have to eat," says one housewife, explaining why she doesn't bother to check the posted ceiling list.

An Associated Press spot check Monday at supermarkets in about a dozen cities showed many consumers were unaware that a ceiling existed; others knew about the ceiling, but not how it worked. Only a few said they were actually on the lookout for violations. Most of them hadn't found any.

President Nixon imposed the ceilings on beef, lamb and pork at the wholesale and retail level late in March. Supermarkets were required, starting April 9, to post lists of the ceiling price for each item.

The ceiling price is based on a complex formula involving volume and prices during the month before the new policy took effect.

Stanley Goldberg, the director of the compliance and enforcement division of the Internal Revenue Service - responsible for enforcing the ceilings - said Saturday there had been "surprisingly few" complaints from consumers about violations.

Ten Chicago residents were interviewed while standing in front of the ceiling price list at a Hillman's supermarket. Seven of the 10 said they either didn't understand or didn't notice the ceiling prices.

"I just don't pay attention to those signs," said Ruth Nelson.

Of the three persons who said they did understand the ceilings, only two said they would recognize violations. The third, Jack King, said, "I don't stop at the meat counter long enough to recognize anything. I just don't buy it."

None of 10 persons interviewed in two Salt Lake City, Utah, stores said they understood the ceilings. Paulette Thomas, shopping with her two children, said it wouldn't make any difference because she had to buy the food no matter what.

A Miami bachelor who said he shopped for himself commented, "I don't understand a thing about it, the price ceiling. I wouldn't know if somebody violated a price ceiling if you hit me over the head.

Cattlemen Meet N.Y. Housewives

By LOUIS COOK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Laurie Fierstein is a waitress from Brooklyn who's never been on a ranch in her life. Wray Finney is a cattleman from Oklahoma. They locked horns on Monday during a debate between representatives of the American National Cattlemen's Association and women from New York area consumer groups over the high cost of beef and who's responsible. The cattlemen's groups will visit Washington, D.C., later this week for similar debates.

Neither side managed to convince the other of anything in more than two hours of arguing, shouting and statistics-citing.

Miss Fierstein, representing Women United for Action, put her case simply: "We think the price of meat is too high. Our pocketbook is straining." She said consumers had been blamed for pushing up prices by demanding more and more meat and contended that large corporations were profiting at every level of the food industry. Finney, who describes himself as an "about average" rancher, with 4,000 acres and 300 cows near Fort Cobb, Okla., argued that the typical cattleman's profit margin on his investment is three per cent, with an annual income of about $12,000.

"We've been subsidizing the consumer for 20 years and finally we're making a return on our investment," said Finney, pulling out a notebook and reeling off figures to show that the average price per hundred pounds of cattle was $33 in 1951, dropped to $14.90 in 1956 and remained low through the 1960s. The March 1973, price, he said, was $45.29 per hundredweight.

Thumbing through newspaper clippings and statistics from the Department of Agriculture, Miss Fierstein said that technological improvements had cut the cost of producing cattle, but ranchers hadn't passed the savings on to the consumer.

And 11.76-pound chuck roast that was part of the cattlemen's display became a bone of contention at one point during the formal debate. The roast stood in front of a poster claiming that from 1953 to 1973, hourly wages rose 139 per cent while the price of the meat rose only 72 per cent.

"This is absolutely outrageous," shouted a woman in the audience, "to have that piece of meat sitting here when I can't even afford to buy food for my family. What right do you have to flaunt that meat?"

Phnom Penh Convoy Breaks Through

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - A convoy of freighters, tankers and munition barges reached Phnom Penh Monday despite heavy rocket fire that sank one oil tanker in the Mekong River.

The first ships to reach the Cambodian capital in two weeks brought badly needed fuel and supplies.

Cambodian rebels have occupied the banks of the Mekong for three months. Within the last month only five small convoys have made it to Phnom Penh.

Reports reaching Phnom Penh said the insurgents took a post Friday at Kampong Tralach 34 miles northwest of the capital, capturing and then slaughtering 100 troops.

Thirty of the defenders escaped, but the rebels horded the others to the bank of the Tonle Sap River and killed them. The Cambodian army often threats prisoners in similar fashion.

In Saigon, the release of Communist civilian prisoners resumed after a week's dealy. The Viet Cong announced they would again begin releasing civilian prisoners over the weekend.

The number of alleged cease-fire violations across South Vietnam dropped off by one-third, with 90 incidents reported by the Saigon command during the 24-hour period ending at dawn Monday.

The Viet Cong announced that they will release 252 South Vietnamese civilian prisoners Friday and Saturday.

Capt. Phuong Nam, the Viet Cong chief spokesman, said an agreement on the release was reached at a meeting on the two-party joint military commission's subcommission on captured persons.

The release would bring to 637 the number of South Vietnamese civilian prisoners freed by the Viet Cong, which is the total number the Viet Cong claim they have detained.

The Saigon government has claimed that the Viet Cong are holding up to 60,000 South Vietnamese people, government officials and cadres.

Sources in the International Commission of Central and Supervision said that 196 Communist civilians were freed across the Thach Han River in northern Quang Tri Providence on Monday.

High Court Faces Prisoners Voting Rights

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- The Supreme Court Monday agreed to hear arguments on whether a person awaiting trial or convicted of a minor crime in New York should be allowed to vote. But in a North Carolina case, it affirmed a three-judge court that ruled states have authority to bar those convicted of a major crime from the voting booth.

In a case from Georgia, the high court buttressed the authority of the U.S. Attorney General in examining state reapportionment plans for racial impact under the 1965 voting Rights Act.

"We think that a state may constitutionally continue the 'historic exclusion' of felons from the franchise without regard to whether such exclusion can pass muster under the equal protection clause," read the lower court's decision endorsed by the justices.

Justice William O. Douglas said he would have heard oral arguments on the challenge brought by convicted check forger Fred W. Fincher of Wadesboro, N.C.

At the same time, the justices agreed to a full-scale examination of inmate voting when it involves those serving time for misdemeanors and those unable to post bond while awaiting trial.

This issue arose in a case from New York where the American Civil Liberties Union and the League of Women Voters challenged state voting on behalf of 72 men and women in the Monroe County Jail.

New York state law specifically denies the ballot only to felons, but the state's highest appellate court has approved its denial to others, according to papers filed in the case. Lawyers for the inmates claimed the practice allows those who can make bail to vote while discriminating against those who cannot.

Post Makes Off With Pulitzer

The individual awards carry prizes of $1,000 each. A gold medal goes to the winner of the meritorius service award. The first prizes were announced in 1917.

The Pulitzer Prize for local reporting went to the staff of the Chicago Tribune, for an investigation of voting frauds under the direction of George Bliss, an investigative reporter who won the same prize in 1962. Three persons have been convicted in the aftermath and another 44 cases are pending.

The Sun Newspapers of Omaha, Neb., won the prize for special local reporting, for an intensive study of the financial background and the fund-raising activities of Boys Town, nationally renowned youth haven. Max Frankel of the New York Times won the Pulitzer Prize for international reporting for his coverage of President Nixon's visit to mainland China.

The prize for editorial writing went to Roger B. Linscott of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, Mass. There was no prize this year for editorial cartooning.

The feature photography award was won by Brian Lanker of the Topeka, Kan., Capital-Journal for his series on child birth.

Ronald Powers of the Chicago Sun-Times received the prize for criticism for his television coverage.

Also in the arts, W.A. Swanberg's "Luce and His Empire" won the prize for biography. It explored the life of the late founder of Time, Inc., Henry Luce.

The history award went to Michael Kammen for "People of Paradox: An inquiry concerning the origin of American cilization." James Thomas Flexner received a special citation for "George Washington, Volumes I through IV."

Maxine Kumin was the poetry prize winner for "Up Country," and the music award went to Elliott Carter for his "String Quartet No. 3." Carter won a Pulitzer Prize in 1960 for his "String Quartet No. 2."

Bowdoin Satisfied With New Admissions Policy

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) - In the three years since Bowdoin College let applicants submit homemade projects instead of standardized test scores, the school has collected a huge oil painting, some marble sculpture and a flock of bright students.

Nearly half of the 1,200 students admitted to the exclusive liberal arts college since 1970 chose not to send in their College Board Examination Scores. And so far, they've had better grades than ones who gave scores.

"In general, Bowdoin is satisfied with the results of the entrance test option," said Richard W. Moll, dean of admissions.

Many applicants have supplemented the traditional folder of class standings and teacher recommendations with tapes of musical performances, works of art and photographs.

"Kids feel emancipated by a college that is not going to reject them on the basis of test scores alone," Moll said, "and for this reason, we are getting examples of genuine talent which can be used to allow the college to know the full individual."

Moll gets some surprises in the mail. Among ornaments lying around his office are "some terribly heavy pieces of marble sculpture from a boy in California we've somehow got to get back to him and an oil painting so large we couldn't find a wall in the admissions office to lean it against."

But Bowdoin has no regrets about the two classes admitted under the test option, Moll said. Faculty members are pleased with the independence and motivation shown by the students.

A slightly higher percentage of those who did not submit scores made the dean's list in their freshman year at Bowdoin than those who did.

The program seems to draw daring, imaginative students who just don't test well, he said. But even youngsters with excellent test scores are also declining to submit them.

We get "a surprising number of applicants who did very well but applauded the principle of not being judged on the basis of 'one uptight morning of standardized testing'," Moll said.

A fellow from Oklahoma who scored a perfect 800 on three of his five tests withheld his scores ,and praised Bowdoin in his application for its admission policy, He was accepted.

Me. Oil Refinery Lacks Support

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis told a news conference Monday that the proposed $350 million oil refinery for Eastport doesn't have his support "at this time."

He also said he believes opposition to the refinery by the New Brunswick provincial government "won't enhance the project" of the Pittston Co. of New York.

The governor cautioned against "prejudging" the refinery plans before a public hearing can be held by the Board of Environmental Protection. The board has authority to approve or reject the project, based on its environmental impact.

"I support giving Pittston an opportunity to present their plans to be heard and have the whole situation judged accordingly," Curtis said.

Curtis reiterated his backing of a report from his Task Force on Energy, Heavy Industry and the Maine Coast. That panel recommended that Portland be the only coastal site opened to refinery development, and a bill to implement the report will be given a legislative hearing Wednesday.

But, the governor said that efforts to locate a refinery at Eastport in economically depressed Washington County have been going on much longer than his task force study. William Cockburn, fisheries and environmental minister for New Brunswick, says that strong objections about the proposed refinery have been made to Washington by a top Canadian government official.

He contended that if there was a supertanker accident among the islands approaching Eastport, the oil would be swept up the Bay of Fundy into Canada, severely damaging the province's fisheries industry.

Curtis said the state will ask Washington Tuesday to declare as a disaster area the flood-damaged areas in northern Maine around the upper Penobscot and St. Jo.n Rivers.

Hey! Dig This

The Department of Classics will hold an Archaeology Day beginning at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium. There will be a series of three illustrated lectures:

Professor Miranda Marvin of Wellesley College: "Excavations at Idalion (Cyprus) and the 'New Archaeology' "

Professor Niki Scoufopoulos, Yale University, "New Worlds Through Underwater Archaeology."

Professor Stephen Dyson, Wesleyan University, "Buccino and Cosa (Italy): From the Past into the Future with the 'New Archaeology' "

A social hour with refreshments and informal discussion with the speakers will follow. Both lectures and social our are open to the public free of charge.

At 4:30 p.m. in 917 Campus Center there will be a planning session open to faculty and students in the Five College area who are interested in helping the Department of Classics organize an interdisciplinary and interdepartmental undergraduate major in Classical Archaeology and University participation in an archaeological dig in the Mediterranean area. This session is open to all interested persons.

"WE WANT A 'G' RATING...SO CAN YOU STAB HER 20 TIMES WITHOUT TEARING HER BLOUSE?"

Don Glickstein

Another Day, Another Time

This, ladies and gentlemen, is my last column. You won't have Glickstein to kick around anymore. Come June 25, I take off for Micronesia—to Mariana Islands—for a Peace Corps junket. I guess every Kennedy heir has applied to the Peace Corps once in his or her life.

Micronesia is a "Trust Territory" of the U.S., which is a code name for a colony which should have had a decent living standard years ago and then been given its inependence, but it doesn't and it wasn't because the Department of Defense wanted to use the islands for missile bases and A—bomb sites. In Saipan, there was even a Nationalist Chinese guerrilla training base.

REGRETS, I'VE HAD A FEW. Perhaps unionization will give the faculty a maturity deserving of their age. On the whole, the faculty have been the insecure, reactionary force to educational improvement and to academic standards during my four years here.

How much longer will the faculty be held unaccountable for their teaching? How many students will suffer through rhetoric courses taught by teachers who are not capable of teaching writing? How much longer will College of Arts and Sciences courses fulfill core requirements, while equally broad non-CAS courses are considered too professional? How much longer will the faculty rationalize core requirements when they refuse to set up adequate one-to-one counseling systems? How much longer will the faculty remain in their ivory tower, refusing to redefine "university" in 21st century, rather than 14th century, criteria?

"MAN, THE BILL OF RIGHTS IS A BOURGEOIS DOCUMENT, MAN." That's what a kid in the dorm told me. Others tried to tell me that China and Mao were where it's at, and that individualism was merely a manifestation of capitalism.

Certainly, totalitarian China has done some admirable things economically, but God, is my generation so naive as to permit the destruction of the Bill of Rights? Nixon is an evil man for what he has done to the once-free press, to privacy, to the separation of church and state, and to freedom of expression, but he could not have done it alone.

Why is my generation forgetting history, and thus, as the saying goes, being doomed to repeat it?

Regardless of community sensitivities, let the press print "cocks" and "fucks" and "cunts" indiscriminately, let them print sick letters about how Hitler was doing the right thing with his gas ovens, let them print Birchers and psychotics, Maoists and Morinis, Polaks and Niggers and Kikes and Wops, let there be no censorship of any kind, anywhere, of anything.

1984 is 11 years from now, but it is already here, and we must bait the monster of totalitarianism, challenge it, dare it, not clothe it in economic pieties, but keep our spirit alive. For in America, if freedom does not thrive, then sick people can come to power, and unlike their counterparts in non-technological societies, America's sick leaders can destroy the world.

LIFE AND DEATH. That's another thing that pisses me off. I just can't understand why people are masochists, why they will trip and speed and drink and smoke, and fill up their dining commons trays with soft drinks, and grow flabby, and pierce their hearing with narcotic stereo volumes. I've seen friends die, I've seen disease, and this life is too short and too whimsical to abet death. We are a generation that has grown to hate life, to shorten it, to have nothing to live for; and in this, we are no better than our parents.

SOMEONE ONCE SAID THIS. The central problem of our time is feeling the results of our own actions.

MUSIC goes round and round. When I came to UMass, it was Crosby, Stills, and Nash. Then Led Zeppelin and Chicago. Now, nothing but '50s revivals. Well, I can't relate to the '50s.

REORGANIZATION is in the news; everybody seems to be doing it. When will people learn that reorganizing has little to do with performance? What counts is commitment and money, something which Americans have never had enough of in the right places.

LET US REMEMBER VIETNAM, and how we got into it, and how men of "honor" lost their honor, and how the people let its government dictate policy, rather than vice-versa. Let us remember the tears and the photographs; the girl kneeling over her friend's body at Kent State, the My Lai photos, the news reel of the American soldier burning the village, Bach Mai, the little girl running naked, burning with napalm, Chicago, I will remember crying in the streets of Queens on election evening 1972 when a good and decent man did not become President because a nation had forgotten its history, and had grown blind to truth. I will remember crying in 1968.

THIS IS THE END, FOLKS. Where I'm going, anything may happen. Nothing may happen.

Maybe I'll find a friend. Maybe I'll even marry a beautiful Micronesian princess and chew betelnut for the rest of my life.

Most of the chances are against it, but not, I think, quite all.

It may be that my loves will always be temporary, never to last. Well, all others are, too.

I will be afraid. Always.
I may be lonely. Always.
I may change the world. Maybe never.
What will happen?
What will happen?

To The Future

This is my last Collegian column for about four months and in attempting to decide whether to end the year on a serious or more light- hearted note I reached a compromise which has resulted in the fact that the second half of this article has nothing to do with the first half.

Steve Tripoli's article on the left-overs made several valid points but as a whole failed, I think, in two respects. First, it did not acknowledge the fact that, in spite of their occasional excesses and intolerances, the radicals on this campus are humane, concerned individuals who have committed themselves to an attempt at improving the quality of human life throughout the world. Second, it failed to consider and penetrate the difficulties involved in maintaining a coherent, realistic political stance in contemporary America. Marx's insights into the relationship between a society's economic base and its political and legal superstructure shows the inadequacy of the liberal notion, which is one I have accepted until quite recently, that one can affect meaningful social change by tinkering around with a society's political arrangements. The fact is, I am afraid, that those elements of the population who would stand to lose from any such changes, like a redistribution of income, have an inordinant amount of political power by virtue of their economic status. On the other hand Marx's economic predictions pertaining to the eventual collapse of capitalism are incorrect and have not been born out by history. American corporate capitalism, in spite of its recurrent fluctuations, shows no signs of imminent collapse and as a result the radical's incantations against the evils of capitalism and their advocacy of its overthrow call to mind Don Quixote's indignant assault on those ignoble windmills. While no one would ever question Quixote's sincerity one might question the acuteness of his perceptive faculties. But despite the partially enforced separation of radicalism and reality (enforced because the alternative courses of action show such little promise), radicals deserve credit for the fact that they irresolutely keep the image of a better world constantly before our eyes.

The end of this academic year marks the midway point in my undergraduate education and my response to people who ask me how I like UMass is still as incoherent and non-committal as it was one year ago. In some ways I intensely dislike UMass but I suspect that this dislike is not for UMass in particular as much as it is a dislike of American life, as mirrored in its educational institutions, in general. UMass has much to offer and I have for a long time thought that the supposedly vast differences in quality between various institutions of higher learning is in part a myth perpetuated by those who reap status and prestige from such myths. Once in a long while one finds a cliche which happens to be true and the notion that one can make one's collge education as fruitful or as useless as one wishes falls into this category.

At this time of the year, when the trees are reclaiming their leaves and the spring blossoms are coming into their lush fullness, the summer stretches seductively and endlessly before us but in a few short months we will all be wondering how time could have moved so quickly and until then I wish each of you days of happiness and fulfillment.

Letters To The Editor

Pride And Dignity Should Be Restored

To The Editor:

The Middle East conflict has once again provided the media hypnotists and cerebral magicians with a surplus of raw inhumanity to further the cause of proper-gander and other related mystical bullshit. So as your self-appointed messenger from Ali-ah in the Family, I decided to put my two shekels in.

The two outstanding parties to the conflict are the Israelis, who are mostly Jewish, and the Palestinian Arabs, who are mostly not Jewish. For comparison's sake, just think of the Palestinians as the American Indians. The Indians are not one nation and neither are the Palestinians. The Palestinians are a heterogenous group, descendants of Arabs, Seljuks, Crusaders, Mamluks, Ottoman Turks, and Circassians who during different immigration periods passed through Palestine. The present-day Palestinian is for the most part the grandchild of immigrants to Palestine from Beirut, Cairo, and Damascus during the early part of the twentieth century. Before then, the land was relatively empty and desolate. But to return to our comparison, the Indians are called Native Americans, so the Palestinians must be Native Israelis. However, there are some complications. Several Arab tribes in the West Bank prior to 1948 were proud to claim descent from Jewish tribes who immigrated into the area from Khaibar in Saudi Arabia. And more, there is a Soviet propaganda myth that the Russian Jews who settled in Israel at the turn of the century were descendants of converts to Judusm from the old Khazar kingdom in the Caucus just north of old Armenia (oh, no! more Circassians). So Khaibar, Khazar, or what-not, it's a mess, but I suppose they all could live peacefully if they turned in their guns for prophylactics.

The conflict centers around a land dispute or a law of physics that states that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time. Since it is in vogue to question implicit assumptions, and since it is spring, it would seem reasonable to ask why the dispute has not been settled through some form of cohabitation. Surely the cousins of the Middle East appear to us now as strange bed partners, but there is hope.

More significantly, it is the relationship to the land of the different claimants that should be examined. The Jewish people have always maintained settlements in Palestine, and Jewish individuals, families, and groups have continually returned to live in the Land. To the secular but unassimilated Jew, the State of Israel in the Land of Israel is the fulfillment of centuries of desire for political, cultural, and social liberation. It is the focus of the national re-development program of the Jewish people, who, after being kicked around Moslem Africa and Asia and Christian Europe, decided to reclaim a land that was relatively empty and desolate and re-establish their natural roots. To the religious Jew, the Land is the land of his forefathers, of the holier presence of God, and an opportunity for a more complete participation in his religious system. In Israel, the Jew not only feels closer to his God, people, and religion, he behaves with the knowledge

The Jewish people have one religion and one homeland which they have transformed from desert and swamp into cities, villages, and flourishing farms.

I am not a Palestinian, and am therefore not the proper authority to speak about his relationship to the land. I can witness his religions, his backgrounds, his citizenship in Jordan, his residences in Kuwait, and his offices in Beirut. The lesson of Wounded Knee is not that the Indians should be given back their land, but that their pride and dignity should be restored. The lesson of the Middle East conflict is that the deprivation of the qualitative aspects of human existence has created refugees and hatred. Only with the cessation of such deprivation by all Middle Eastern countries will the conflict be resolved. As in Wounded Knee, the guns should be laid aside, and pride and signity be restored.

Parking Money

To The Editor:

Re: Proposed parking fee increase for UMass-Amherst campus.

I have talked with State Rep. Jim Collins (D-Amherst) on this problem. He stated he needs help from the campus community to sponsor a bill to provide money for parking facilities. He does not need signatures at this time. What he wants is for the community: students, faculty, and staff to write to their own state representatives and get their support. Rep. Collins needs a majority of the house, not one representative and 10,000 or more signatures. The money for parking was dropped from the FY-'73 budget for the University. Rep. Collins intends to find out why.

Act now because the students will not be here on May 25th, to voice their opinions at the scheduled Board of Trustees meeting.

The following is a list of state elected representatives for residents of Hampshire County:

STATE SENATORS:: John Olver (D), Roger Bernashe (D), towns of Huntington, Hadley, Southampton; Frederic Schlosstein (D), towns of Belchertown and Granby. Mail address State House, Boston.

STATE REPRESENTATIVES: Edward McColgan (D—Northampton), Louis Morini (R—Northampton), James Nolen (D—Ware), James Collins (D—Amherst) and Jonathon Healy (R—Charlemont), towns of Sunderland and Whately. Mail address, State House, Boston.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Impeachment?

To The Editor:

We elected a trickster named Dick
Whose campaign was both secret and slick
Now we've found Watergate, but I fear it's too late;
For it seems that our error may stick.

Editorial Points

If a poll were taken today, what do you think would be the most widely read feature of the Collegian? Comics? Horoscope? Weather? Editorial Points? How about Bob Estelle's column?

Classes are over any day now. Let's see, that means tonight you study for your Psych exam, tomorrow night you study for your English exam, Thursday night you study for your Zoology exam, and then Friday night you test your ability to hold liquor.

YSA Replies

To The Editor:

Let's just get a few things straight. First, no member, past or present, of the YSA has ever or will ever demand the expulsion of Bob Estelle's column from the Collegian because of his views, political or otherwise. In fact, the YSA has been consistently in the forefront of the fight for full civil rights, including that of free speech, not only on university campuses but in high schools and in the military. Steve Tripoli's implied accusation of the YSA in this act, his characterization of the YSA, the Young Workers Liberation League (YWLL), the Poverty Committee, and the Wounded Knee Support Committee as "hypocritical fascists", and the lumping together of different organizations that have real differences in programs and tactics, constitutes the lowest form of irresponsible journalism. It's a little sad that an individual who is supposedly so concerned with responsible journalism, as well he should be as Editor-in-Chief, seems so incapable of practicing it.

Secondly, though the war in Indochina or the struggle (that's right struggle) of Native Americans for self-determination may not be very important to Mr. Tripoli, they happen to be of crucial importance not only for those directly involved, but also for thousands of concerned individuals in this country and around the world. Though I can't officially speak for the YWLL, as far as I know neither the YSA or YWLL sent members to Wounded Knee to break the blockage, it would be nice if Mr. Tripoli did some of his homework before writing, because we felt that the mobilization of mass pressure would be more effective than individual efforts.

Mr. Tripoli counsels us to "start raising people's consciousness", I wonder just what he thinks that these groups sponsored Vernon Bellacourt for, and perhaps if Mr. Tripoli read his own paper he might just notice the large number of speakers and "educational" events sponsored by the YSA and the YWLL. Also if Mr. Tripoli would stop at our literature tables or buy a Militant he might discover the kind of consciousness raising the YSA, and the YWLL, are attempting to do. In fact the Left, with the help of the Vietnamese, has been able to change the political climate of this country in a rather dramatic way in the last ten years.

And lastly, it is again a little sad to see someone with such a contempt for the bulk of the American people, and so out of touch with the movement of our society. Perhaps if Mr. Tripoli could look beyond his admiration of the Greek Colonels for "getting off their cans", he might see that while a military coup d'etat is a possibility, we are not living in the 1950's and that there is almost no support in this country for a military government. In fact the current level of dissatisfaction of everyday people with this society is at a point that hasn't been seen for some 35 years, and it is in just this context that the YSA is trying to build the movement for a socialist alternative to our decaying capitalist society.

Free political discussion is absolutely essential for the working out of the necessary alternatives to this system and the best means to achieve these goals, and the YSA has always and will always welcome this crucial activity. However Mr. Tripoli's kind of shoddy, petty name-calling diatribe adds nothing to the discussion and represents a significant step backwards. In the future we shall hope for better.

Free Choice

To The Editor:

In response to the letter of William J. Power's which appeared in the Collegian on May 4:

Presumably, all students at this university are here with one basic goal in mind: to receive a degree after the completion of a four or two year program. Should a woman become pregnant during those two or four years, she has two choices: she may either continue the pregnancy and abort her education, or she may continue her education and abort the pregnancy.

The Medical Emergency Loan Fund (M.E.L.F.) was established in order to maintain the alternative of abortion. M.E.L.F. is not trying to force abortion on anyone that does not choose that option or on anyone who considers abortion to be murder. The loan is apolitical; the board of directors does not attempt to influence legislators or any other people. If only the Catholic Church could do the same!

Further, it should be made clear that M.E.L.F. is exactly what its name states: a loan fund. All monies are returned; no student is paying for any one else's abortion.

Calling for the withdrawal of M.E.L.F. funds is tantamount to calling for the withdrawal of free choice on this campus.

Paula F. Bird
Chairperson, M.E.L.F.

Mumbled Obscenities And Gold Plaques

There aren't a hell of a lot of worthwhile or fun things a Collegian editor can do, besides occaisionally put a pretty picture on the front page or try to include Doonesbury on the comics page (don't worry -- we're working on it.)

But there are some times when I get a chance to do something I enjoy and which might even be worthwhile, and this is one of them: the end of the semester column, in which I get to raise bouquets of praise, or a middle finger, to whoever I want on campus. So, here goes!

Mumbled obscenities to: the Physical Plant department, for refusing to plant grass where students don't walk and sidewalks where they do walk, instead of vice versa; the designers of the Fine Arts Center, a multi-faceted eye-confusing blot that comes close to ruining the Campus Pond area; the management of the Campus Center-Student Union, for closing the Hatch at night instead of the coffee shop (what do we do without Derek and the Dominoes at 10 p.m.?); student senators who ask inane questions of Collegian staffers at budget time; buildings which create windstorms when you walk by them; and endless construction projects that screw up campus traffic.

Not to mention the Peter Pan Bus Company, for endless overpriced debilitating bus rides through Western Massachusetts; the bookstore, for never having the book you want and overcharging you drastically when they do get it; the managing editor of the Collegian (this contributed by the assistant managing editor); people who steal bicycles; sick students who try to ventilate their perversions on the editorial pages of the Collegian; editors who let them; the dining commons when they close down a line early and/or when the food is usually maladroit; bicyclists who don't give a damn whether they run you down or not; seventh floor of Grayson (from someone who ought to know); and people who tune their motorcycles or make other loud noise late at night.

A gold plaque and a free coffee shop tuna sub to the following, who helped make the semester more bearable and occasionally even more fun: comparatively cheap food at the Top of the Campus; cheap everything at the Blue Wall; toasted cheese sandwiches at 2:30 a.m.; dry pancakes at 8 a.m.; people with a sense of humor in the Student Senate; the Campus Pond; the free bus service (best idea in a long time); friendly waitresses at McManus'; the lady in the Campus Center who sells the great chicken and egg rolls; listening to music in the Campus Center music room; Prof. David Booth, for being a reasonably good sport each and every time we misidentify and/or misquote him; watching people while spaced out in the Campus Center concourse; playing Frisbee anywhere and anytime; watching the sunrise; the free music coming out of South College; free music coming out of flutes in the Campus Center concourse; Al Oickle, the world's greatest newspaper advisor; the view from the Grad Research Tower; and long lunches Friday afternoon in Franklin dining commons.

And last but not least, heartfelt thanks to the spacy gang of writers, layout people, photographers, sports writers, editorialists, commentators, issue editors, ad reps, business people, editors, and other hangers-on of the Collegian staff who helped us put this damned thing out this semester.

So long, suckers!

John Calls Martha

Other than reporting of severe earaches from listening to so many conversations concerning the Watergate scandal, Collegian eavesdropper Charles Camelopard has filed very little during the last week.

He is withholding several tapes of conversations between the White House and its ex-staffers in hopes they will be more revealing in future weeks.

Camelopard did, however, release a conversation between former Attorney-General John Mitchell and his wife Martha. The call was apparently made after Mrs. Mitchell spoke with a UPI reporter on Saturday night.

In the call, Mrs. Mitchell expressed her opinion that Mr. Nixon should resign the Presidency. Here is the transcription of his wife's call.

Ring, Ring.

"Hello, Mitchell residence."

"Is that you Martha my dear?"

"Yes it is, you big fat dumbell. I told you not to call me; I'd call you."

"Martha, please be more civil. Someone might be listening in."

"Who cares if anyone listens in? I'll talk in public anytime anyone will listen."

"That's exactly what I called about. What's the idea of talking to them damn women from UPI? Are you trying to get Dick in trouble?"

"Look, you bald-headed lummox, I'm trying to get you out of trouble. Nobody believes in him anymore. You might as well join everybody else and get rid of him."

"Why, that's ridiculous!"

"You'll see how ridiculous it is when the Democrats are in office for the next fifty years. You're into this mess up to that double-chin of yours and you're not getting any taller. If you knew, Dick knew and you are both finished. I never liked him anyway. If you had gotten friendly with that nice Kennedy boy none of this would have happened."

"Why didn't you at least call someone at the White House before you talked to the press?"

"I tried to but you and your dumb friends have things so loused up there that all I could get through to was the Senate coffeeshop, and only the janitor s were there Saturday night. They were too busy to talk so I called my friend Miss Thomson. She always listens."

"Of course she listens. The press has nothing else to do but be unpatriotic by digging into things that are none of their business. They have no right to bother the great Republican Party. We're private enterprise."

"Oh John, hang it up will you? This whole thing is too big for you and your cronies to cover up. You should all quit, and then we'll move into the country and forget the whole thing. The Republicans won't have a thing to do in Washington for years anyway. Now goodbye. And if you love me you'll think about what I said, and you better love me or I'll call Miss Thomson again."

Kleindienst Denies Wiretap Knowledge

WASHINGTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst denied Monday that he had any knowledge of wiretaps as reported by Time magazine.

The magazine said it has learned that results of wiretaps allegedly ordered by President Nixon were stolen from the FBI after Director J. Edgar Hoover used them to "blackmail" the White House, which was presuring for his removal.

In a letter to Hedley Donovan, editor-in-chief of Time, Kleindienst said the weekly had written in its May 14 issue that "Angered, Hoover telephoned Kleindienst and threatened to reveal these embarrassing taps."

"Without qualifications of any kind," said Kleindienst, "I categerically state that no such telephone conversation took place between me and Mr. Hoover. I further categorically state that I have no personal knowledge about such taps."

Time said Nixon had asked the FBI early in 1969 to tap the telephones of two New York Times reporters and four White House aides in an effort to plug leaks involving military policy discussions.

The scenario, according to The Time account, was as follows:

Hoover demanded and received written authorization from the Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell to make the wiretaps.

In 1971, the administration decided to pressure Hoover out of his post of FBI director. It was then that Hoover allegedly called Kleindienst, then deputy attorney general, and threatened to reveal the taps.

Teamsters To Open Wage Talks

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The giant Teamsters Union opens contract talks Wednesday with the trucking industry, setting the stage for what the White House regards as the most critical test of its Phase 3 wage controls.

Informed sources said Monday the Teamsters are expected to seek a three-year pact raising pay by 50 cents an hour each year, plus a sizeable boost in fringe benefits.

The wage demands alone would amount to abour 7 per cent of current average pay of the 400,000 truck drivers, both local and long haul drivers.

Local drivers, who make up the bulk of the Teamsters, currently are paid $6 an hour while long haul drivers, paid by the mile, average about $18,000 a year, according to industry estimates.

Teamsters President Frank E. Fitzsimmons will formally serve the demands on Trucking Employers, Inc., representing some 16,000 trucking operations that do most of the nation's trucking business.

Fitzsimmons, sources said, also will ask for a $3 increase in pension contributions which currently average about $13 a week, plus a $3 boost in $13-a-week health and welfare payments.

The demands also will include an unlimited cost-of-living escalator, and an expensive package of new vacation schedules, holidays, sick leave and improved working conditions.

Although pay demands fall within striking distance of the administration's 5.5 per cent wage guidelines, total cost of the package is far in excess of the current 6.2 per cent total ceiling on wages and fringes.

But industry and union sources consider this "an asking price," with room for bargaining before the current contract expires June 30.

The White House will keep a close watch on the negotiations. As one top administration put it, the provisions of the new national master freight agreement will "reach into every hamlet in the country."

Editor 'Fuzy' On Winning Pulitzer-Prize

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Roger B. Linscott, 52, said Monday afternoon he was still "a little fuzzy" about the ten articles which won him the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing, but his favorite was the Berkshire Eagle's endorsement of George McGovern's presidential candidacy.

Although he had not been officially informed of the award, Linscott, associate editor of the Pittsfield paper, said word had filtered down through "the grapevine" during the past month that he had won.

"I was surprised, of course," he said. "Actually, it's a little misleading because there are so many papers who should submit entries but don't."

His editorials covered a wide range of local, national and international issues. Several dealt with the Watergate affair, campaign fund raising activities, the political testimonial dinner "racket" and local issues such as public transit and zoning problems.

"The Women" Shown Tonight

Claire Booth Luce's "The Women" will be shown tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium at 9 p.m. Ms. Luce's play originally opened on Broadway in the mid-Thirties and ran for two years prior to being filmed in 1939 under the direction of George Cukor. It is currently being revived in New York. The film concerns the fang-and--claw manueverings of a cross-section of New York women. As a play and a film it is acted entirely by a cast of women headed by Rosiland Russell, Joan Crawford, and Norma Shearer. Also on the double bill at 7 is "Alice Adams". George Stevens' 1935 social drama about the class manueverings of a small time played by Katerine Hepburn. Admission for both features is 75¢.

A flood of late afternoon sunlight catches an elderly Boston couple standing outside of South Station, waiting. The question is, for what?

Juniors Needed For Advisement

Two juniors are needed to help select the main speaker for Commencement, 1974 exercises. They will serve on the Advisory Committee for Honorary Degrees along with two faculty members and one representative of the administration.

The committee's work is to screen nominations for Commencement Speaker and other degree recipients which have been solicited from students of the respective class and other members of the campus community.

All juniors are also urged to submit suggestions for the main speaker, along with their (student's) name, address, and phone number and a brief explanation of why they want this person chosen to give the Commencement address.

Juniors interested in serving on the Advisory Committee must contact Denise Magnell in the Student Senate office, 1st level of the Campus Center by Friday, May 11.

Focus On South Africa Tomorrow

A look at what's going on in Southern Africa will be held in rooms 805-809 of the Campus Center, UMass.

A panel at 1:00 p.m. will introduce several Africans for first-hand perceptions of their countries. The session at 2:00 p.m. will examine the United States' role in Southern Africa and how it influences events there.

The film Dumping Ground will be shown at 3:00 p.m. It is a picture of life on the Bantus of South Africa.

The activity at 4:00 p.m. will be planning to stay in touch which is planned to aid the linking of interested people for future activities related to Southern Africa.

That evening at 7:30 p.m. people concerned with Christian responsibility in Southern Africa will meet at the First Congregational Church in Amherst.

Sponsors of both events are the United Christian Foundation, The Southern Africa Task Force, and Community Change, Inc. For more information call mornings at the Community Change office—253-5865.

Feminist Author At Farley Lodge

Alix Kates Shulman will speak tomorrow at Farley Lodge from noon to 2 p.m. This lunch-time conversation is sponsored by the Everywoman's Center. Bring a sandwich and the Center will provide the coffee.

Ms. Shulman, feminist and novelist, is the author of Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen, published last year. Her other publications include a biography of Emma Goldman, an edited collection of Emma Goldman's speeches and writings, and the widely reprinted "Shulman's Marriage Agreement."

Aspects of percussion playing will be featured in the percussion recital tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The free recital is presented by the UMass music department. The UMass Percussion Ensemble conducted by Peter H. Tanner will open the concert, with Robert Sutino's "Agitated" and Serge de Gastyne's "Quintet for Mallet Percussions." Max Roach, who will perform three unaccompanied drum solos, has performed and recorded with Afro-American musicians including Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, Duke Ellington, and Charlie Mingus. He is a UMass professor in Afro-American studies and music. The premiere performance of the UMass Brass Choir, conducted by Walter Chesnut, will also be featured. The 20-member ensemble will play Alfred Reed's "Symphony for Brass and Percussion."

WMUA OPENINGS

Tonight at 7:30 WMUA's Openings series features a discussion of the Tokyo war crimes trial and its impact on U.S. policy toward Asia with Dick Minear, professor of Japanese history at UMass and author of Victors Justice: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial. Asian Affairs major George Holey, and WMUA's Joe C. at the Tokyo trial the concepts of aggression and personal responsibility for the acts of governments first entered the lexicon of International Law. Tokyo differed in many ways from Nuremberg. Its precedents have had unique and far-reaching impact on present-day U.S. foreign policy.

There's only a couple days left in school, so take this opportunity to call in on WMUA's "What's Eating You?" Finals are probably closing in on you, so call and bitch along with Kent Best from 6:30-7:00-Tonight!

Marxist Economist To Speak

Herb Gintis, one of America's leading Marxist Economist and expert on radical political economy, will lead two discussions tonight. Herb Gintis is currently a Lecturer and Research Associate in the Harvard Graduate School of Education and was a participant and co-author of the study which led to the Economics at Harvard University where he has also served as an assistant professor. Dr. Gintis will join the University of Massachusetts faculty as a Professor of Economics in September, 1974.

This author of numerous articles has led the development of an intensive radical examination of schooling and inequality in our society. Among his writings are studies in I.Q. and development of class structure and a radical examination of the limits of Ivan Illich's Deschooling Society. Dr. Gintis has also examined the changes in the lives of working class youth and the role of all students in radical social change.

Mass. Senate Rejects Exemptions For Day Care

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Senate has killed a proposed state income tax exemption for day care expenses amid disagreement as to whether the state would lose tax revenue.

The 20-14 roll call vote Monday rejecting the bill is to be reconsidered next week, but the outcome is not likely to change.

Sen. John W. Olver, D—Amherst, backing the measure, said the state would gain revenue because taxes on the income of women who got jobs as a result of the exemption would more than offset the deductions.

Olver said his conclusions were backed by studies of a similar exemption for federal income taxes. He was challenged, however, by Sen. Frederic W. Schlosstein Jr., D—Warren, who estimated the bill could cost the state $30 million in revenue a year.

Two measures that would prohibit discrimination against homosexuals were also killed by the Senate in decisive fashion. The first was rejected on a 29-6 roll call and the second died on a voice vote.

Backing the bill was Sen. Robert A. Hall, R—Lanesborg, who said it was based on the principle that "people should leave other people alone.

He said the measure "is basically a good bill, but not a popular bill, not the kind of a bill a senator is going to go back to his district and put out a big press release about how he fought for it."

Sen. Allan R. McKinnon, D—Weymouth, also supported the bill, saying it wasn't the legislature's business to interfere with people "who have chosen a life style many of us don't believe in."

Contemporary Noah To Appear

Noah will drift into UMass today and tomorrow.

He'll be on the Campus Center steps in a medieval play presented by UMass graduates and undergraduates in the English department's medieval drama course. Admission is free.

At noon each day the students will put on "Noah and the Flood," a contemporary version of a medieval cycle play, which was performed outdoors either on moveable wagons or in open areas fitted with scaffolds. Campus Center steps facing the Metawampe statue were chosen for the performance because of the scaffold effect.

The play is concerned with man's attempt to do God's work in a sinful world. It includes humor along with the religion. Noah's wife is shown as hilarious and shrewish, with drinking friends; and other characters include God, the devil, an angel, and Noah and his children.

Cast members: Asst. Prof. Vincent DiMarco who teaches the two drama classes involved, Sister Jane Morrissey, David Ehrman, Michael Daniels, Les Perleman, Margaret Walker, Jeff Eveleth, William Pasche, Glenn Morrow, Jo-An Kilgore, Asheley Griffith, Janis Bergmen, and Pierre Monnin. Two other students, Rufus Cadigan and Karen Mailler, are directors.

ENJOY!

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—By SYDNEY OMARR—☆

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo is able to discriminate, to know difference between song and dance and the real thing. Leo is creative, fiery, drawn to areas of excitement, more so than most persons. Gemini can talk, write, photograph and report. Many persons ask me about my "favorite" sign. Truly, I have no favorites. Cancer can be warm and winning and Sagittarius, usually ready to do battle for ideas, is capable of being a valuable ally to the underdog. Each sign expresses much that is desirable and every sign can also be negative at times. Astrology truly is a vital tool to be utilized in perceiving human character and potential.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent now is on creative drive, how you channel energies. You find that promises are easy to make and give but results are another story. You discover who has been providing valid information as contrasted in hearsay.

TAURUA (April 20-May 20): Security, money, land sales and purchases—these are featured. Capricorn could figure prominently. One in position of authority is on your side. Know it and proceed with confidence. Past experience can be successfully utilized.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than initiate porject. Find where you stand and with one who, has been vacillating. Relative on the move gets "in touch." Remember prior commitments. Don't overturn schedule on mere whim.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You feel surge of creativity. You are now better able to express feelings. Money situation is better than it might appear on surface. Leo could play prominent role. Strive to make inroads in new directions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Start something! Public responds now to your efforts. You are able to negotiate a favorable contract, agreement. You rise above opposition. Your intuitive intelect is on target. You know what to do and when to do it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Expand activities. Laugh at your own foibles. Display vibrant sense of humor. One who wants you to be frightened is envious and ineffective. Know it and be true to yourself. Sagittarian might be in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on revision of wishes, desires. Changes are based on a more mature approach. you learn what really is of value. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons figure prominently. Love is very much in the picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be ready for special dealings with Virgo, Gemini persons. There will be plenty of challenge and variety. You are on solid ground even if not aware of it. Means start realizing your position is strong. Then act accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Family member confides hopes, problems. Be diplomatic. Avoid casting first stone. Strive for harmony. Philosophical concepts are tested. You either believe what you say or you find out you talk through proverbial hat. You learn!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are able to discern, to detect, to perceive what is real, what is illusion. Study Sagittarius message for valid hint. Pisces persons puts you to test. Money related to mate, partner is in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Check diet. You may be getting careless. Indications are that you expand in many ways. Do some thinking, observing. Maintain low profile. Let others make first move. You learn it patient. You lose if impulsive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Much that concerns you has been hidden, obscured. Key now is to get rid of burden not rightly your own. Aries could play important role. Check with co-workers, those who share your interests, goals.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have inner power, reserves of strength. You are concerned, this year, with moving, residence, domestic situation. You will find that November is an outstanding month. You draw to you many born under Cancer and Capricorn. You are a natural executive, capable of handling more than your share of responsibility.

Bill Monboquette

Bill Monboquette is one of the many scouts who travel around New England watching the UMass baseball squad and its list of prospective professional baseball players. Monbo, scouting for the Yankees, was himself a standout pitcher for the Red Sox, the highlight of his career being a no-hitter in 1965.

WTOY Sports

By MDC STAFF

Except for a few Marty Kelley-Bill McKinnon WTOY productions, televised sports have not hit the campus... as yet. Things however may change. But able bodied students interested in television are needed to bring about this change.

In the fall under the guidance of WTOY Sports Director Marty Kelley and the WTOY Sports staff, an attempt will be made to broadcast all 11 UMass football games on the wide Blue Wall screen on Sunday night and on Cable vision Channel 8 (Amherst) on Tuesday night. The combined projected TV audiences could possibly list 20,000 people.

But there is a need for sportscasters, cameramen, directors, stage personnel, statisticians, and technicians interested in this sports promotion venture. If you fit into any of these categories and would like three credits to participate in this project, please attend a staff meeting of WTOY tonight at 10 p.m. in rooms 911-915 in the Campus Center.

That's tonight at the CC rooms 911-915 at 10 p.m. for your credit opportunity in sports telecasting. Any questions, contact Marty Kelley at 545-0745 very late at night.

Rugby Lose To Brown 'A'; 'B' Wins

By MDC STAFF

The UMass ruggers just couldn't quite make it back from an 8 point deficit in an 11-9 loss to Brown in Providence on Sunday.

"The problem this late in the season is loss of interest," captain Jim Tkacik said after the game. "This late in the season no one wants to travel because of the nice weather and exams."

Because of UMass' small turnout (only 23 went to Brown), 7 of the A team players had to play in the B game first. The result was a strong B side and a 14-4 victory, but it also resulted in a tired A team that had to contend with one of the toughest teams it has seen all season.

At the end of the first half it was 3-3 on a field goal by Rick Scarpignato. But Brown scored two quick touchdowsn in the second half to make it 11-3.

With five minutes to go Mike Joyce ran head on into two Brown tacklers, and at the last instant flipped the ball to Nick Abbott on the wing. Abbott faked two men sprinting down the sideline and carried the ball in for the score. Scarpignato made the kick after good and it was Brown 11-9.

With just 3 and a half minutes to go UMass blocked a punt and got the ball on the one yard line. After three unsuccessful attempts to carry the ball over, Brown recovered and punted it out of the end zone. There just was not enough time for the UMass ruggers.

Earlier on Sunday the UMass B side defeated Brown's B's 16-4, behind touchdowns by Toby Lyons, Larry Tebo and 2 field goals by Doc Laurence.

On Saturday UMass blew out Keene State 27-0 on the fields across from Boyden.

Because Keene State is such a weak team, (in its second season of existence), the UMass A side was made up of some A players and a lot of B players.

Touchdowns were scored by Walter Elsmore, Rick Scarpignato, John Harper and Paul Greenfield.

Scarpignato scored two touchdowns against Keene and kicked for five points on Sunday to bring his total to 46 points. Malcolm Best kicked for 7 points on Saturday to bring his total to 34 points. He is the second leading scorer on the team.

The UMass B side also had easy going against the Keene State A's, who had to play both games. UMass won 26-4 with touchdowns by Father Don Madden, Ed Haine, Chris Walter, John Marrgrardi, and Bob Cabral, and 3 conversion kicks by Dick Halle.

Injuries are taking a heavy toll on the ruggers, and it has probably cost UMass its undefeated season. To date Don Auger, Matt Clark and John Awtrey have been lost for the season. Other injuries have caused players to miss games or to play in games below top efficiency.

On Saturday Tony Cipriani cracked heads with Walter Elsmore. As a result Elsmore missed Sunday's game and Cipriani played with a slight concussion. Paul Greenfield was kicked in the eye on Saturday and played with impaired vision agaifst Brown. Brown hammered him all day giving him fat lips.

The most serious injury was when soccer player Carl Vercollone made a tackle at the end of the first half against Brown. He played the entire second half not even knowing what his own name was.

Next weekend is THE weekend for New England rugby. The New England Rugby Football Union is sponsoring a tournament run by the Springfield club, but played on UMass' fields.

Some of the best teams in New England including the Boston Firsts, the perennial favorites each season, will make up the field of 24 teams. The tournament winner is usually acknowledged as the best team in New England. Watch the Collegian this week for a focus on the entrants and Webb Ellis' prediction of the winners.

No Girls!

YPSILANTI, Mich. (AP) - The Little League office in Williamsport, Pa., today revoked the Ypsilanti Little League's charter because the local chapter put a girl on its roster.

Bob Taylor, local Little League vice president, said the Ypsilanti chapter was advised by telephone that its charter was being revoked, effective immediately, because Carolyn King, 12, is being retained as a team member.

The American Little League prohibits participation by girls.

He said the Ypsilanti Little League would seek a court injunction aimed to halt the action by the national office.

Fencing-Alive & Well In UMass Club

By MIKE ELLIOTT

En garde! Redoublement! Croisee! No, you are not in a French class nor even in Herter Hall; these words are just some of the basic positions and attacks used in fencing.

Fencing is a sport which began in the early 16th century and was revolutionized in 1780 with the invention of the mask. It evolved after duelling was outlawed for the first time in 1480. It was a compromise for those who still had a thirst for duelling but were compelled to obey the law.

There are three divisions of fencing, classified according to the weapon used. The first weapon is the foil. This sword is the most common and the one with which most beginners learn to fence. Another sword is the epee which is more rigid than the foil and has a triangular fluted blade. The third weapon is the sabre which resembles the cavalry sword. Usually a fencer specializes in one weapon and if he is very proficient he can learn to use all three.

Its long history and traditions give fencing a romantic past rooted in the customs of courtesy, which stems from the age of chivalry. Fencing today has become a very modern and athletic sport practiced throughout the world.

Fencing is a sport that is now becoming popular in the U.S. There is even a fencing team on the UMass campus. The team is composed of members of the UMass Fencing Club. Bernie Desautels, club president, talked about fencing as a sport, and the UMass team.

"Fencing," said Bernie, "is a major sport in Europe. It is still growing in the U.S. It is an invigorating sport. Fencing is the only other sport, beside boxing, which uses most of the muscles in the body."

Fencing is a sport for both sexes. Foil fencing is as suitable for women as for men and they can fence together on far more equal terms than is possible in most other active sports. This is because brute strength is no advantage. Fencing is a sport of speed, skill, and finesse.

Desautels said: "Fencing develops quick thinking, concentration, decision-making, and self-discipline. It coordinates mind and body."

Fencing teams are springing up all over the country in high schools and colleges. The UMass Fencing Team has been in operation for less than two years and is farily successful. This year, 1972-73, members of the team have won a combined total of twenty-four medals and trophies, including eleven for first place, four for second, eight for third and one for fifth. These victories also included berths in the National Championships for Sue Uhl and Bernie Desautels in foil and for Desautels in sabre. In one meet, as a team, the UMass fencers finished tenth out of eleven teams with only half of a team.

Desautels, a senior and coach of the team, is proud of his team's accomplishments thus far. He has been fencing for eleven years and has coached at Lenox Prep and Berkshire Community College. He said: "This was our first year of competition and we handled ourselves well; our record proves this. Everyone worked hard and did what was required of them. They drilled and practiced as a team for four hours a week and then worked out on their own. Because of their hard work we have been asked to join the Intercollegiate Fencing Conference."

However, despite their feats, the UMass Fencing Team still goes unrecognized. Not many UMies are aware of a fencing team and said Desautells: "As far as I can tell, (Frank) McInerney (Athletic Director) doesn't know there is fencing on campus." However Desautels admits: "There is room for fencing here and it can survive if we get people who want to fence and are willing to work hard."

Minutemen Teams Face BC Today

Tracksters Host BU And URI On "Senior Day"

By WALT POWERS

Senior Day—The athletes who stick it out for four years in track and field have to have more motivation than press clippings or the applause of the fans. There's nothing exciting about a fifteen mile workout. Practice is tedious and exhausting. Yet day after day they're out there, running, throwing, and jumping, chasing records and victories, and you wonder why.

Tony Pendleton may have the answer "Every race is filled with tension. I'm never sure at the start whether I'll win or even finish. It's all out, all the way, in every race. It's pure competition, man against man, and the feeling I get when I cross the line is the greatest high in the world."

The Minutemen won't have any trouble getting up for tomorrow's meet against Boston College. This rivalry has always been an intense one, and a two point loss to the Eagles last year isn't easily forgotten. In addition, URI will compete in the meet, which starts down at Lewellyn Derby Track at two o'clock.

Boston College will bring some of the most brilliant runners in New England, but they lack depth, and UMass beat them in the BC relays earlier this year. That was at BC stadium. This meet is at home, but Coach Ken O'Brien expects a battle.

"If faced BC and URI in separate dual meets, we'd probably kill both of them, but the strengths of each of these teams will probably neutralize our advantages over their weaknesses. BC's a powerful running team, but weak in the field. Rhode Island is just the opposite. I won't be surprised if the meet is decided on the last event, like it was last year."

What does BC have that UMass doesn't? Three sub—4.14 milers, led by New England champion Jack McDonald. They've got a 50 foot shot putter named Joe Dray, and the unforgettable Jimmy O'Brien, the chief culprit in last year's defeat. He'll run the 220,440, and mile relay. Rhode Island has three fifteen foot pole vaulters and four 220-plus javelin throwers, along with a New England-class long and triple jumper named Mitchell Ford.

If the seniors have their say, though, the meet won't even be close. After all, it'll be the last home meet of their careers. Co-captain Tony Pendleton is praying for a warm, windless afternoon, it'll give him one last crack at the track 220 record. Pushing him will be another New England class 220 man, Dennis Busa, the strongest member of the 440 relay team. Jim Queeney, the starting guard who rounded out his football career at the Boardwalk Bowl, is coming off of his best performance of the season in the javelin.

O'Brien reserved special praise for Steve Levine and Dennis Boisvert "Neither of these athletes came into their own until last year, as juniors," O'Brien noted. "Levine, a two miler in high school, had mediocre seasons as a freshman and sophomore. He was looking around for an event, found the 440, and has improved steadily ever since." A conference runnerup in the 440 as a junior, this year he led the indoor team in scoring, setting the UMass record in the 600.

Boisvert is another story. A sprinter and jumper as a freshman, he caught the eye of weight coach Gideon Ariel in his sophomore year, and started a weight training program that raised his weight from 160 to 220 pounds. With the help of Ariel, a two time Olympian, he developed into a conference runnerup in less than a year. This year he's broken the UMass record twice, and hasn't been beaten in dual meet competition.

White To Fire At Eagles In Boston

By MIKE BROPHY

Tom White will be on the mound for UMass today when they play Boston College at Chestnut Hill. White takes a 3-3 record into the Bean Town and will be looking for his third straight strong performance.

"Tom has looked strong in his last two outings and should be coming on strong going into the playoffs, provided we make them." said Coach Dick Bergquist. UMass is waiting out a possible bid to the NCAA District I playoffs. With their present record of 19-6-1, they stand a good chance of making the tourney and possibly representing the six state area in the College World Series at Omaha.

BC will be starting the strong man of their pitching staff as Bill Royane has collected half of the Eagles' wins this Spring. BC's overall record is 4-10 while Royane's is 2-2. "It has been a disappointing season for BC," according to BC Sports Information Director Eddie Miller, "but we have won three of our last four. The team is starting to jell in the late going."

BC has had overall hitting and pitching problems throughout the season and has been suffering from lack of discipline in the field until last week. Despite coming of a loss to Holy Cross on Sunday, Miller is confident the Eagles can give the Minutemen a run for their money.

Going into this contest UMass has the highest team batting average in the Northeast at .306 with ten batters hitting .316 or better. Steve Newell is leading the pack at .389 followed by Mark Palau at a .340 clip.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

Courtmen Trounce AIC, 8-1

Hard to believe is the fact that A.I.C.'s tennis squad is improving. One never would have known to look at the 8-1 beating they were handed by the UMass netmen. And get this, in upping their record to 9-1, the Minutemen sat out their top six players. Hard to believe?

Mike Philipp, the resident doubles player who is still in search of his serve, romped at first singles 6-2, 6-0. Mark Brass, suffering from mono earlier this season, reversed Philipp's scores as his second singles run-away went 6-0, 6-2.

Then Larry Moses made his varsity debut with a lightening quick 6-0, 6-1 win, after which fourth singles man Tom Fentin made it two singles wins in a row (the first coming against Holy Cross last Friday.)

Bob Serios at five followed suit copying Moses as he won 6-0, 6-1. Finally at sixth singles Allan Ames went the three set route in winning 6-4, 1-6, 6-1.

Doubles combo's saw three new faces, of whom two were members of the varsity hockey team. On top of the doubles heap it was Moses joined by Steve Donahue for the 6-2, 6-2 victory. Down the line, Fentin and Seros won a 7-6, 6-1 decison that was highlighted with some vociferous arguments over line-calling.

Third doubles was the skate-less team who had problems with finishing their match. Unable to complete their position, Don Riley and Jim Lynch forfeited the match and the score was filed as 6-0, 6-0 against them. Coach Steve Kosakowski had a few words on the matter. "They were lost without their skates. They couldn't back-check on those lobs."

Having lost the first set 6-4 before exiting, Riley and Lynch received merciless sarcastic cuts from the lips of Kosakowski. What confused most of the spectators watching the match was the reason that Riley and Lynch kept raising their rackets after each point that they won. They also kept waiting for replacements, looking over at Kosakowski for a breather, but no second stringers were waiting in the wings and Riley and Lynch were forced to go all the way.

While the second squad was making mince-meat of the visitors, the first team was prepping for this weekend's season finale, the New Englands. Tomorrow's match against New Hampshire will be the final tuneup for the hopeful Minutemen.

Benson Elected 1973-1974 UMass Wrestling Captain

The UMass NEUWA Championship team held elections for captain at a recent meeting and Steve Benson, NEUWA 158 poind Runner- up and YanCon Champ was elected as the team captain for the 1973-1974 season.

Benson finished the season 8-4-2 and won the Yankee Conference Tourney and was the Runner-up in the New England's. He wrestled most of the season at 167 and incurred all of his losses at that weight. In the pre-season he distinguished himself by taking third in the Colgate Open and third in the prestigious East Stroudsburg Open.

The Valley Stream, New York native is a very strong individual and good on his feet, but is best known for his excellent leg riding. Steve is also a very good freestyle wrestler, having won the New England AAU's in both Freestyle and Greco-Roman plus taking second in the New York Athletic Club's Tourney. He has wrestled for the NYAC on occasion.

In the awards department Dave Amato, 1973 NEUWA 118 pound champ won the award for the Most Valuable Wrestler, and the Most Pins. Cliff Blom, 1973 NEUWA 150 pound Runner-up, was awarded the trophy for the Most Valuable Freshman Wrestler.

Buses May Go If No Parking Hike

In a surprise performance yesterday afternoon, the Renaissance Arts class, which specializes in renaissance poetry, music, and plays, puts on a show outside Goodell attracting quite a large crowd which seemed pleased with the results.

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

Two UMass officials said yesterday that it was "impossible to predict" what would happen to the federal grant funding the free UMass transit service if the UMass Board of Trustees does not approve controversial hikes in the parking fees on campus.

The Amherst Record, in its Sunday edition, reported vice-chancellor for administrative affairs Thomas B. Campion and William P. Goss, director of the bus service, as saying that if the fee increases were not approved, the federal funding for the service would be lost.

Free bus service and "major revisions" of the university parking policy were two of the pre-requisites for the federal grant, which finances the free bus service to apartment complexes off-campus. The service is paid for by federal funds, the UMass administration, and the Student Senate.

However, said Goss, the lack of parking fee increases with "no other changes in parking policy", would make the continuation of the demonstration part of the agreement "much more difficult."

But, he said, "it does not necessarily mean that to continue the bus service, fees must be increased."

"The university was committed to the principle of the graduated parking fee increase comes because the university is not receiving any state funds to help alleviate the parking situation on campus," Campion added. Fees were set up as a "self liquidating system," he said, to pay for the convenience of parking a car on campus.

Some funds from the increase would go into maintaining and possibly expanding only the bus service to and from the parking areas, but would not go into the maintenance or expansion of any of the off-campus routes or the three Student Senate routes.

The agreement giving the university the funds for the service came in two parts, one for research to fund the free bus service and to measure the effects of it and proposed changes in parking policy.

The second provided funding for the bus service during the spring and fall semesters of 1973. During this time, the government would pay two thirds of the cost of the system, with the university paying the remaining one third.

After the fall semester of next year, federal funding would end, and the university would have to find new ways to fund the system.

The graduated parking fee being discussed prior to the grant as one proposed change in university parking policy.

The bus service, instituted at the beginning of this semester, was expanded to include night service in February. Service for this semester is scheduled to end on the last day of classes, May 11.

Response to the service has been almost entirely favorable, although there have been some complaints about overloaded buses on some routes.

Campion also commented on figures contained in the Record story which said the new parking fees would raise the parking fees from the present $5 per year, to "anywhere between $24 and $125. The average parking fee would be $75."

Campion called these figures incorrect and misleading, claiming the actual costs of the proposed fees would range between $5 and $75. According to Campion, the $125 figure was for a private parking place where no one else would be allowed to park.

He called the proposed fees "convenience fees", above and beyond the basic $5 fee, for which there are a limited number of spaces available. "If a person decides that he wants the added convenience of parking closer to where he lives or works, he may choose to pay a higher fee for parking in the more centrally located area."

And We Have A Winner!

By MIKE TOCCI

The announcer's voice blared over the P.A., as the crowds converged on the victor, "IT'S ALL OVER! IT'S ALL OVER!"

Yes, folks, it is indeed all over, as the competition in the First Annual Central Area Pocket Billiards Challenge Tourney came to a tension-packed finish here in the final matches.

Playing in the muggy, smoke-filled pool room in the Campus Center-Student Union the eventual champion, Richard "Cal" Callery, weathered the pressure and excitement of championship competition to take the crown.

An early favorite for the championship, Callery, who plays out of Wheeler House, outlasted the Tourney's "dark-horse" hopeful, Brian Barry for a tense, but none the less, classic final match.

Barry, who headed a talented contingent from Brett House, made his way to the final match, and a guaranteed second place, by virtue of a tough victory over Steve Thomas, House Champion of Baker.

When asked about his splendid victory, a tired but happy Callery replied, "How much money do I get for this?" which is, folks, the attitude that makes a champion.

The organizers of the Tourney, Central Area's Interdorm Activities Committee, were delighted with the high quantity and quality of the competition here in the Tourney, citing the fact that most of the dorms in the Area were represented. While grateful to the Pool Room and its employees, without whose cooperation the tourney would have been less than successful, the Committee expressed great optimism concerning the future of the Tourney.

"There is great optimism concerning the future of Tourney," a spokesman for the organizers reportedly said, adding, "and anything further is mere heresay."

Callery is schedules to play Campus Champion, Paul Brouilette, in a friendly challenge match. It is interesting to note that Brouilette, Callery, and Barry all hail from Lowell, Mass. which may, or may not, say something for that town.

So as the crowds dissipate into the darkness and the noise slowly dies, this is your man on the street bidding you a good-nite from the site of the First Annual Central Area Pocket Billiards Challenge Tourney.

Emmart Asks Hearing On Tenure Denial

By JOAN FASSNACHT

As reported in yesterday's Collegian, two major issues currently confront the students and faculty of the Department of Journalistic Studies. The controversy centers around Dr. Barney Emmart's tenure refusal and what appears to be the imminent establishment of a self-contained Department of Journalism. These two issues are slated on the Faculty Senate agenda to be discussed at Thursday afternoon's meeting.

During the past few days, MDC interviewed the principals involved, Professors Emmart, Ziff, and Musgrave, all of the Department of Journalistic Studies.

Concerning his tenure refusal, Dr. Barney Emmart, former chairman of the Department, said, "The decision to refuse me tenure was made by people in the English Department who know nothing about journalism. I have filed a formal complaint with the Tenure Grievance Committee but have not been granted a hearing. I am now asking for a hearing from the AAUP."

"I believe that the evidence against me was manipulated to justify the decision. First they said I never let students evaluate my courses which of course, I did. Later they admitted that although I had, these evaluations were neither acceptable nor satisfactory."

Dr. Emmart views Professor Howard M. Ziff's appointment with tenure as "quite unusual."

"Professor Ziff was never interviewed by the Journalistic Studies people—only by the English Department. Neither myself, Professor Musgrave nor Professor Politella were consulted. In fact, I had recommended another person."

Professor Musgrave also opposes Ziff's plan for a separate department. Said Musgrave, "The point is that Professor Ziff wants to substitute vocational courses for the extra-curricular program. I think it will be a real disaster."

Professor Howard Ziff, present head of the Journalistic Studies Department, offered his opinions on the article appearing in yesterday's Collegian.

When asked about his intention to establish a self-contained Department of Journalism, Professor Ziff said, "I haven't even made a formal proposal. I intend to think about it a lot over the summer. I will have to go through the proper channels which will take time."

Although he would like to see vocational courses included in the curriculum, Professor Ziff said that research courses would not be eliminated. Said Ziff, "Vocational is used pejoratively by Dr. Emmart. If it means that students are better prepared, I'll accept it."

Professor Ziff also disputes the statement that he was hired in order to run the co-curricular Journalism program here. "I came here to evaluate it, not to run it. I also found it to be not very good."

Ziff went on to say, "I would like to see a Department of Journalism here. However, I don't know where they got the idea that it would be similar to those at midwestern universities."

In conclusion, Professor Ziff stated, "The co-curricular tutorial program does not exist here anymore. It is not realistic, and does not give a true test of journalism aptitude."

THE FINISHING TOUCHES being put on the Fine Arts Center on what will someday be a sun terrace. The structure is close to architectural completion with just the final trimmings left to be done on the outside. By the time we come back in the fall it should look finished from the road with such changes as: a complete landscaping to the surrounding yard; a lawn planted with some shallow reflecting pools on the SBA side; and last but not least that fence will be taken down.

The center is tentively scheduled to open in October or November with operations beginning possibly by the start of spring semester '74.

No Quiet In This Library!

By MARY MULLOY

The University Day School is currently experimenting with a new means to provide toys for children-a play library.

Betsy Pelz, Director of the Day School, and Janice Rewak, a senior undergraduate in the School of Education undertook the project last February to provide children ot students with a wide variety of stimulating toys on a temporary basis.

The Play Library is located in the basement of Farley Lodge and operates on Monday afternoons from 1:30 to 3:30 and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9:30. A membership fee of one dollar per year is required of each student, but groups who participate will be charged five dollars, regardless of size.

Derry Beul, the present librarian says that the play library offers "much creative and well-made play equipment that people ordinarily wouldn't have in their home. The toys, purchased primarily from Child Craft include climbing equipment, games, puzzles, manipulative toys, building blocks and rhythmic instruments," she said.

Funds for the Play Library were appropriated by the Graduate Student Senate and the Commuter Assembly for this year. The Undergraduate Student Senate has pledged $1500 for next semester.

The organizers hope that the library will stimulate children to form play groups. Future plans include forming a toy trading box where second-hand toys can be brought in and exchanged for different ones.

UMass Professor Wins Pulitzer

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Maxine Kumin, a former visiting professor at UMass, has received the Pulitzer Prize for poetry for her book, "Up Country", a collection of forty nature poems.

"Up Country" is Mrs. Kumin's fourth volume of poetry. She has also written three novels, and a fourth, "Robinowitz-Robinowitz", which will soon be published. Her prize-winning collection of poems comprises a "bonney stare" at life around her farmhouse in Warner, New Hampshire as seen by the natural inhabitants.

Mrs. Kumin, who taught "Creative Writing for Poetry" here this past fall under the M.F.A. program, described her reaction as one of "stunned belief".

Following her stay at UMass last semester, Mrs. Kumin took a leave of absence and went to Center College in Kentucky where she resided until February. Since then, she has returned to Newton where she plans to continue her writing.

Concerning her future plans, Mrs. Kumin said, "I don't want to let this prize change my lifestyle. I do plan to do more teaching in the future, preferably in the Boston area."

Belchertown: Not A Nice Place To Live

By MARK VOGLER

"Belchertown State School is not a nice place to live. . .I know because I've been there."

Richard J. Hanlon, Jr., has shaped this view in restrospect after nearly three decades of first-hand experience at the state school for the mentally retarded - he was an inmate there for 27 years.

In the five years he has been out, Hanlon, 47, has had time to think about his being institutionalized for most of his adolescence and much of his adult life.

"It's too bad I didn't have somebody with a brain and a typewriter, ...I'd write a book. . .I'd call it Belchertown State Concentration Camp," he told a reporter.

Robert Agoglia, unit coordinator at the school, said that Hanlon was admitted during an era when Belchertown was used as a "dumping ground for kids".

"Up until four years ago there were a large number of residents, of the 1500 we had, who perhaps should not have been placed here," he said.

"As to how many people like Richard Hanlon - are left here now, I'd say there are very few in that category. Once the direction of the institution changed to community residences, these are the types of people who would go first. Today, we have 950 residents."

While conditions at the state school have improved since his release in August 1967, Hanlon believes the state could spend more money on medical facilities.

"That isn't to say that all of the residents there could be helped. . .some are too far gone. But maybe if the state stopped putting so much money into highways, we'd be better off.

"After all, what is more important? Highways or human lives?"

A product of a broken home, he was admitted to Belchertown State School in June 1940 at the age of 15. From a family of 10 children, five others beside Hanlon had been committed to Belchertown. Counting the mother, there were seven members there at one time.

ATTY. EDWARD M. O'BRIEN of Easthampton, a member of the Governor's Council, lived next door to Hanlon at the time of his admittance to the state school - and was an "old friend" whom Hanlon sought when he returned to the community.

"It's awaful hard to determine whether Richard was fit or unfit for a place like Belchertown," O'Brien said the other day.

"He did have a literacy problem, and there also wasn't a very good home situation back in the 40s. Many people were in hard times and they didn't have all the alternatives we do today."

Belchertown and other institutions served as poor houses for "broken-down" families, he said.

AT BELCHERTOWN, he said, he learned to read by looking at comic books. Hanlon reads newspapers regularly now, he says.

At the school he learned some of the skills of two trades. Hanlon worked in the school bakery and also did some plumbing. He now works as a janitor for an Easthampton warehouse.

Hanlon has received no monentary compensation for the time he spent at Belchertown. He is ineligible for welfare because his monthly earnings surpass the state maximum of $180, but not by much.

From his $67 a week, $14 goes for a one-room apartment in an old Northampton house where he does all his own cooking.

"BUT IN MY OPINION, he's doing quite well for himself today," Atty. O'Brien says.

Here's a guy who spent a good part of his formative years in an institution, separated from the rest of society. And he has come out of it remarkably well."

C.C. Needs More Info, Less Staff

This is the second part of a two-part series on the operations of the Campus Center and a recent consultant's report on the operations of the center. Today's article deals with the report's suggestions about the food service operations in the center, and a suggested shopping mall.

By SHARON HUGHES

A recently released study on the Campus Center reports that in order for the CC Food Services to "realize its full income potential," it must adopt new policies to cope with the tremendous shifts in volume imposed by the academic calendar.

The Arthur D. Little (A.D.L.) study computes that the CC Food Services Department should show a $220,000 profit at the end of this fiscal year (June 30 '73). Food Services is only budgeted to show $103,000 in income suggesting "at least $100,000 in unrealized income could be obtained should new policies be adopted," according to ADL.

They also suggest the Campus Center and the Student Union expand their retail services by leasing space in those two buildings to outside retailers to create a shopping mall. ADL outlined "one possible configuration" which would convert the music and reading rooms in the CC into a bank and convert the Blue Wall (cafeteria and bar) into a drugstore.

The suggested new policies include:

a greater reliance on part-time employees including the conversion of three administrative and 15 classified staff positions that are now full time into part-time positions

Also, it notes 10 positions, currently 12 month apoointments, that could be made nine month appointments. ADL estimates this change in labor force structure could save $50,000.

—information "needed to effectively manage the Food Services operations is not currently collected." For example, the Blue Wall does not account for the kegs of beer sold in relation to the number it orders. Tightened accounting procedures would indicate which individual food operations are losing money —profit should be calculated on an hourly basis and costs broken down by product line, (sandwiches, coffee, soft drinks, etc.)

Discount Dropped?

—elimination of the student discount at the Top of the Campus (TOC) could reduce the TOC yearly deficit (estimated $40,000) to a $10-15,000 deficit if sales are also increased —TOC membership fee ($.95 students, $5 non-students) be eliminated. ADL calculates that revenues derived from the fee are "insignificant" when compared to business lost by non-members who might otherwise use the facilities;

—TOC should employ a full-time manager (Maitre'D) to increase business by devoting time to building a clientele for a restaurant and controlling labor costs;

—TOC decor described in the study as "stark" and not "sufficiently hospitable" should be "softened";

—"imaginative merchandising" such as "special" beer or pizza nights might be instituted to increase revenue —capitalize on the 18 years of age drinking minimum by increasing drinking facilities offered —range of food services available and hours they are offered should be more closely matched with the demand for them.

Assistant Director of CC Food Services, Anthony J. Leslie, said the ADL study "brought the problems that should be solved right to the foreground". Leslie, although assistant director, has in fact been assuming the duties of director since Michael S. Egan resigned from the position last April 1.

In reply to the suggested change in labor force structure, Leslie said, "We will work at restructuring our staff the way A.D.L. recommends through employee attrition."

He said he recognizes the department does not have the demand to retain their current number of employees, but as far as shortening 12 month appointments to 9 month ones, he said, it will be "almost impossible to find people to accept a 9 month job."

Food Services Department currently employs 225 part-time students and 100 non-students. At the Blue Wall, all employees are students. Ten work part-time, and one works full time.

Leslie said that if any department in the CC has a tight accounting system, "we do." He said that each area has a weekly sales breakdown of food and labor costs and a monthly statement including all other costs (such as overhead).

Cost Analysis

Also, he said, the department "already has a cost analysis by hour and by product line "and they used that information to determine when to cut the Hatch's hours and if the coffee shop could pick up the additional business without strain.

"I feel we should keep a student discount but not the 20% discount which has proved unworkable," he said. He calls the discount "unworkable" because it is across the board for all products, a beef dinner as well as a chicken dinner. But to eliminate the discount altogether, given the rising of prices of food, would "raise the price so high we'd be pricing ourselves out of business," Leslie said.

He favors a differential student discount, anywhere from 7%-40%, depending on the item as proposed by the Food Services Committee of the CC Governing Board.

Leslie said Food Services went to the Student Union Governing Board (SUG) over a year ago to request a full time manager position for the TOC and six months later the request was still buried in the SUG Board. Three weeks ago, he appointed a manager but he will only keep that position for the balance of the year.

If a new Maitre 'D is hired next year, it will be through the joint effort of the CC Director, Continuing Education the Board of Governors and himself, he said.

"If we are going to do anything with the Top we will have to change the decor." Presently, it is almost non-existent," he continued.

One of the major problems with the Top of the Campus, he said, is that it services "diverse desires") 50% of its customers are students and the rest are conferees, staff, faculty and Administration. "It is difficult to find a plan to fit all three."

As far as special "beer and pizza nights" Leslie did not appear enthusiastic. He said they have been tried before, but he prefers promoting areas by offering a variety of good and inexpensive entertainment.

Hatch Renovation

Leslie favors the renovation of the Hatch ("it is in desperate need of renovation") and the construction of a bar in the back. The Board of Governors has allocated money for the construction of the bar but has not yet approved a plan for renovation.

The bar could be built this summer and completed by the start of next semester except "it's hard to find a contractor to work indoors during the summer," Leslie said. Construction of the bar may be delayed until the winter or until Christmas vacation.

Attempting to match operating hours with the demand for services, Leslie said the Top of the Campus will be closed this summer, during Christmas vacation and during intersession.

ADL reports there is "considerable opportunity" to expand retail services into other areas of the CC and Student Union (SU). ADL states the most promising approach for offering these new revenue-producing services is a shopping mall with space being leased to outside merchants for specialized retail operations.

They outline the following contiguration as "possible":

--the music and reading rooms off the lobby of the CC would be converted into a bank;

--The Blue Wall cafeteria and bar would be converted to drugstore, moving the Blue Wall operations into the back of the Hatch

--in the mezzanine of the Student Union, a number of specialty stores, such as a package store, a key and shoemaker shop and others would be blaced.

Leased Space

ADL recommends leasing the space to outside retailers rather than the CC attempting to run it, the advantage of leasing out the space being it would increase the revenue potential of the center without "greatly increasing the managerial requirements or risks" according to the study.

The estimated value of lounge space on either side of the SU (Colonial Lounge & Cape Cod Lounge) would be about $3-4 per square foot and that or possibly higher in the CC with the implementation of the shopping mall. Converting lounge area to retail space could another $75.00 in income, according to ADL.

The retail concept is heavily favored by the student body surveyed by ADL (95% were in favor and none were opposed. Also a majority of University employees surveyed supported the idea.

To implement the shopping mall, they suggest the CC engage another professional "as a consultant to help in the establishment and negotiation" of the mall.

Coming-The C.C. Mall?

The Arthur D. Little study of the Campus Center suggests revenue can be increased by expanding the retail services in the Campus Center (CC) and Student Union (SU).

"One possible configuration", according to ADL, would be to convert the music room and reading room in the CC into a bank, and convert the Blue Wall cafeteria and bar into a drugstore.

In the mezzanine of the SU, a number of "specialty" stores such as a key and shoemaker shop, and a package store would be placed.

A "trade-off" decision would have to be made about the lounges areas in the CC and the two lounges on either side of the entrance to the SU (Colonial Lounge & Cape Cod Lounge) ADL calculates those areas are valuable retail space, but students view them as valuable studying socializing space.

Watergate Disclosures Continue

(AP Wirephoto)

Former Aid Colson Aided Senate Race

By H.L. SCHWARTZ III
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Charles W. Colson, the former White House aide whose name increasingly has been linked to the Watergate-Pentagon papers case, played a behind-the-scenes role in administration efforts to defeat a key Democratic senator during the 1970 elections.

William G. Lambert, a former investigative reporter for Life magazine, says Colson helped him obtain information for an article that detailed an apparent conflict of interest on the part of former Sen. Joseph Tydings of Maryland.

Tydings says the article, which appeared 2 1/2 months before election day, contributed to his defeat by Republican J. Glenn Beall.

In an interview, Tydings accused Colson of using the Maryland race as a "dry run" for political espionage tactics that allegedly became widespread by the 1972 elections two years later.

Colson, who resigned from the White House staff earlier this year to re-enter private law practice in Washington, could not be reached for comment.

Colson acknowledged to state Department investigators in 1970 that he helped Lambert locate an important source for his story and that he himself had been looking into it as early as December 1969.

Lambert's August 1970 article traced Tydings' investment in a company called Charter Co. which benefitted from Agency for International Development loan guarantees during the time Tydings served in the senate.

The key point in Lambert's story was that Raymond Mason, president of Charter and long-time Tydings friend, took Tydings to the office of an AID official in December 1964 after Tydings was elected but before he became a senator.

An application for $7 million in loan guarantees was pending at the time and subsequently was approved in May 1965.

Lambert quoted Paul Bridston, an AID official, as giving conflicting versions of the meeting, including the comment that Tydings had "made a pitch" for the Charter loan. But in a private memo to Colson and in interviews with AID investigators, Bridston said that Tydings had said "something like 'whatever you can do to help my friend Raymond Mason would be appreciated.'"

Colson acknowledged to AID investigators that he helped Lambert get in touch with Bridston. He also said that he had become aware of Tydings' investment in Charter the previous December and had made further inquiries about it.

Lambert told the Associated Press last week that Colson did not give him the original tip. He said the tip came from a "fellow journalist."

Dean To Talk On Nixon Link

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Ousted White House counsel John W. Dean III will be subpoenaed and required to testify before the Senate Watergate Committee on his reported claim that he can link President Nixon to the scandal's coverup.

Dean will be granted immunity to gain his testimony if he invokes his right against self-incrimination.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., the committee chairman, said Tuesday he will not decide whether to call the President to testify "until some reason to call the President is known to exist." He added: "So far I have no information the President was personally involved."

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler was asked Tuesday whether a broad White House denial of presidential involvement in Watergate was intended to include a denial of awareness of any coverup.

The statement, issued Monday with Nixon's concurrence, had said "any suggestion that the President participated in any coverup activity or activities is untrue."

Ziegler said he could not go beyond the statement, but added the language "was not chosen to draw a distinction between participation and awareness."

The Watergate story continued to develop on Capitol Hill, in the Justice Department, in the Pentagon papers trial in Los Angeles, the State Department and in the federal courthouse in Washington.

Ziegler said Nixon was devoting very little time to the various investigations but he is "spending a good deal of time" on restructuring his White House staff, shattered at the top by resignations.

Asked about a report that the President once had wondered aloud whether he should resign, the press secretary said: "I have never heard him wonder that out loud."

The seven-member Senate committee voted Tuesday to grant testimonial immunity to Dean and at least five others should they invoke their constitutional rights against self-incrimination.

The hearings are scheduled to begin May 17. The committee voted to subpoena Dean, fired April 30 as Nixon's official lawyer.

It was learned the Justice Department was asked Monday to waive a rule requiring 10 days notice by the committee that it intends to ask immunity grants. The department was given six requests for waivers.

Under testimonial immunity, a witness cannot be prosecuted for what he admits. But it does not prevent prosecution on evidence gathered independently of his testimony. A federal judge issues the order compelling a witness to testify after application by the Justice Department.

Sources close to the committee said the leadoff witnesses will be Bernard L. Barker, Eugenio R. Martinez, Frank A. Sturgis and Virgilio R. Gonzalez, four men from Miami who were arrested with James W. McCord Jr. inside the Watergate offices of the Democratic Party. The four will be interviewed by the committee staff Wednesday.

Also on the tentative witness lists are E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy. The Miami men and Hunt pleaded guilty at the start of the Watergate trial to conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping. McCord and Liddy were convicted of the same charges after trial. Hunt already has been granted immunity by Chief U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica.

Wounded Knee Siege Ends

By JOHN LUNDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)- Federal officers fired five volleys of gunshots from within Wounded Knee on of this historic hamlet. The occupation had resulted in the deaths of two insurgents and the wounding of nine persons, including two federal officers.

The U.S. marshals and FBI agents who had stood watch over the village since the Feb. 27 takeover, often trading gunshots with the militant Indians within, secured the four-square-mile area after the insurgents laid down their weapons.

"The U.S. marshals are celebrating the retaking of Wounded Knee," came the words over a police radio network after the volley of shots from a hillside near the Sacred Heart Roman Catholic church.

Federal officers transported everyone from the village and said permanent residents would be allowed to return on Wednesday after a thorough search for weapons, explosives and "evidence of criminal activity."

Deputy Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Hellstern complained that the agreement calling for dispossesion of all weapons "has been violated. They just turned in a lot of old crap, old shotguns and rifles. The weapons turned in certainly were not all the weapons in there."

The American Indian Movement AIM led the takeover on a cold winter night more than two months ago, but none of the AIM leaders was in Wounded Knee to surrender the village Tuesday. Three leaders had previously been arrested and charged and a fourth, Dennis Banks of Minneapolis, apparently slipped out of the village Sunday night, Frizzell said. He said Banks had promised to surrender at Rapid City, S.D., later this week.

The confrontation lasted until the very end.

Hunt Given Viet Cables

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department Tuesday confirmed that Watergate figure E. Howard Hunt Jr. was given access to cables dealing with Vietnam in September 1971.

Charles W. Bray, the department press officer, said Hunt was allowed to read the cable traffic to and from Saigon at the request of David Young, another Watergate figure who served on the staffs of both foreign policy adviser Henry A. Kissinger and White House domestic adviser John D. Ehrlichman.

The cables covered the period April through November of 1963. Hunt said in an affidavit released in Los Angeles at the Pentagon papers trial of Daniel Elsberg that he doctored cables covering that period to implicate the Kennedy administration in the murder of South Vietnamese leaders in 1963.

U.S. Consul Released; Guerillas Get $80,000

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP)—An $80,000 ransom was paid for the release of kidnapped U.S. Consul General Terrance G. Leonhardy, a Mexican official said Tuesday.

Gov. Alberto Orozco Romero said the money was delivered to the guerrilla kidnappers on Monday to meet at 5 p.m. EDT deadline. The ransom money was borrowed from a bank, and Leonhardy is responsible for repayment of the loan, Orozco Romero said.

The kidnappers apparently demanded the ransom money in a telephone call to the diplomat's wife.

The money was an additional demand made by the guerrillas. The Mexican government met initial ransom demands of freedom and safe conduct to Cuba for 30 persons jailed in Mexico.

"Thank God," were the 58-year-old career diplomat's first words as he entered his home at the end of the three-day ordeal. He embraced his wife. He was tired, but in good health.

Leonhardy was released late Monday night and telephoned to his home from a tavern. A consulate car was sent to pick him up.

Mexican authorities launched a nationwide manhunt for his abductors following his release. A spokesman for the Mexican attorney general's office said federal, state and local police as well as political and secret police and the army are searching for the kidnappers. Gov. Orozco Romero said he could not reveal all the details of the ransom payment. He said the money was borrowed from a local bank through the intervention of the state government.

"I hope the United States won't let the Leonhardys get stuck for the repayment of the loan because they actually are responsible for the money," said the Jalisco State governor. In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles W. Bray declined to comment about the incident. However, Bray reiterated U.S. policy against payment of any ransom to secure the release of abducted American diplomats. The United States has never paid ransom to win a diplomat's freedom, it is understood.

The governor apologized for denying before Leonhardy's release that the kidnappers had made additional demands.

"When the kidnappers didn't keep their word after the first demands were met we had to take every precaution to protect the consul's life," he said. "Sometimes I had to lie."

The 30 persons exchanged for Leonhardy's release arrived in Cuba early Sunday morning.

Cease-Fire Ordered In Lebanon

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - President Suleiman Franjieh ordered an immediate cease-fire Tuesday night to end the savage fighting between army troops and Palestinian guerrillas, and he appealed to both sides to observe it.

Franjeih conceled air strikes that had pounded guerrilla positions throughout the day after new fighting broke out Monday night.

The president's order, broadcast by Radio Beirut, said the cease-fire "will give joint commissions a chance in the next half hour to start work on assuring the enforcement of a final cease-fire."

Franjieh acted after meeting with Arab mediators and envoys seeking to end the conflict which broke a shaky four-day truce.

The outbreak of fighting prompted the government to declare a state of emergency and censorship was imposed on news reports published at home and sent abroad.

Because of the censorship many details of developments in Lebanon were not clear.

Report Says Hunt Asked CIA Help

LOS ANGELES (AP) -Governement documents turned over in the Pentagon papers trial today confirmed reports that convicted Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt sought Central Intelligence Agency help in a White House investigation of the Pentagon papers case.

But the documents say Hunt's requests eventually were refused because they "appeared to involve the agency in domestic clandestine operations."

The information came in a report titled "Knowledege of CIA Assistance to E. Howard Hunt."

It gives a chronology of Hunt's contacts with the CIA during the summer of 1971 just before the burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

According to the memorandum, Hunt visited Robert E. Cushman, then deputy director of the CIA, telling him the meeting involved "very sensitive operation by the White House" that should be "held a very secret matter."

According to the report, Hunt was provided "alias documentation and physical disguise...a wig, glasses and a speech alteration device."

He also was said to be given a tape recorder, business cards and a concealed camera.

The memo said that on Aug. 26, 1971 Hunt asked the CIA to develop some film for him. Hunt reportedly took pictures of the psychiatrists's office before the burglary Sept. 3.

On Aug. 27, the report said, further assistance to Hunt was denied because "his requests had gone beyond the original understanding.

Furthermore, they appeared to involve the agency in domestic clandestine operations." The report said Cushman notified the White House, and Hunt was restrained from further CIA contact.

The information was corraborated in a second document handed over today in which the names of two CIA agents were stricken apparently to protect their current aliases.

Earlier, the defense team in the Pentagon papers trial told the judge it believes that President Nixon is personally involved in "impeding the delivery of evidence to this court" and that Nixon could be called to testify.

Attorney Leonard Boudin latter told reporters that the defense wanted to notify the judge that Nixon "is a potential witness," but said they had no plans to try to subpoena him as of now. "I don't think we need him," he said.

Charles Nesson, a lawyer representing Daniel Ellsberg,told the judge that based on news reports, it appears the President discouraged the Justice Department from telling the court here that Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt and G. Gordon Liddy were involved in a burglary of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

"Is Mr. Nixon different from some other man who would impede the turnover of evidence to this court." asked Nesson. "...If this were some other person...this person would be called to the stand and questioned."

He said that the President obviously has 'given notice" that he will invoke executive privilege if questioned about any Watergate involvement.

The New York Times reported in today's editions that, according to a source close to the case, Nixon twice invoked national security in initially seeking to prevent release of details of the break-in of the psychiatrist's office.

"I've never heard of executive privilege protecting the President from inquiry in crimminal actions," said Nesson.

He cited the judge's meeting with then presidential adviser John Ehrlichman, in which U.S. District Judge Matt Byrne was approached about taking the job of FBI director.

Byrne has said he met Nixon briefly.

"When you were called to San Clemente and offered a job and given the hand of the President," said Nesson, "I think he told you at that point in some symbolic way where his presidency was at...

"I think the present question is whether Mr. Nixon will be told where the judiciary is at." As Nesson concluded, Ellsberg's chief attorney, Leonard Boudin, arose and told the judge the defense will submit to him legal precedents from draft evaders' cases in which judges issued posttrial opinions indicating that "the Predisent is liable for subpoena of the court."

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla.—SKYLAB REHEARSAL—Skylab 1 astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Paul J. Weitz and Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin (front to back) leave their crew quarters to board a special van for the eight-mile trip to the launch pad today. They boarded their spaceship atop a Saturn 1B rocket to participate in a countdown exercise, the last major test before the launching of the unmanned Skylab station May 14. The astronauts are to be launched May 15 to link up with the station for a 28-day stay.

Skylab 'Counts' To Begin

By PAUL RECER
Aerospace Writer

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)- Twin countdowns start Wednesday morning as workers prepare for the launches next week of Skylab, the nation's first space station, and of the three-man crew which will live aboard the orbiting laboratory for 28 days.

The space station, a 118-foot craft packed with scientific experiments, is schedules for launch Monday. A powerful Saturn 5 rocket will drill it into a 270-mile-high orbit of the earth.

On Tuesday, astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Paul J. Weitz and Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin will ride a Saturn 1B rocket into space. They'll rendezvous and dock with the unmanned Skylab seven hours latter and move into the space station the next day.

The lengthly twin countdowns begin at 2 a.m. as power is allowed to surge into the Saturn 5 rocket, the same type of booster used to send men to the moon. Six hours later, the Saturn 1B is powered up.

Most of Tuesday will be spent on communications checks and a monitoring of the hydrogenoxygen propellant systems which guide the rockets.

The Skylab 1 crew continues last-minute preparations for their mission at the Johnson Space Center in Houston. They're to spend Wednesday morning working in a Skylab simulater, practicing the operation of scientific experiments they will control in space.

Conroad, Weitz and Kerwin are in a medical quarantine at Housten. They are living in a three-bedroom trailer set up in a space center building. The astronauts, who started the quarantine April 24, are prevented from coming into contact with any but a select group of people. Doctors said the purpose of the quarantine is to avoid exposure to any disease which could sicken the crew during the mission.

The astronauts will leave Houston on Sunday, flying their own T38 jets to Patrick Air Force Base near Cape Kennedy. The quarantine will continue in crew quarters here.

Skylab is schedules for launch at 1:30 p.m. Monday and the crew will be launched the next day at 1 p.m.

Nixon Urges Unified Disaster Activities

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -President Nixon urged Congress Tuesday to consolidate federal disaster assistance programs and try harder to protect people and property against floods and other natural catastrophes before they occur.

His idea is to combine responsibility for the multibillion-dollar problem under the Department of Housing and Urban Development. More of the cost would be shifted to state and local communities, and possibly to the victims themselves.

"While we cannot fully control the occurence and the impact of disasters, we must do all we can to prepare for them, to prevent them, and to mitigate and remedy their effects," Nixon said in his message.

There were 48 disasters in 1972, he said, including Tropical Storm Agnes, which ravaged seven states. Spring floods and tornadoes this year already have brought tragedy to many parts of the country.

The proposed Disaster Preparedness and Assistance Act would be intended to:

-Standardize benefits for disaster victims.

-Improve execution of the assistance program.

-Prevent the misue of benefits.

-Strengthen preventive measures to minimize future losses.

-Increase the role of state and local governments in carrying out the disaster program.

It also would require the purchase of disaster insurance by individuals, businesses and even state and local governments where such insurance "is reasonably available, adequate and necessary as determined by the President."

Today few occupants of disaster-prone communities have such insurance.

Nixon stressed the increased role of state and local government in the management of disaster funds, in making grants of up to $4,000 each to needy disaster victims, removing debris and resteoring streets, bridges, utilities and nonprofit educational and medical facilities.

Nixon said he is asking Congress to appropriate $250,000 to each sate "to help it increase its disaster preparedness and assistance capabilities."

The program:

-Permits total federal funding of emergency assistance required for life saving, public health and safety upon the request of a governor and without a formal disaster declaration.

-Establishes a single disaster loan and loan guarantee program for individuals, permitting guaranteed loans to be made by local banks. This eliminates the present "red tape" process of applying to the Small Business Administration.

-Authorizes loans of up to 10 per cent of a local town's annual operating budget to help meet expenses created by a disaster.

Former Sergeant Major Wined And Dined To Pokey

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A former sergeant major of the Army, convicted on conspiracy charges, testified Tuesday he helped rake off hundreds of thousands of dollars from service clubs by wining and dining anyone who might interfere with or investigate the operation.

Former Sgt. Maj. William O. Wooldridge said so many high-ranking officers knew about thefts from slot machines and kickbacks in Germany, Vietnam and the United States that the Army decided to suppress any investigation.

In testimony before a Senate government operations subcommittee, Wooldridge acknowledged being the highest-ranking person among about a dozen senior enlisted men who controlled illegal profits from service clubs for over a decade.

Wooldridge agreed with a subcommittee staff report that while assigned to the 24th Infantry Division in Germany he was provided "with a style of high living that included fine foods and liquors and the favors of German postitutes."

Wooldridge said when he left Germany he accepted $2,500 in cash and a new car from a sergeant in the military club system there.

In later assignments at Ft. Benning, Ga., the Pentagon and Vietnam, Wooldridge admitted using his position to control the assignment of complaint service club sergeants and to cover up any investigation into their activities.

Wooldridge, along with three other sergeants, agreed to testify publicly for the first time, pending their sentencing on conspiracy convictions by a federal judge in Los Angeles. All pleaded guilty to charges of conspiracy to defraud the service clubs.

One of the others, Sgt. William Higdon, testified at the committee hearing that he stashed $300,000 in kickbacks in a Swiss bank account. He declined to say what became of the bank account.

Higdon and another sergeant, Seymour Lazar, said the single most corrupting influence in the club system was slot machines. The Army has ordered slot machines from its clubs. They remain in clubs for marines and sailors.

The sergeants all said it was the system of allowing untrained non-commissioned officers to run club operations worth millions of dollars which encouraged corruption.

"It's been going on since 1776," Lazar said. "It just gets more exotic all the time."

Plan For Gas Allocation Readied

WASHINGTON (AP) A Nixon administration spokesman said Tuesday the government hopes to have ready within a week a plan for allocating gasoline supplies among refiners and distributers.

The plan, which was ordered by Congress, is being rushed to completion because of the need to guarantee adequate supplies of gasoline for planting and harvesting in the farm belt.

William E. Simon, deputy secretary of the Treasury and chairman of the government's oil policy committee, said a purpose of the plan is to "share the shortage" so that even though gasoline supplies are in short supply, everybody would be short by the same amount.

He said gasoline inventories are down about 12 per cent from last year, but said there should not be a serious nationwide gasoline shortage this year.

Simon said the gasoline allocation program will be voluntary, but he said it could be made mandatory later. Public hearings would be required for a mandatory program.

"A serious part of the discussion is whether to make the program voluntary or mandatory," Simon said.

He said it had not yet been decided how to administer the program at the local level, whether through the states, major oil refineries or distributors.

One proposal is to ask major refiners to make any cutbacks in their normal allocations of gasoline on a uniform basis, rather than give priority to some customers, such as their own outlets.

Simon said, however, the program probably would not help independent gasoline stations which have been hard pressed to stay in business in many cases. He said independent stations benefited from oversupply of gasoline but "now there is no oversupply."

He also said he would favor some temporary lowering of speed limits as a way of conserving gasoline. For example, he said the savings of gasoline at automobile speeds of 50 miles per hour is about 24 per cent over 70 miles per hour.

Old Deerfield: 300 Years Of Heritage

By ALAN CHAPMAN

Three hundred years ago, on May 7, 1673, 'liberty of a township' was granted the proprietors of Pocumtuck by the governors of Massachusetts. Since then the name has been changed to Old Deerfield and today plans are being made to celebrate the towns tercentennial during the week of July 1.

The purpose of the celebration is to recognize the achievements of the pioneers during the three centuries gone by. Ironically, some of the most noted aspects of its history deal with the achievements of the Indians in the massacres of 1675 and 1704.

1675 was a bad year for corn all along the Connecticut Valley. The militia had been called in from Boston to bring supplies to the western part of the colony and were resting along their way at Muddy Brook, near what is now South Deerfield. Suddenly shots rang out and when it was over, only a few survivors remained to bury the dead. The name of the stream was changed to Bloody Brook and a monument in rememberance of those killed can be seen near Frontier High School in South Deerfield.

Less than thirty years later a band of Abanacy Indians in connection with the French-Indian War stormed the old stockade, carried 112 captives to Canada and left 42 dead. They were buried in a common grave which is noticeable as a small hill behind Deerfield Academy. The settlers lived under constant threat of attack until the 1740's when a peace treaty was finally signed.

Today, Old Deerfield, located just a few miles up Rt. 5. is quiet and refined. The historic houses lining the main street all have a story of their own and seem sheltered and tucked away from the rest of the countryside.

Clockwise from top left: Indian House Memorial, a reproduction of the original house which withstood the attack in 1704; Tercentennial torch in front of Deerfield Academy; Main Street Old Deerfield; Hall Tavern which served travelers in the 18th and early 19th centuries, seen through the door of the Old Deerfield Post Office; The First Church of Deerfield seen from two spots.

Off-Campus Programs To Receive Credit

In order to facilitate the granting of university credit for knowledge gained through field experience, the Amherst campus is establishing a new course, "UMass 200, Practicum, 1 - 15 credits". The intent of this course is to provide a vehicle for accommodating such off-campus programs as ACTION and Outreach, which previously have been recorded on students' transcripts as departmental Special Problems courses.

Approval for practicum credit would normally be based on the student's ability to place his or her proposed experience in the academic context of at least one designated pre-course and at least one designated post-course. These two courses would help a student both analyze and integrate the practical experiences. The total plan requires a description of the proposed experience, agreement between student and faculty sponsor regarding the amount of credit involved, a designation of the pre- and post-courses, and an explanation of how the experience and the courses relate to each other.

In addition, the plan has to be supported by 1) a field sponsor who would provide a certification of the nature and extent of the student's activities by writing a report on the activities; 2) a faculty sponsor who, though not responsible for "directing" the project, would be encouraged to meet in the field with the field sponsor and the student and would be required ultimately to evaluate the project and to certify whether or not practicum credit would be awarded; 3) the faculty sponsor's chairman or department head, who would attest to the faculty sponsor's availability and competence regarding the project in question; and 4) the respective academic dean, who should evaluate the student's progress toward a degree, the appropriateness of the student's progress, and the student's eligibility (e.g., normal guidelines subject to exception, would require a student to have completed 45 hours toward his/her degree with a c.p.a. of 2.0 or better). The Dean then authorizes the student to elect up to a maximum of 15 hours of practicum credit, this election to be recorded on the student's transcript for the appropriate term(s), carrying an indefinite "Incomplete" until a grade is reported by the faculty sponsor. A special Authorization Form is being designed and will be distributed to the Undergraduate Counseling Office of each academic dean in the near future. A grade may be delayed up to one year after the course has been elected. Normal tuition rates apply.

Upon completion of the pre-course(s), the experience, and the post-course(s), the student submits to his faculty sponsor a request for the agreed upon practicum or university credits based on a number of hours of involvement. This request should be accompanied by a paper relating the experience to the content of the pre- and post-course. (An oral presentation to the faculty sponsor and two of his or her colleagues from the pre- and post-courses could be substituted for the paper). The faculty sponsor then either awards the amount of credit previously agreed upon or informs the student that the student's integration of experience and theory had not been satisfactory. If the student disagrees with the faculty sponsor's conclusions, he or she may revise or elaborate on the original paper or presentation until the parties agree that the credit has been earned, or the student may submit the decision to binding arbitration of an ad hoc appeals committee composed of 1) an academic dean, 2) a faculty member agreeable to both student and faculty sponsors, and 3) the student's field sponsors. When the faculty sponsor is ready to make a formal recommendation for credit, he or she would simply file a grade card, listing the total number of credits, with the Registrar. All practicum credit will be designated "UMass 200" and will be awarded on a pass/fail basis.

This new course will be available beginning with Summer, 1973, and will be given for a trial period of two years. The council of undergraduate deans serves as a reviewing board. No later than Spring, 1975, this council will have to submit a progress report to the Faculty Senate Committee on Academic Matters.

Hispanic Dept. To Offer MA

A master of arts degree in bilingual-bicultural studies will be offered by the Hispanic languages and literatures department at the UMass with courses beginning this summer.

The Hispanic languages and literatures department will add Portuguese courses in the fall, in addition to existing courses geared toward the Spanish-speaking community. Fall course will be offered evenings to accommodate teachers who wish to enroll.

Summer courses, which will begin June 26 with registration June 25, will include these for graduate and undergraduate credit: literature of Puerto Rico, teaching Spanish to Spanish-speakers, structure of modern Spanish, language and culture of Hispanic groups in the U.S., advanced composition, teaching English to Spanish-speakers.

Offered for undergraduate credit only: oral Spanish, intermediate intensive Spanish, and elementary Spanish.

The master of arts program is designed for teachers in bilingual classrooms, and for persons involved with other needs of Spanish-speaking communities. Of the 36 credits required for the degree, 15 may be in courses chosen by the student and his adviser.

Summer session pre-registration deadline is June 11, with the Registrar's Office for undergraduates. For graduate students: Graduate School, Graduate Research Center.

Further information about the program is available at the Hispanic languages and literatures department, Herter Hall, 4th floor.

It's not the same crowd down at the beach.
And it's not another teen tour through Europe.
It's India.

Summer in India is quite different from any summer you've spent before. And roundtrip economy airfare from New York is only $475.*

It's mornings riding through the countryside of a 5000 year-old civilization. Stopping in the villages. Coasting down to seaport cities like Bombay. Bargaining in the marketplaces and then lunching with your guru. It's afternoons hiking to the hilltop fort at Amber. And finally, pulling into Jaipur at dusk in time to see the sun set. We'll rent you a car if you like, so you can discover India at your own pace. And if you're interested in earning credits while you live and learn, we have seminar tours, too.

You have the whole beautiful summer ahead of you. Make it an Indian summer.

Canada Bars Supertankers

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - An aide to the Canadian Minister of Fisheries and Environment, Jack Davis, said in Ottawa Tuesday Davis "certainly would prohibit" if possible the use of Canadian waters by supertankers destined for a proposed oil refinery for Eastport.

The spokesman said Davis "is categorically against" plans by the Pittston Co. of New York to build a $350 million refinery on Moose Island in the town of Eastport at the Maine-New Brunswich border.

Library Fund Cuts Hits Disadvantaged . . .

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Libraries across the country dimmed their lights Tuesday in a symbolic protest over funding cutbacks that could mean the end of a wide range of programs, particularly in disadvantaged areas.

The demonstration was sponsored by the American Library Association to protest the elimination of federal funds that paid for things like bookmobiles, after-school tutoring programs and bilingual projects to help minority groups.

Sarah Case, assistant director of the Washington, D.C., branch of the Association, said the federal budget for fiscal 1973 included $140 million for libraries; the proposed budget for fiscal 1974, she said, includes no money for libraries.

Miss Case said that although federal funds represented only a tiny amount - less than five per cent - of the total budget for the approximately 12,000 libraries in the country, the money was important because it "encouraged states and localities to work up innovative programs."

Revenue-Sharing

She disagreed with claims that the slack would be taken up by money from revenue-sharing programs. A preliminary survey, Miss Case said, showed that "primarily, libraries are not getting this money."

Why a "dimout"? "It's symbolic," Miss Case said. "Sort of turning out the lights on the public's right to know."

In Detroit, the cutback will mean elimination of at least one of the city's three bookmobiles and curtailment of a program at the Detroit House of Correction.

Clara Jones, director of the 30-branch library system, said the lights in the reading rooms of all the branches were turned out at noon for a brief period and a statement was broadcast over the public address system explaining why.

She said the city library system get about $1 million or one-tenth of its budget from the federal government last year. Some revenue-sharing funds are available, she said, but distribution is uneven.

A similar situation exists in the 75-branch Chicago Library system which turned out its lights for 15 minutes and substituted candles.

The Rockford Ill. Public Library distributed several thousand cardboard bookmarks with the slogan: "Dimming the lights on the public's right to know" and an explanation of the pending cutbacks.

Losing $1 Million

Herbert Matchler, director of the 63 public libraries in King County, Wash., which includes Seattle, said the area was losing about $1 million in funds previously used for building projects and special services to the blind, the handicapped and the elderly.

A spokesman at the Atlanta Public Library said most public libraries in the metropolitan area and some universities took part in the dimout. The cutback would mean a loss of $42,000 for Atlanta which was spent on materials, bookmobiles and other programs for disadvantaged neighborhoods.

The spokesman said lack of money also would curtail building and expansion of libraries by at least 50 per cent.

The Weber County Library in Ogden, Utah, substituted kerosene lamps for electric lights in lounge and lobby areas and planned to keep the lighting low all afternoon and evening.

. . . And Special Services

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Library officials throughout New England say announced federal cuts in library aid will hit hardest at special library services.

An Associates Press survey taken Tuesday showed that not all the region's libraries participated in a national protest against the cuts, although all library directors contacted said they supported the protest.

Libraries across the country dimmed their lights Tuesday as a symbolic protest against the federal cutbacks.

Philip J. McNiff, director of the Boston Public Library, said there was no dimout, but he said the libary was "backing the protest on the reduction of funds.

Would you like to continue your Health Care at the Health Services this summer?

The University Health Services will provide continuing care to those students who will be in the Amherst area during the summer. Services may be obtained by electing one of the two options enumerated below:

OPTION A: Return the tear-off sheet at the bottom to the Health Services Business Office with a check in the amount of $30.00 payable to the University of Massachusetts. Payment of this fee will entitle you to receive the same services that are provided under the regular health fee at no additional charge for the entire summer. Services include unlimited physician consultation, nursing services, lab, x-ray, medications, 24-hour emergency care, inpatient care on campus, and mental health consultation. (Those attending Summer School need only send $12.00, as the Bursar will bill them for an $18.00 Summer School Health Fee.) The enrollment period for this option will close on June 15.

OPTION B: Any student who has paid the Health Fee this past year may receive care at the Health Center on a fee-for-service basis. You will be charged for each visit ($10 for an M.D., $5.00 for an R.N., etc.), as well as for all other services and medications you receive.
NOTE: The Student Health Insurance will not reimburse you for services received at the Health Center, except for emergency treatment resulting from accident or injury. There is no need to enroll for this option, but we would appreciate your returning the tear-off sheet with this option checked in order that we may have some idea of the number of students that may be utilizing this option.

Name Student #

Option A ( )
Please enroll me in the University Health Services Prepaid Summer Program. Enclosed is my check or money order payable to "University of Massachusetts" in the amount of $30.00; $12.00 if attending Summer School.

Option B ( )
I plan to request services as needed on a fee-for-services basis.

Things I Don't Like

This is not a "farewell" editorial. Unfortunately, I still have two more years to go at this place, and I'm not doing anything special over summer vacation. Even if I was, I don't think I'd write about it.

Frankly, I don't see what everybody's getting so choked up about - I mean, this place isn't so great. All week, people have been writing about the good things they're going to miss when they graduate. What about all the bad things? If you're going to talk about a place, you might as well do it completely. So I decided to write my editorial about all the things I don't like about UMass.

Concerning the University itself, I don't like: required courses that nobody really wants to take but everybody takes them anyway; the high-level bureaucracy that makes everybody flounder through endless rolls of red tape; Lego, who goes around tagging everybody's cars in the still of the night; the filth in the Campus Pond; classes in the School of Agriculture; the computer; the Student Senate; Yahoo; and the tremendous apathy and non-involvement that permeates the UMass atmosphere.

After spending a year in Southwest, I don't like: the Dining Commons food which is the subject of much discussion and regurgitation; the wind that's forever blowing in the area, especially in the winter; the cold barren atmosphere of cement; the Southwest Assembly; the Broadside; and the amazing impression of being confined in a densely populated slab of concrete.

Taking the student body into consideration, I don't like: people who cheat on exams; people who won't let you cheat on exams; students who walk right in front of your car when you're cruising down No. Pleasant St. at twenty miles per hour; people who always seem depressed and sneer whenever you say something happy; people who knock on my window (which is on the basement floor of Mackimmie) and ask me to let them into the dorm; people who are always stoned; people who are always straight; people who are always telling me what I should write my next article on; people who throw beer bottles out the windows at the top of the towers; people who are always asking me for a cigarete, even though I don't smoke them; people who are always "horsing around" and people that don't "horse around" at all; and just people in general, which there are too many of at UMass.

Come to think of it, I could go on for days about the things I don't like about UMass. I could tell you about some things you wouldn't believe that happen every day here. I could tell you about pollution in the environment and in the administration, and I could tell you about some of the people involved.

So with all the things that are wrong about UMass why does everybody get so sentimental when they leave? After all, this has only been their home - through good times and bad, through accomplishment and frustration - druing the most productive four years of their lives. It's too bad that nobody realizes this until it's all over, and the remnants and reminiscences of four years are all that's left.

So instead of farewell, I'll say good-bye and see you again next year.

P.S. I don't like finals.

No Highway Signs

There is still a lot left to say, and I hope I've left to say it. Hopefully not with words, but in any case, no longer on these pages.

There are still eighteen credits between me and expulsion. Maybe I'll give them a try next fall. One there was no doubt about it; I could enroll for any semester any time on the pretext that "my mother will flip out if I don't finish." It was a handy excuse, and absolved me of the responsibility of my own decisions. Well, Mommy has announced that it's too late, I've already flipped her out, and I should get a job. My last excuse is gone; I am free to stay or to go.

It isn't that I won't be coming back to school; five years isn't nearly enough time to amass that many credits. The well, though, is drying up. As one learns to place more value on each word one sends out, it becomes harder to justify a steady stream existing for the sake of the sound of its echo. I suspect I've said too much too quickly. (I certainly haven't said too little too quickly, or too much too slowly, or nothing in all the time in the world, or everything in no time at all). Words have a way of wearing out.

This past semester I have been to perhaps 15% of my classes, studied for twelve hours total, and been out of town much of the time. Had I learned nothing, I would regret the loss of an opportunity, but it has been replaced largely by another, trickier process, one of learning how to live my life, and with whom to live it. It's started to fall together now. Writing has been neglected, and I cannot honestly say I believe the words not written are missed. Collegian political comment is ineffectual, and any other type of column must be written with the assumption that one can somehow tell something to someone. When pinball machines are the topic, then maybe I can, but there doesn't seem to be any more reason to presume I should tell people how to live or how to think, the two major strains in my Collegian writing. There are some things I have learned of late, some of which I would like to share, but I will no longer proselytize on any behalf. With the exception, of course, of right now.

Do not ask questions to complicate matters, nor to reinforce your own prejudices. Question for clarity and simplicity, keeping confusion to a minimum.

Regain your curiosity. Too many people seem to me to be afraid of, or indifferent to, that which is new to them. Remember that the best is yet to happen, or it may never happen.

Like people who like you. It's not their fault.

Waste no time protesting the fraudulence of Buddha, or Christ, nor any "prophet." Ask instead if the followers are faithful to the prophet's words. Actions speak more clearly, if not louder.

Always be kind to your friends. Be there to laugh with them, to cry with them, to be their audience, or to do five minutes of anything.

Do not forget your means while accomplishing your ends. The process is in the end more important than the result. Life flows, it does not jerk, and orientation toward goals disturbs the flow.

Until the big polluters get theirs, try not to litter, lest you be a hyprocrite.

Trust your own judgments until or unless you are shown the error in them. Titles do not confer wisdom, and wisdom certainly doesn't confer titles.

The grass may not be greener elsewhere, but there's a damn good chance that it either gets you higher or is blue. Get out and step around a bit; it will air out your mind.

Don Glickstein says that Rich Dinkin and I are still truckin' down the road, and I'm glad to say we still are. I can't speak for Richie, but I'm more interested in the process than in any goal, and I intend to keep on truckin'. Hoa binh.

Sunset Saunas

Frank asked me to take a sauna with him one day in February. I'll admit I was a bit apprehensive at first. I mean the thought of me, who puts on long underwear when the temperature drops one degree below sixty, running around in three feet of snow after the sauna was totally beyond my powers of comprehension. But I'll try just about anything once, so I went along for the experience.

I think that I'm addicted to saunas.

For me, the sauna (which, by the way, is pronounced sow-na) experience has been two fold. Not only have I reaped some of the physical benefits from bathing a la Finn, but I've also met some very interesting people as well.

The physical benefits are numerous. Profuse perspiration relieves nervous tension, anxiety, pressure and pre-occupation. Sauna baths envigorate the entire body, yet relax it at the same time. Since I've been partaking in this new found luxury, my tolerance level toward the brisk New England elements has increased. I managed to get through the winter with only two of my usual three sweaters underneath my jacket. Jim wears only a thin denim jacket during the winter months, and I've seen Tom wearing socks only when it was snowing outside. Saunas are the best known method of cleansing the skin. Take a look at a real sauna freak and you will see his complexion glowing beyond his physical self. Sleep is deeper and sounder after a sauna because the bath relaxes the mind as well as the muscles in the body. And, for the well-padded individual, heavy perspiration induced by the sauna will help to shed a few excess pounds by alleviating the all common excess bodily fluids.

Aside from the physical benefits, the sauna is also a social experience. At Tom and Jim's place, where I find myself running to nearly every weekend, the ritual of the sunset sauna sometimes takes the place of having guests at the house. It is quite refreshing to acquaint yourself with new people once they are stripped of all material facades. I guess you could say that you actually get to know people for themselves that way. On several occasions I've bumped into a few people who have asked "Gee, didn't I meet you in the sauna?" My usual reply is "Yeah, I thought I've seen you before, but I really didn't recognize you with your clothes on." For those people into sensitivity, the sauna is the perfect place. To massage your friend's back while participating in the sauna is as envigorating to you as it is to him. Frank made the mistake of asking me to take out all my aggressions on his back while beating him with birch leaves (which stimulates the circulation). He never thought that I'd take him seriously. One of the best saunas I have ever taken included eight of us in a circle, massaging the person in front. For me, it was some of the best sensitivity training that I've come across.

O.K. I've said enough about how great saunas are, now I guess I should tell you where they are. Well, I know of just a few. Tom and Jim would probably invite you to their sauna, if you ever get a chance to meet them. A quick note, though, if you do run into them, you might wind up helping to make maple syrup. Or, if you know someone at Lewis House you could probably persuade them to let you take one there. Or, if you can find the athletic building at Amherst College you can sauna with the football team. Rumor has it that eventually Pierpont will be building their very own sauna. But then again, rumor has it that everything will eventually happen in Pierpont.

So do yourself a favor. Find out just how good the Finns have it. If you're into your body at all, then put it into a sauna.

Letters To The Editor

Richard M. Nixon And King George III

To The Editor:

The irresponsible actions of the President of these United States and the abuses of his office can not but relate to those of King George III, whom our illustrious ancestors did rebel against. The continual acts of corruption by his administration and those of this present government cannot be but contemptuous to the American Peoples. Too long have the failures of the Republican system of governing led us to acts contrary to the nature of our established Union. The only way for this nation to survive lie in the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy and the authority of the Declaration of Independence. The policitical gymnastics performed by munipulation of the constitution show clearly its failure. A time has come, in these days of political abuse and corruption to restore the promise of our revolution. America has been bought off, and revised by the chicanery of political/economical opportunities not interested in the good of the peoples of this nation but solely for their own benefit. The concept that this a Union of people representing various ways of life, living in coexistence, out of the need for mutual defense, assistance and co-operation would have prevented the occurance of racial strife. The ideas represented in OUR Declaration of Independence would have brought our nation a long way in peace and prosperity, not only financial, but moral as well. There should be no conflict of political solution, but rather the tolerance of that system best suited for that group of peoples by whom that system has been adopted. This no longer a nation of opportunity; this is a nation of people who are bought and sold and told what to do, when, where, and how. No longer a free people, but a people who have surrendered to authority and obedient to a governing power that WE are supposed to control. We were to determine the will of this government, not the government to determine our will for us. Our Revolution sought to terminate the terrible system of European authoritarianism, but in reality we have only transplanted it. If not else let the voice of the American Peoples be heard by demanding new elections and the impeachment of the President Richard M. Nixon. If he is involved, his means of authority are corrupt and munipulative; if not, his irresponsible action in the choice of administrative assistence shows incompetence. This is your nation; you pay its taxes, fight its wars, serve its economy; you do all but see to its administration, your most important responsibility. American peoples unite, this is your contury. Restore the power of authority return Democracy, end European traditional authoritarianism. The Declaration of our Independence should be our guide, the confederation of our peoples must be re-established; an American Peoples Union, not a republic. We are several people not one, we are free, not serf.

Spiritual Orgasm

To The Editor:

Are your interested in achieving a true piece? Are you interested in one half hour of true bliss? A chance to forsake all earthly cares, a chance to meditate on truth and knowledge? A chance to get your rocks off?

Guru Maraha Zi offers you the chance for these and other metaphysical experiences and pleasures for a mere stipend. As the moon spins round the axis of pleasurable knowledge, so too spins the mind of venerable Guru Maraha Zi. Yes, you too can share in this blissful escape from the trials and tribulations of sexual frustration. Yes, Guru Maraha Zi offers you a journey into a heretofore totally unknown cosmis dimension: SPIRITUAL ORGASM!

You're wondering why Guru Marana Zi is risking his life and limb to bring you the chance for true and perfect redemption. It all started back in Cleveland, Ohio two years ago, when Guru Maraha Zi was thirteen. For on this day, May 9, 1971, he first found enlightenment in the quick snap of his metaphysical wrist. Yes, and Guru Maraha Zi wants to spread this divine and perfect knowledge and sensation to all of the world, no holds barred.

For the paltry sum of two million lira ($20 American) Guru Maraha Zi will reveal to you and bless you with the secrets of his faith. One half hour is all it takes. For an additional small token of appreciation, Guru Maraha Zi offers a lifetime membership in the Green Light Club, and a special bonus, a secret decorder ring. As a revered disciple of Guru Maraha Zi once spaketh, "He who walks softly carries a big stick." Shhhhhh!

Watergoss Caper

To The Editor:

The first crack in the Watergoss caper appears in Sunday's Amherst Record. Apparently the need and urgency for the massive parking fee increases was because this was a condition for the grant which provided Federal Funds for the campus bus system.

Are the Board of Trustees going to rubber stamp a commitment of a year or so ago by the University Administration to substantially increase parking fees? Petition the Board of Trustees to turn down this raid on the pocketbooks of the University Community and let the sponsors of this miserable project fund some other means to take their ego-Trips.

Clarence Hunter

Amateurish Attempt

To The Editor:

Fiction for today - The University "Proposal for Transportation - Parking System, Amherst Campus". Read this amateurish attempt to justify the parking fee increases and then read the May 6 Sunday Amherst Record wherein William Goss, project director of the campus bus system says that if the parking fees don't go up federal funding of the bus system will be withdrawn.

Not only did the University Administration attempt to cover up this fact in their presentations to employees, faculty and students but they also attempted to keep this vital item from the Board of Trustees. Shades of Watergate.

By, About, And For Women

To The Editor:

It seems obvious to me that the Women's Movement is concerned with women's rights and issues. If it were concerned with peace, it'd be called the peace movement. If it were concerned with human liberation, it'd be called by that name. If it were concerned with men's issues, it'd be called the Men's Movement. There are women in the movement who also work for some, all, or none of the above (and many causes not mentioned), but feminists know that before we can have peace or human liberation we must liberate ourselves. So, when one talks about the movement or feminism, one is talking about women—a movement by, about, and for women.

Why? You see, it's happened in the past that our rights and goals have been subverted to other movements and to the men in power. When we worked in the Abolitionist movement and said how about including women in the 14th Amendment, the men said not now. When we worked with the New Left and asked about women's rights, the men said not now. When we went to live in communes and asked about women's peace of mine, the men said not now. So, we continued to sew, cook, type, fuck, make coffee and work for the other half of the population. Now that we've taken matters into our own hands and have decided to fight for our own rights, the men are saying what about their rights, and we're saying not now. Clearly, if there are men who are sympathetic, who want to support our efforts, we thank them. It's also clear that we don't want their leadership; we don't want to be sidetracked again.

The reason why some of us choose not to support men superstars or leader-types, self-made, who claim to be for women is that we've very capable women leaders, that we want our own women heroes. (You see, our history and self-worth had been kept from us as well as our rights). It can also be noted that because a man speaks for birth control and abortion issues doesn't mean he's for women's rights. There's such a thing as favoring birth control "cuz" it allows one to fuck without worrying about increasing the population. That clearly doesn't suggest one's support of women's rights, and doesn't address itself to the quality of the relationship.

There've been numbers of women jailed in every kind of movement from labor to peace to the women's movement. There've been a number of women, unknown to most of us, who've paid the very high price of dying, being maimed, being raped, being beaten because they are women. We're aware of and feel the pain of those jailings and beatings, and we're also aware that we must work to change them, to defend ourselves, to make damned sure it doesn't happen anymore. We're the victims and have been for centuries. Nobody gave us a medal, and we don't have time to pin it on.

Now I hear things like we envy penises, all we need is a good lay or shrink to straighten us out, we're not oppressed and aren't we sick malcontents? Yep, we're sick—sick of back alley abortions, sick of fighting for everyone else's rights while ours are being denied, sick of being cheap labor and unpaid house servants, sick of being raped, bullied and assaulted.

It's funny that men who've never listened or wanted to listen to us are still trying to tell us who and what we are, what we want and need. There's no one but a woman who knows those things, and that's why there's a movement by, about, and for women.

P.S. for men who're really concerned with the structure of society and how it oppresses men also, get in touch with the Men's Resource Center, Thurs. 7:30, Amh. Common School, 253-2591.)

Twinkies, Anyone?

To The Editor:

We, the Undersigned, are the present members of RSO #777.7, the UMTG (UMass Twinkie Givers). We would like to point out an error in the editorial by Jerry Lazar.

TWINKIES go to those people who qualify for one of three reasons: 1) Voting in favor of a bill which would screw students, 2) Voting against a bill which would be either righting a wrong or helping students survive on this campus, or 3) Following a program which is grandly reminiscent of His Highness way down South in D.C. (no, not the Dining Commons). F'rinstance, Dr. Gage was a prime candidate for one when he announced the parking schedule, but he did not stay long enough to receive that coveted award.

Jewish Anti-semites

To The Editor:

I wish to make a few comments about "Eric Coldman's letter of May 1. There are enough awkward falsehoods about Jews in the letter to arouse the suspicion that it was not written by a Jew, as is claimed. If this is the case, then it is in the tradition of such hoaxes as "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion" which, in the apt phrase of a recent book about the "Protocols," turned out to have been a "warrant for genocide." If the letter was indeed meant to fan the flames of the unmistakably smoldering antisemitism on this campus, then, to judge by other recent letters, there are indications that it may succeed.

But let me respond to the "Goldman" letter under the supposition that it was written by a Jew. Jewish antisemites are not only the worst, but morally the most despicable. They are despicable not only because they are the least vulnerable enemies of the Jews, but because in this way they are the least vulnerable enemies of mankind. What is the task of the Jews? It is to bear witness to truth and justice in a world that is unredeemed with respect to truth and justice. But what justice, what truth is served by identifying Jews, because of the accident of their "color" with historical forces of injustice? In this respect, Jews had been the "blacks" in "white" society before there had been blacks amongst whites. And in this country, individual Jews and Jewish organizations have initiated, with great risk to themselves, the fight for the equalization and liberation of blacks, in some cases long before most blacks had had sufficient hope, and the courage that is born of hope, to do so. Moreover that initiative was often productive of such hope and courage. It would be ironic if the Jews, who were the first to caution against accusing "The Germans" of the destruction of the European Jews, were to be blamed, by Jews, for the sins of "The Whites." Jews have been literally crucified for the sins of this world much too long. It is abhorrent that a Jew should participate in this crucifixion. And the reason is that this does not constitute bearing witness to justice. Action does, not rhetoric, and not violence, and not false accusation, and not false self-accusation.

That Jews can be human, all-too-human, can be a shattering experience, especially for another Jew. That many American Jews appear to be more determined to pursue the pleasant benefits of modern life than to engage in their historic task may be a cause for concern. Yet the balance sheet of Jewish performance is reassuring, and the younger Jewish generation tends to be sensitive to the task of the Jews.

Most of them know of Israel's problems of ingathering populations from the many nations where Jews have been dispersed for so long; they also know with what concern these problems are being solved.

They know how more like "whites" are the few "blacks" who confuse strident rhetoric with the travail of justice and who supplant effective liberation with the hatred of a vulnerable though successful minority; but they also know that the vast mainstream of blacks laboring for justice and equality with the patient impatience of reason need and want the continued dedication of the Jews. Theirs is the common cause of self-assertion born of a sense of freedom that does not require for its realization the destruction of someone else.

They know that the precious remnants who are gathered in Israel must defend their very existence with the force of arms against forces that are planning the Second Holocaust. They know how at the time of the attempted enactment of the Second Holocaust in 1967 the mighty powers stood by to let it happen: they remember the treachery of the USSR, the duplicity of France, the moral weakness of India, and again the silence of the Christian churches. They also know that Israel has done more for Arabs than Arabs have done for themselves. They know that while Arab countries have driven out the Jews—200,000 Jews were driven from Iraq where Jews had been for 2700 years, twice as long as the Arabs—the Jews pleaded with their Arab neighbors to remain in Palestine. And they are beginning to know— as blacks ought to know—of the traditional Arab contempt for blacks and the recent wholesale slaughter of blacks, particularly in the Sudan.

Jews are commanded to fight for truth and justice. Untrue and unjust "self-accusations" are not productive of truth and justice, Mr. "Goldman."

Washington Representation

To The Editor:

In November, 1972, almost every United States citizen over eighteen years of age was able to vote for local, state and national government representatives. But 800,000 citizens, 70% of them black, are still denied this fundamental right because they are residents of Washington, D.C. This city has a larger population than ten states. All the duties of citizens are required of D.C. residents—paying local and Federal taxes, serving in the armed forces—but they have no control over how their tax money is to be spent, no voting representatives in Congress to work for their interests.

All Washington's local ordinances, even the city's budget, are acts of Congress, in which Washington is represented by only one non- voting delegate. Washington's Mayor and City Councilmen are appointed by the President of the United States with the consent of the Senate. The League of Women Voters is again this year working to get self-government (which would be an act of Congress) and full Congressional representation (which requires a Constitutional amendment) for Washington, D.C., residents. We need your help.

The bottleneck for passage of such legislation has been the House of Representatives. The only citizens who suffer second-class status, Washington's residents, are the only citizens who have no voting representation in Congress. You have. Write to your Congressman (and to Rep. Charles Diggs, Chairman of the House District Committee), House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., 20515. Tell them you would like Washington, D.C., residents to be given local self-government and full representation in Congress. Citizen pressure from outside Washington on Congress is necessary to get for Washington's residents their long-overdue rights.

Amherst League of Women Voters

Student-Teachers' Lab Fee

To The Editor:

We would like to dispute the $30.00 lab fee for all student teaching candidates. We are led to believe that this fee is being used to defer expenses of supervisors and advisors who have to travel outside the UMass area to reach their interns. Because we are all interning in the Amherst area, most in the Mark's Meadow School at the School of Education, our supervisors are down the hall from our rooms. Should we therefore have to pay for the 25% of the interns teaching outside a 40 mile radius from UMass? It was our decision to teach in Amherst and it was their choice to intern outside this area, in some cases outside New England. Let the people who cause these fees pay for them! We believe there should at least be a graduated fee. This would let the people who use it pay for it. If this is absolutely impossible (why?) at least give the various Amherst intern programs the money collected from their interns to use for their benefit, not for someone 500 miles away. Someone who signs up for the off campus internships should expect to be somewhat responsible for these extra fees, but for the 75% of us who are interning in the Amherst area to pay the same lab fee we feel is infair. We are sure that the people responsible could come up with an alternate plan if they tried

What Did You Drink?

To The Editor:

If you were at the Blue Wall Saturday night (May 5) would you please answer the following questions and send your reply to Paula Stamps, Draper Hall?

1.) What did you have to drink at the Blue Wall? (Please list as completely as possible, including how many of each drink).

2.) What time did you have your first drink?

3.) What did you have to eat while at the Blue Wall?

4.) Did you get sick Saturday night or Sunday?

5.) If yes, at what time were you first sick?

6.) Please list all your symptoms and indicate how long each lasted.

This is simply an effort to discover whether a significant number of people were ill after being at the Blue Wall. We would certainly appreciate your replies as soon as possible. Thank you.

Water Conservation Decisions Studied

A UMass research project to investigate decision-making processes related to water resource planning, development, and management in the Connecticut River Basin has been approved by the Office of Water Resources Research in the Department of the Interior.

A federal grant of $80,784 has been awarded to Professor Bernard B. Berger, Professor Warren Litsky, and Edward R. Kaynor, who jointly filed the research proposal with OWRR last year. Professor Berger is director of the Water Resources Research Center at the University. Mr. Kaynor is joining the center as research associate. Professor Litsky is chairman of the department of environmental sciences at the University.

The project, entitled "Determination of Decision-Making Processes in Water Resources Planning and Development: the Connecticut River Basin," will analyze major water resource uses in the basin and will assemble detailed data on such uses from initial concept through the planning and implementation stages to project completion.

At each stage, the investigators hope to reconstruct the sequence of decisions and the special conditions that influenced the decision- making processes. It is becoming increasingly clear that these conditions are obscure and poorly understood and therefore constitute troublesome barriers to advancement of socially desirable programs.

"Too often," says Professor Berger, "current assumptions on decision-making lead to short-cutting the complex job of gathering specific date essential to the actual process of making decisions. The result is an apparent penchant on the part of many workers in the fields of the administrative sciences to build idealized models of institutional arrangements best calculated to produce optimum decision-making.

"This is fine," he continues, "but in real life situations such models are difficult to put into practice, and seldom work as theoretically expected. There is a growing need for a better understanding of the way decisions are actually reached. This is especially true for the Connecticut River, the primary focus of water resources concern in New England."

Mr. Kaynor will devote full time to the project, scheduled for completion in June, 1975.

Hey UMies-It's Bar-B-Q Time

The biggest backyard barbeque of the season will take place at UMass on Thursday, when the Food Services staff plays host to some 8000 guests.

This is the day the five dining commons close and the 8000-odd students who hold meal tickets gather in the park area north of the stadium, where four 35-foot barbeque pits are fired up. Food is served from 4:30 to 7 p.m.

Before the party ends 3600 pounds of barbequed chicken, 16,000 rolls, 8000 ice cream cups and 8000 turnovers, gallons of beer and soft drinks and uncounted potato chips and beans will have been consumed.

The whole afternoon dining commons crew—157 people plus student workers—turns out to do the serving. This is the seventh year of the traditional barbeque. As in past years students who don't have meal tickets and others who want to attend may buy a $2.50 ticket and be served. In case of rain the picnic moves inside but in past years this has never happened.

This year the Boston musical group Axe will play.

Health Care In China

Frances Crowe, peace activist and feminist will present the Dr. Joshua Horn videotape on "Health Care In The Peoples Republic of China" tomorrow evening at 7:30 in the Pierpont House (Project 10) Main Lounge.

Dr. Horn, a British surgeon who lived and worked in China from 1954 to 1969, toured the United States in 1971 speaking on medical achievements in the Peoples Republic of China and how these relate to the ideology of the Chinese people. Dr. Horn, author of Away With All Pests, an examination of medical achievements in China, says the videotape shows the overall struggle to build socialism in China is reflected in the relationships among people within the hospital and between the hospital and the community.

Sleep at the school of your choice this summer.

As you've probably learned, college can be a good place to sleep. With this in mind, beds have been reserved at selected schools and hotels all around this country, Canada, Puerto Rico, Jamaica and Mexico.

$5.25 reserves a bed for one night at more than 30 colleges.

All you have to do to reserve one is drop by any Eastern Ticket Office, plunk $5 and a quarter on the counter and ask for a Bed-Check. Once you have it, you also have a bed for one night, from June to the end of August, at one of the selected colleges or hotels. If no bed is available in the dormitory, you'll be put up someplace just as good at no extra cost.

And at most of the schools, the $5.25 may also entitle you to tennis courts, swimming pools, cafeterias and other facilities.

If you're interested in more than just a one-nighter, you can buy a book of Bed-Checks and any you don't use can be turned in for a complete refund. (Ask to see the North American Student Center Hostel Guidebook, available at Eastern Ticket Offices, for more details.)

So whatever your plans are this summer, a good night's sleep in a friendly place among friendly faces is always a nice way to end a long day. Or to begin one.

Call Eastern Airlines or your travel agent for more details. And inquire about Eastern's "Part of the Earth Catalogue."

Skimping On Sewage-How To Save Water

The Amherst Board of Selectmen is distributing a flyer designed to encourage residents to "Skimp on Sewage." The flyer requests residents to reduce water usage and to allocate water usage to certain times of the day in an effort to ease overloading of the sewage treatment plant.

The flyer, produced on re-cycled paper, specifically asks residents to help the environment by:

1. Reducing the water used by toilets by either placing a brick in the tank or by bending the rod downward.
2. Running washing machines and dishwashers during the middle of the day or later in the evening. The treatment plant handles peak flows from 6 to 8 a.m. and from 4 to 6 p.m. Water usage at other hours helps to even the load at the plant.
3. Not wasting water by running partial loads in washing machines or dishwashers. And by reducing the usage of garbage disposals, which greatly increase the load on the sewers.
4. Running washing machines only on weekends if possible. Especially during the school year, sewage flows are heaviest Mondays through Fridays.
5. Repairing leaky faucets.
6. Taking showers instead of baths.

The flyer will be inserted in all water bills sent out by the Town for the next three months and will also be sent home with every school child. Volunteers are helping with the mailing. The Board of Selectmen will request the help of landlords in distributing the flyer to each tenant in the Fall.

The program has been endorsed by the Amherst Environmental Concerns Committee, the League of Women Voters and the Sierra Club.

London Cabbies Like To Paint

By HUGH A. MULIGAN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - When a London cabbie isn't ensnared in rush hour traffic or cruising for a four-pound airport fare, he likes to paint the little brook a'gurgling and daub away at golden Van Gogh skies.

This passion for the pastoral, for seascapes and lonely moors, is the dominant theme of the London taxi drivers' art exhibition this week at a hotel in the Strand.

The more than 100 canvases shown by 36 mobile Michaelangelos mostly have titles like "Serenity," "Summer Flowers," "Village Church," "Dune," and "Peaceful Sailing." They draw their inspiration from bosky dells, woodland ponds, even Venetian canals far from London's maddening traffic.

There isn't a single taxicab, rampant or couchant, in the whole exhibition, which runs along several corridors of the hotel, and there's only one London street scene: a quiet residential square significantly devoid of traffic and utterly virginal of parking meters.

Driver Bill Eales showed several sensitive ink sketches of St. Paul's and Tower Bridge as seen from the Thames embankment. He confided his big push toward an art career came from four American tourists.

Baha'is Present Books

Ten more books will be included in the move from Goodell to the new library this summer. The books, containing teachings of the Baha'i faith, were given to the library last week by Baha'is of UMass and the Pioneer Valley. From the left: Siegried Feller, chief bibliographer; Jan Simonds, UMass student; Nat Rutstein, representative of the Baha'i Amherst Assembly; and Wanda Harmsen.

Attorney For Students

Court Benefits Tenants

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Massachusetts tenants are beneficiaries of a recently decided case in the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Boston Housing Authority v. Hemmingway, 293 N.E. 2d 831 (1973). In a lengthy opinion, Chief Justice Tauro for the majority, reviews the history of landlord-tenant law. The conclusion of the Court substantially alters the legal theory of landlord-tenant agrarian law which has stood with few changes since William waded ashore in England fresh from Normandy's beaches.

The Court's opinion is worth reading.

The proposition that is now the rule in Massachusetts can be stated as follows:

In rental of any premises for dwelling purposes, whether by lease, written or oral, for a specific time or at will, there is an implied warranty that the premises are fit for human habitation.

The effect of such an "implied warranty" is that at the inception of the tenancy there are no latent or patent defects in facilities vital to the use of the premises for residence purposes and that the condition will remain so for the duration of occupancy. Provisions of the State Sanitary Code and local health regulations apply and cannot be waived no matter what a lease says:

In the event that premises become unfit for habitability the Chief Justice suggests some remedies for the tenant:

1) Suit against the landlord to terminate the lease at the point in time when the breach of warranty arose; or

2) Withholding up to 2 month's rent after a housing inspector or other official certifies that a violation that "may endanger or materially impair the health or safety" of occupants if not corrected within 21 days; or

3) Withholding rent after certification of such a danger or material threat to health or safety pursuant to Chapter 239, section 8A after written notice to the landlord in accordance with the statute (which is somewhat complicated).

Any withholding of rent may properly result in considerable litigation. Statutory formulas are specific and must be followed closely in order to be expectant of success. The conditions of fitness must be certifiably bad; notice must be given to the landlord together with adequate time to repair; and then the tenant is nevertheless, subject to suits by the landlord to redress his losses. Rent withholding is an effective and important tool in many instances. It is not, however, simple nor whould it be considered as the primary remedy. It is much more a last resort and should be done carefully in accordance with law.

Sept. 6-Grad. Registration

Commencing with the Fall 1973 semester the Graduate School will begin to use the student scheduling system commonly known as OSCAR. In order to use this system effectively it has been found necessary to change graduate registration scheduled for Boyden Gymnasium to Day #3, Thursday, September 6, 1973. Undergraduate registration previously held in Boyden on this day will be moved to other locations on campus.

Study In The West Indies

The University of the West Indies, Jamaica, has agreed to admit several UMass undergraduate students for 1973-74. They should be junior or senior students next year, and should have a cumulative average of at least 3.0.

The Jamaica campus of the University of the West Indies is one of three principal branches of that campus. It offers courses in the humanities, arts, sciences, and social sciences. The campus has about 3,000 students. It is seven miles from Kingston, the capital and principal seaport of Jamaica on the south coast of the island. The approximate cost of tuition, board and room at U.W.I., Jamaica, is about the same as at the Amherst campus.

Students interested in studying at U.W.I., Jamaica, next year should contact Mrs. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs, 239 Whitmore, as soon as possible.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

Leo and Taurus, both Fixed signs, stubborn and talented, determined and gifted and the meeting ground can be turned into a battleground. But natives of these signs, which are in square or 90-degree aspects to each other, seem capable of recognizing the positive qualities each possesses. The relationship has pitfalls but there also are life rafts and survival is possible. Taurus and Leo grow by the encounter although growth can be a trying process.

Tom White

White: Short Detour On Road To The Top

By MIKE MURPHY

Senior co-captain Tom White was drafted by the Houston Astros upon completion of his senior year at Amherst Regional High in 1969 and decided that he would rather come to UMass to earn a degree in engineering before going into professional baseball. "Besides," he reasoned, "it would give me four extra years to improve my pitching at a good baseball school."

White, 3-3 on the year so far, "has had his control problems after California but seems to be on the road back," according to Montreal Expos area scout Charles Abramson who has expressed some interest in attempting to draft White in June when the annual player draft takes place in New York.

At 6'6" White is an awesome figure to face as he looks down at you from the mound. And when that big sweeping windup comes at you . . . it looks as though it will finish with White being on top of the batter. Whitey's trademark has always been his overpowering speed and control with both his fastball and curve. Two years ago he developed a curve that drops off a table and, with that pitch added to his repertoire, White became one of the most feared collegiate pitchers in the Northeast.

At the close of the 1972 baseball season White had recorded 137 strikouts in 21 appearances and 111 innings. In action this spring he has already K'd 57 batters in 49.2 innings leaving him second

Knicks Win; Lead L.A. 3-1

NEW YORK (AP): The New York Knicks, riding the frequent performance of Dave Debusschere, built up a big early lead and held off a belated Los Angeles rally for a 100-98 victory over the Lakers Tuesday night and a 3-1 lead in their National Basketball Association Championship series.

The Knicks, who lost to the Lakers in five games in last year's final after leading three in seven games for their first NBA title in 1970, can clinch the best-of-7 series with another victory Thursday night at Los Angeles.

Debusschere, expected by opponents in the first period when New York started to a 46-34 lead and garnered 10 points in the second quarter when New York established its biggest advantage 61-36 with a 10-left in the half.

Chicago 8-7 In A WildOne

Garahan Reached His "Goal"

By BOB ESTELLE

One of the most prestigious records in all of UMass sports was broken in last Saturday's varsity lacrosse game vs. UNH. Junior attackman Frank Garahan bypassed Tom Malone's single-season goal-scoring record (40 goals) set in 1969.

Frank now has 41 goals but he says that Malone may have had a better season then than the one he is now having. "Malone scored his forty goals in ten games and it took me eleven games to surpass it. He also had 44 assists that year. Nevertheless, I'm proud that I broke the record. It's been my goal all season long."

Even though his scoring total is high, Coach Garber feels that Frank is an unselfish player. "He's the most effective rider on the team. He hustles and has an intense competitive attitude. He plays 55 minutes a game, so you don't have to rest him that much, he's strong and fast and, with his stickhandling and a variety of hard and accurate shots, he's an effective player on a good team."

Frank started his lacrosse career as a high school sophomore at Sewanaka High School in New Hyde Park, Long Island. He was not a star and upon graduation, decided to play at North Country Community College in Saranac, N.Y. He started for two years at wing attack and was also the co-captain for those seasons. Last year, he was seventh in scoring among the National Junior College ranks with 50 points. "I feel that the two years I spent in junior college gave me two years of experience that I needed to build up the confidence and skill necessary for big-time lacrosse."

Frank transferred to UMass last fall because he felt he was ready for the big time and wanted to play on a winner." He knew of Coach Garber's reputation and decided to come here. By the end of last fall's practice, he felt he could start. He was able to win the berth at crease attack which had been vacated by John Nagle.

He then set his own personal goal of breaking Malone's record. "I feel that the creasemen has to be the highest scorer since he has the most shots. I was really fortunate to get a lot of shots. Fred (Michels) and Peter (Connelly) have given me alot of good passes and the whole team has been very helpful in helping me learn to play in front of the crease. But playing on the wing has helped as I know how to move around and get open for a feed." And the Gorillas have benefited.

Frank is a junior and is majoring in the field of Leisure Studies and Serives (recreation). He has no plans for a career as he feels graduation is still a long way ahead. "Right now, I'm looking forward to the remainder of this year's schedule and next year as well."

And the contingent of fans that follow the Gorillas are looking forward to seeing more of the kind of play Frank has brought to UMass.

Who Wants To Go To UNH Anyways

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

No one on the tennis team is quite sure why the Minutemen are traveling three hours to Durham, New Hampshire today. Some say it's because they've got a match scheduled with UNH, but others express profound confusion.

The questions begin with the most simplistic, like why is UMass playing a Yankee Conference match AFTER the Yankee Conference Championships. The more complex inquiries probe the worth of playing this match in preparation for this weekend's New England Tournament. You see, UNH really isn't too powerful.

Perhaps Robert Schpeiser said it best. "Going to UNH is a waste of time."

Even Captain Steve Ferber was dismayed. Something was missing. Something called a desire to play tennis.

At the disinterest seeps down to had this to say about this afternoon's scheduled away contes. "It's a long way to Durham."

If the rain holds off, and not a netman cares to have it that way, then UMass is likely to pick up their 10th win in 11 matches. Entering the New Englands witha five match winning streak and a Yankee Conference title to their credit, the Minutemen should be high for the tourney.

Trackmen Trip BC, URI

UMass Wins...

By EARLE BARROLL

There was no pomp and pagentry a la senior right at Curry Hicks Cage. No intros before each event. Just a start and a finish. But for the team and the select athletes involved the feeling and emotions were all the same.

Steve Levine, Tony Pendleton, Dennis Boisvert and Dennis Busa performed for the last time in a home meet at the Llewelyn Derby track yesterday afternoon. Levine, Pendleton (twice), and Boisvert won their specialties. Busa finished second twice.

What made it all the more ceremonial was the fact that their efforts combined with those of their younger teammates added another bruise to the already massive list of UMass muggings at the expense of the Slippery Rock of Eastern Mass.

The Minutemen, who finished their most successful season ever under coach Ken O'Brien (8-2), staggered Boston College and a third party Rhode Island, 89-60-43 after breaking the meet open from a margin that at one juncture was only three, 43-40-35.

"This is a great way to jump into the championship meets," said O'Brien whose tracksters will see action in the Yankee Conference meet this Saturday and a week hence at the New Englands. "This was a good B.C. team they beat, one of the top four in the region."

The Minutemen as individuals and relay teams won half of the possible firsts in the 18-event program. But not until a massive surge from the 440 yard intermediate hurdles through the discus and triple jump was O'Brien able to breath a sigh of relief in a meet he expected to plunder right from the outset.

"For a moment I couldn't believe the closeness of the meet," he said. "Randy Thomas (boss two-miler) was suffering from a cold and I was only going to use him if we needed him. Up until the triple jump he was still warming up."

For the seniors it was apropos that they perform in such a manner that produced 26 of their teams points not counting two relay victories they were a part of. "It's a bit deceiving to wonder how the effect of losing only four seniors will mean to a team," OBrien said.

"But these four were four of our top five scorers and when you lose 110 points it has to have an effect." Levine and Pendleton co-captained the tracksters this spring. While Steve, who won the 440 in 49 seconds, was the say-hey guy on the team, Pendleton who won the 100 and 220 lead by his presence.

"These two were outstanding leaders for the team," lauded O'Brien. "On tany other team Dennis Boisvert and Dennis Busa would have been the captains."

Bobby Adamson was UMass' other double winner (triple and long jump). Only a freshman he is the leading scorer for the Minutemen. The kid with spring came out of Natick high untouched by the biggies, Penn, Villanova and the rest allowing UMass to have a shot at him. His younger brother with as much spring is a senior at Natick and UMass bound. His cousin is likewise as springy, perhaps faster and perhaps also UMass bound.

And to add a little accent to the afternoon's proceedings' O'Brien and sprint coach Errol Prisby were sacrificed to the water gods compliments of the steeplechase water jump pit.

. . . Eagles Fall

Diamond 9 Roll 8-4

By MIKE BROPHY

UMass fired out an eighteen hit attack and dumped BC in the process, 8-4 behind the pitching of Tom White and Craig Allegrezza. Allegrezza collected the win for his six innings of relief work after White was lifted for a pinch runner in the third inning.

The Minutemen exploded in the top of the first to give White a four run cushion on Mark Palau's grand slam home run that cleared the left field fence. Following singles by Ed McMahon and Steve Newell, BC coach Eddie Pellagrini decided to walk clean-up hitter Ron Beaurivage to pitch to Palau.

BC came back in the bottom of the first for a three run rally as White walked two batters and surrendered a three run homer to left fielder Paul Boudreau that sailed over the left field fence just inside the line. Boudreau collected his fourth RBI on the day in the fourth when he singled home Harry Ohanesian who had previously walked.

The late afternoon game then settled down into a slow moving contest until the top of the fourth when White singled and Baye came in as a pinch runner. Baye later scored on a single by Beaurivage.

For UMass it was the eighth win in a row and if the squad should go undefeated for the remainder of the season they would become the National Champions. The pitching has again looked strong for the Minutemen as they are now coming down the long stretch and looking ahead to Storrs on Friday. Allegrezza looked especially impressive during his six inning workout as he struck out seven Eagles while surrendering only four hits and one walk. White also looked strong but allowed five hits in only three innings of work. He walked four Eagles during his stint and was lifted when Coach Bergquist decided he wanted to test Allegrezza's arm before the last stretch.

As things worked out, Allegrezza looked ready although he did show signs of tiring in the late going. With their season mark now up to 20-6-1 the diamond men stand an excellent chance of making the New England Playoffs along with Providence, Harvard, and UConn.

Steve Newell tied the UMass rbi record for one season as he has reached the total of 47 set by Charlie Manley two years ago.

NE Title At Stake

Gorillas Meet Brown

By HOWIE BLOOM

The New England lacrosse championship will go up for grabs this afternoon as the University of Massachusetts stickmen face the Brown University lacrossers starting at 3:00 o'clock in Providence.

The Bruins, currently ranked 6th in the nation and first in New England, need only to win this game to assure their getting an invitation to participate in the NCAA post season lacrosse championship. A loss would put them out of the running. So, the Bruins will be ready.

The Gorillas, ranked 15th in the nation, have already been invited to play in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association playoffs, but want the distinction of being the number one team in New England, after playing bridesmaid to Brown the last four years. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

The Bruins will field their strongest team in a number of years against the Gorillas. Overall, Brown is 7-1, and undefeated (4-0) in the Ivy League, the second toughest conference in the country. Their wins have come at the expense of Springfield (20-3), C.W. Post (11-3), Connecticut (17-9), Cornell (11-3), Princeton (12-30), Harvard (19-8), and Yale (15-4). UMass has defeated Harvard (13-4), and Connecticut (15-7) this season. The only team to defeat the Bruins was Johns Hopkins University (18-7), the top lacrosse team in the country.

NEW ENGLAND TITLE—will be fought for this afternoon as the Minutemen take on Brown. Frank Garahan (21) has set a new all-time UMass goals scoring record with 41 on the season. The Gorillas are 9-2 going into the contest.

Man-for-man, the Gorillas and Bruins stack up pretty evenly, with Brown having a slight edge at midfield. Their great balance at the position, where all three lines are good enough to play number one, gives them the nod. Coach Cliff Stevenson will run the combination of Bob Mueller (17-1-18), Dave White (10-4-14), and Tom Kavazanjian (1-1-2) to start the game.

At attack, the number one line boasts the team's number one, two and four scorers in the persons of Steph Russo, Bob Rubeor, and John Duffy, respectively. Russo, a senior, is the all-time leading scorer in Brown lacrosse history, with 132 career points. Thus far this season he is one of the top scorers in the country, with 18 goals and 34 assists. Eight of those assists came in the game against Harvard.

Defensively, the Bruins field a combination of Dom Starsia, Tim Robinson, and John Magladery on the first line and Dan Campbell in goal. Thus far this defensive corps has allowed their opponents an average of just over eight scores a game. Campbell, a junior, has started every game and has given up 46 goals while stopping 90 shots.

The Gorillas, meanwhile, boast a little firepower and defense of their own. Top scorers Freddie Michels, Frang Garahan, and Pete Connolly, the starting attack, have combined for over 100 points thus far this season, and all three have scored over 20 goals.

At Midfield UMass will start co-captains Hirsch Seidman, Dwight Blomquist, and John Martin, the combination Coach Garber has gone with all season. All three will be hoping to continue the sam fine play that marked their second half efforts in last Saturday's game against New Hampshire.

The defense, as has been the case all season long, will consist of Bill Blaustein, Rich Lally, and John McCarthy. O.J. Rutledge will try to stop the Burin's offensive onslaught, in the goal. Rutledge has outdone even the Brown netminder this season, having given up an average of just about six scores per game.

UMass is the Northeast Division Champion. Brown University is the Ivy League champ.

The Bruins are first ranked in New Enland. The Gorillas are a notch below. The team that makes the fewest mental errors will win. It's going to be quite a struggle.

"Title Beyond A Rainbow"

By MARTY KELLEY

Marvin and Ernie's Turf—Brown . . . Brown . . . Brown . . . It's the color of fall, your bagged lunch, your new baggies, your old-fashioned rims, the feces on your front lawn, and various other sundry. Brown also signifies a pinacle of academic triumph and a stable checkbook . . . As well for Garber's Gorillas, it signifies a shot at the New England championship of college lacrosse. From the February snow to the sun and fun of North Providence this afternoon, you can bet a checkbook won't stand in the way of the pompous Gorilla . . . it hasn't in the past.

Yes, it started during the frigid flurry of early February. When defenseman Bill Blaustein was the last man up the Southwest hill in the season's first run, little was it known that the Gorillas were to be groomed for national post season play and a date with destiny against Brown . . . . A New England championship is a fondest dream . . . . But the dream started when the weather made you believe that spring was as elusive as a 4.0 . . .

For a Frank Garahan, a Jackie Moran, a John "OJ" Rutledge, this is a lacrosse player's search beyond the rainbow. David did in Goliath for less than this. The New England title is that final epitaph of triumph. West of the slums of Providence, Garber's Gorillas, a loose construction of athletic complement, have a date with destiny. You've been bothered by all that Ivy shit, have you? Well, now Garber and his flakies track their mud upon the hallowed halls of Ivy . . . to rescue a New England championship . . . Brown is a stingy customer.

And you know for me to really understand what this one means to the school, the program, and the athletes involved, it took a seemingly harmless anecdote from one of the most respected coaches in UMass history . . . "You know Marty," said track coach Ken O'Brien following a win over Boston College and Rhode Island yesterday afternoon, "if this one were home I would hope that every athlete on this campus would be there."

Well, Ken, they can't be . . . As a broadcaster working for WMUA this afternoon with Howie Bloom from Providence, I feel the need for a job well done. Around 2:50 (air time 2:55) the adrenalin will start to flow. You see I've lived, loved, smoked, drank, and played with these guys. Their culture doesn't originate in a ghetto. Their life style doesn't struggle as much . . . But their culture has an ideology all its own. Brown, one of the strongest major college teams in the country (6th), meets a Family Unit this afternoon.

You'll hear me babble in my near obnoxious clamor, about a crowd of 5,000 Ivies, a goodam band, a cannon, a scoreboard, and all the polish of one of the world's finest amateur lacrosse aggregates. But baby, there's no looking over shoulder now. Man, this is Brown . . . Brown . . . Brown . . . the color of your lawn's favorite feces . . .

You know Dick Garber is quite a guy. OK, I'm being very rah, rah, when I say that this guy deserves that New England title. For 18 years he's occupied the Southwest cubicle of Boyden with his only neighbor being Assistant Coach Roger Farrar's science lab . . . They don't stick him next to MacPherson, Leaman, or O'Brien, the perennial winners of the White Elephant (Boyden Building) . . . But of all the coaches, he's the winningest . . . And you know, his office is always flooded with admirers. But quiet success is better than none at all . . . right Parking Fee protesters? . . .

A potential champion has little peace of mind prior to and much regret following the actual debacle . . . Flashing shades of February snow on that road to Providence will be mixed with the thought of outtitling the nation's 6th ranked team (highest national ranking win in UMass history!) with rushes of that land beyond the rainbow . . . The Gorillas have always known such footing . . .

Garbermen To Participate In USILA Playoffs

By HOWIE BLOOM

For the second consecutive year, Garber's Gorillas have been invited to participate in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association playoffs, schedules to begin next Wednesday, May 16th.

The Gorillas will face either Boston College or Springfield College in their opening playoff game at Alumni Stadium next week. B.C. and Springfield meet this Friday to determine which team wins the right to face the Gorillas. Both teams have won nine games in a row.

Other teams which have been invited to play in the USILA tourney include Washington College, Hobart, C.W. Post, Bucknell, Franklin and Marshall, Dennison, Bowling Green, Baltimore University, Cortland State, and Adelphi.

UMass Seeks Job Equality

By DON BISHOP

(Ed. note: The following is the first article of a two part series dealing with the implementation and ramifications of the Affirmative Action Program on this campus.)

Under the auspices of the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare, the University of Massachusetts is currently implementing a program designed to insure that the concept of equal opportunity in employment at the University becomes a reality.

The year and a half old Affirmative Action Program is presently functioning not only to quarantee future hiring and protional neutrality with regard to race, sex, and national origina, but also actively seeking to "recruit, employ, and promote qualified members of groups formerly excluded" from equal opportunity employment here and the country at large.

It is this second aspect of Affirmative Action that has aroused the concern of certain individuals currently employed here. These fears include that of the possibility of losing one's job and the loss of quality programs of teaching.

While Administration officials have expressed satisfaction with the overall progress of the program, they do acknowledge the presence of some hesitation from some UMass employees, particularly faculty members, who as Program Co-ordinator Jim DeShields put it: "do not fully understand what the program is all about."

The history of Affirmative Action dates back to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and several executive orders from the President's office up to the present time. Guidelines have been established in the last few years to make sure that organizations and institutions who receive federal aid do make some active commitment to the law, as regards equal opportunity employment.

Back in 1971, the Department of Health Education and Welfare made a year long, intensive study of employment discrimination on this campus. This type of study has been employed at many other institutions of higher learning throughout the country.

Sweet Pie and his trusty loin cloth got it on yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom. His performance was part of the concert for Wounded Knee.

The HEW survey turned up a number of results which indicated that equal opportunity in employment on this campus did not exist. This was exhibited in terms of the number of women and minority people presently employed, the type of positions they held, and their salary level.

While HEW was then dictating the adoption of Affirmative Action by all universities, UMass, under the direction of University President Robert Wood and the three Chancellors, firmly committed itself to the concept of Affirmative Action.

Policy guidelines were sent out by Wood and Bromery on June 9, and October 8, of last year, respectively.

Bromery's memo to Vice Chancellors Gluckstern, Gage and Campion explained the outline of Affirmative Action for this campus:

"As a public institution of higher education, the University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus has a special obligation to demonstrate by its own example that the ideals of non-discrimination and equal opportunity are, in practice as well as in theory, functional concepts in contemporary society... The premise of our approach to Affirmative Action is that systematic and institutional forms of exclusion, inattention and purposeful discrimination have existed, and unless we take positive, remedial action in overcoming their effects, a benign neutrality in employment practices, just as in admissions policies, will tend to preserve the status quo ante indefinitely into the future."

Bromery also brought out the fact that both Federal regulation and University policy require the "establishment" of a written plan of Affirmative Action for this campus and then submittal of this plan for approval, to the New England Regional Office of HEW. This total plan is in the process of being drawn up at the present time.

The Chancellor also stated in his memo of last October that: "The primary objective of the plan is to provide, on a programmatic basis, job opportunities for minorities and women at least in proportion to their representation in the working population."

The phrase "at least" becomes important because Bromery and the various Co-ordinators of the program firmly maintain that Affirmative Action is not attempting to establish a quota system in this regard.

The program as set up and currently nearing completion has charged each Vice-Chancellor set up for the various departments or units under his domain: 1. "a written Affirmative Action plan detailing the numerical goals of each department or unit; 2. "timetables for the accomplishment of these goals; 3. "procedures to be utilized for insuring that a good faith effort is made by all departments or units to meet the objectives of the program; 4. "appointment of one person to serve as liaison to the Coordinator of Affirmative Action in the Chancellor's Office."

Indian Bones Unearthed

By CINDY GONET

Two skeletons, believed to be Pocumtuck Indians were unearthed by a construction crew digging a trench for a hydrant line in Deerfield Tuesday.

The trenching, done by Kocot and Son of Deerfield, is through a relatively sandy area, thought to be one of the Indian burial grounds for the tribes that inhabited the Deerfield River Valley.

The find was made a short distance east of Interstate Route 91, where Indian artifacts were discovered 15 years ago during construction of that highway.

Western Franklin District medical examiner Dr. John Olson of Colrain said the bones are "marvelously preserved." He will consult a state pathologist who has compiled a book on Indian burials to assist in their identification.

Olson said the "excellent state of preservation is due to the sandy soil which allowed for good drainage." "The teeth are virtually intact," he added and the two skulls are in "excellent condition".

Kuchieski said the bones, though nearly, all intact, were "jumbled up" by the construction crew before they were noticed.

The site was just off the edge of Lower Road, on the west boundary of Deerfield and west of Deerfield River.

Alcoholism On Campus

Drinking A Problem For 2,000 UMies

By MARK CITRON and KATHY FRASER

He staggers out of the Blue Wall, falls and hits the cold flagstone floor.

He trips and falls through downtown Amherst; some people stare, some just laugh.

The floor party in the dorm is going strong, but he's already passed out on the sofa in the lounge.

Who is he?

He is the student alcoholic.

But what happens to him after he's picked up off the street? Or when the hangover ends?

How big is the problem on this campus anyway?

All sources—administration, health officials, student counsellors—feel the problem is serious. Maybe the most serious problem on campus, and certainly the number one drug problem.

Robert W. Gage, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, has given Health Services authority to establish and coordinate activities aiding those students with alcohol problems, and Barry Averill, Director of University Health Services, says that for a majority of students drinking is just a phase, but 10 percent, maybe 20 percent, go on to more serious drinking. Dr. Chittum of Health Services says that a minimum of 2,000 students have drinking problems.

The life of one of those 2,000 can be hell. It's hard for him to make that early morning class with a hangover. Usually, he doesn't make it. When he does manage to struggle out of bed, well, maybe another drink will help get him to that first class. Besides, he finds that not only does a drink steady his hand and warm his body against the coldness of the morning, it certainly makes that class more interesting.

His morning classes are rough to get through. There's the worry that someone might smell the alcohol on his breath (reminding himself that the next time he needs a quick drink in the morning to make it vodka) and a class discussion on a reading assignment leaves him in the air because he didn't have time to get to it. He tells himself not to worry about the school work; he can catch up later. Besides, another more important concern is on his mind throughout the morning: when and where his next stop for a drink will be. This leads us to the Blue Wall.

Go there around opening at 11:30 in the morning and count the number of people sitting and drinking their lunch. Counts taken on ten random days ran from a low of four people to a high of 19. These were people drinking beer and liquor without food, and it is noteworthy that a regularity of the same patrons was seen.

The Blue Wall uses 20 to 23 kegs of beer a day. This is an increase from the 7 to 10 kegs used the month before the 18 year-old drinking law took effect, but less than the 38 used on St. Patrick's Day a year ago.

The Blue Wall is convenient. Richard M. Howland, student attorney and self-proclaimed "recovering alcoholic" ("no alcoholic is ever fully recovered"—Howland) has attacked this convenience by saying he "doesn't like a bar that you fall into" and that the Blue Wall is a "tremendous temptation".

The problem lies deeper than just temptation. Barry Averill says, "Peer influence is tremendous". Averill, also citing academic pressure, said that the "whole atmosphere makes it (drinking) part of University life."

Howland has said that "drinking is the focus of most social groups on campus." Citing the 15 social fraternities on campus, Howland felt an inordinate emphasis was put on alcohol as part of the socialization process.

Drinking has always been a college tradition and through the years, hang-overs and blacking out have come to be what John Barbaro, Room to Move Alcohol Counselor, has called "a sign that I had enjoyed myself the night before."

The student drinks to relieve the pressures, forget his problems, prove his manhood, play out a social role, kill time, bolster his ego, etc. Every individual has his own story.

Alix Kates Shulman spoke on women in writing and journalism yesterday at Farley Lodge.

An Ex-Prom Queen-Growing Up Female

By MAX KEANE

Late spring drizzle seemed to grow less dismal for the fifty persons who congregated at noontime yesterday for conversation with Alex Kates Shulman, author of Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen. Ms. Shulman is also well-known for the Shulman Marriage Agreement, which she and her husband devised to designate domestic responsibilities by convenience rather than sex. In addition, she has written a biography of Emma Goldman entitled Red Emma Speaks, essays on feminist subjects, and several children's books.

Ms. Shulman opened discussion with commentary on the treatment of women's writing by the "White male literary establishment." Citing examples from New York Times' book reviews, she pointed out that critics "often dismiss the legitimacy of women's experience rather than considering the style of their writing." She added that this often makes female writers feel constrained about writing frankly.

Concerning the Shulman Marriage Agreement, Ms. Shulman explained that when they first published, it was "infuriating to people, although it hardly meets with dismayed reactions today." She noted that once she and her husband stopped thinking in terms of dividing chores by sex, the agreement itself became less important.

Memoirs of an Ex-Prom Queen is a novel about growing up female in America. In referring to it, Ms. Shulman emphasized that female writers should not limit themselves to writing about any one subject, but added that fiction writers "usually write from experience, and often experience is not entirely a matter of choice." She said that she views her own writing as "corrective and subversive" in that she seeks "to get some neglected ideas and areas of experience out in the open."

When asked about her beginnings as a writer, Ms. Shulman confessed to having once been a "closet writer." When her children were at school, she would take her phone off the hook and write. Ms. Shulman credits the Women's Movement for giving her an audience and the feeling that "I had something to say, and wasn't just writing quirky 'ladies' stuff."

Following two hours of discussion and brown bag lunching, the group moved elsewhere for more conversation. Ms. Shulman's visit was sponsored by Everywoman's Center.

UMass Wins C.E. Research Grant

The National Science Foundation has awarded two grants to UMass for industrial processing research in the department of chemical engineering.

Prof. James M. Douglas has received an additional $24,800 from NSF to continue his study of periodic processing. The results indicate that in some cases the performance of chemical processes can be significantly improved by forcing the system to oscillate, rather than operate at steady state conditions (similar to alternating current being superior to direct current).

For example, recent data show that the capacity of ultrafiltration membranes, used to remove pollutants from streams, can be increased by 50 per cent by oscillating the flow. Current efforts are directly to applying this principle to crystallizers and chemical reactors.

VITA Helps Eliminate Income Tax Hassles

By DENNY MATTEAU

In its first year, reactions towards Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program (VITA) has been favorable. According to the final report prepared by Richard A Sockol, student VITA coordinator, and William M. Burke, Director of OUTREACH, "In addition to providing a valuable experience and service to the University and its surrounding communities, VITA has also provided a vital educational experience to the participating students."

There were 154 students who took part in the program. These students attended four Internal Revenue Service training sessions and three Massachusetts Department of Taxation training session during the first weeks of February, 1973. The Interal Revenue Service supplied twelve agents and educational materials for the program.

VITA served the communities of Springfield, (through offices in the North and South Ends, and in the Urban League on State St.) Chicopee, Northampton, Holyoke, Amherst, and UMass. This program saved the people of these communities approximately $29,000 in money which would have been paid to independent tax preparers, had this service not been available.

"We chose these specific agencies because of their close ties in the community. We were not interested in providing services on a random basis nor did we wish to serve persons who normally would have been able to afford such a service, therefore we did not choose to knock on doors nor did we choose to set up centers in large shopping malls. Our main goal was to work closely with the participating community by providing services which it felt would be most beneficial to its members," said Mr. Sockol in the final report.

VITA was sponsored by the Center for OUTREACH programs. In conclusion, the report said "...Community service programs, such as VITA, can most certainly have an effect on eliminating the negative image most often associated with university acitvity. With a greater influx of students working with and for community people, these myths can be destroyed...We wholeheartedly recommend VITA as an excellent community and student based program and without hesitation would offer it to UMass students again."

Students received from one to three academic credits for participating.

A.D. Little Provides Suggestions For Increasing C.C. Revenue

By SHARON HUGHES

The main problem, of course, with the Campus Center is that it was built. We're stuck with it, i.e. we've got to pay for it, and the problems accruing to that fact are complex and very, very costly.

First of all, the CC serves a variety of community interests, most notably, students and business. It seems the groups involved in the Center never reached a concensus as to what the building's goal or purpose should be, but for the last two years have been aiming toward a nebulous mixture of student/business interests.

Announcing his resignation, Walter T Grinnan said the lack of consensus among interested groups was the primary problem with the CC.

Secondly, the building has been a financial disaster. It generates neither the revenue it should nor that which it needs to cover its operating costs so last year the students CC fee paid the $1.2 million deficit (maintenance, administration, debt service). Scheduled refinancing of the building in fiscal '75 will raise debt service so high that the student fee could not afford to assume the cost of the CC's operating deficit without the fee skyrocketing to $90. Currently, $62.50 is such a politically "hot" issue, that CC increase to $90 would be practically out of the question.

The Arthur D. Little Company, contracted to provide suggestions for increasing the building's revenue, made some excellent ones that should be implemented immediately. For example, a tightened accounting system (already in the making), and a greater reliance on part-time employees would be both financially sound and in agreement with student interests. To get management going on hiring students may be quite another matter. Several department managers have told me they would like to hire more students, but to put it frankly, they are afraid of getting grief from the union.

A. D. L.'s suggested shopping mall is another instance where profits could flourish while providing student services. However, the proposed locations (music room, Blue Wall, and Student Union lounges) would deprive students of the little space they now have to study and/or socialize and in a building where only two of the 11 floors are reserved for student use.

If the A.D.L. study is to be successfully implemented, the goals and purposes of the Campus Center must be identified immediately (publically and before, not after the fact). The department managers, the new director, the student interest represented by the Campus Center Board of Governors and the Administration have quite a bargaining process facing them, so may I offer one small suggestion. For the student interest to be most accurately represented, it must first be consulted. The A.D.L. survey of 305 students can be used as a base but more student input, such as a questionnaire in the Collegian, could only be helpful.

Fence A Duck? Quack, Quack

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN
Associated Press Writer

OGLESBY, Ill. (AP)—The eight-member zoning board of appeals in this west-central Illinois community has resigned and a dogcatcher is behing hired —all because of a white duck named Pebbie.

Pebbie has been a pet of the Paul Kessel family since 1971, and the family got into a running battle with the city over zoning ordinances regulating their pet's home.

The feathers really began to fly six months ago.

said either fence in the duck or pay a $25 fine," said Mrs. Kessel, 38-year-old mother of four children.

Mrs. Kessel said they were willing to put up a fence, especially because of a problem with local dogs, but a city ordinance permitted fences only four feet high.

"A neighbor's dog kept scaring Pebbie and we needed a fence at least six feet high to keep her in the back yard. We couldn't get a city permit to build one because of the 1958 ordinance."

Mrs. Kessel said she surveyed most of the city, which has a population of 4,175, "and I found 41 fences more than six feet high . . . When I asked the owners they said they didn't even bother to get a permit.

"Well, that did it. We were trying to be legal about it all. So we told the City Council we were going to court and sue the town for discrimination."

The City Council decided to reverse the zoning board and issued a permit this week for the Kessels to fence in their backyard with six foot-high redwood.

The board then resigned.

The council also said it would take applications for hiring a dogcatcher. Pebbie isn't going to be scared again.

Scientific studies with rats show that living in crowded environments cause an increase in alcohol consumption. The University hasn't started charging those four legged rats dorm fees, but a relation can be drawn to students living in high density dormitory living.

The psychology texts, in defining those cultural groups with the greatest alcohol problems tell us that the male, Irish Catholic with one parent having an alcohol problem is most likely to also have a problem. Alcoholics Anonymous estimates that one alcoholic in three is a female. This has been difficult to determine, for men have a greater tendency to seek help for their alcohol problems while women try to hide their drinking habits.

Here in Massachusetts, and also at UMass., there exists one of the largest Irish Catholic populations in the nation. Averill pointed out that, when alcohol is not intergrated in a society, or group, there is liable to be a number of people who have not learned how to use alcohol.

There is even a problem in defining what one means by "alcoholism". The word is often thrown around without its meaning clarified. The National Council on Alcoholism describes an alcoholic campus interviews arranged

Goal: Low Cost Transportation

By GABE IMPERATO

The Amherst Committee on Public Transportation met for the first time on Thursday night at Amherst's Town Hall to study the feasibility of providing free or low cost public transportation to and from Amherst.

The committee, composed of nine members appointed by Amherst's selectmen at the suggestion of the town's Select Committee On Goals (SCOG), is directed by Article 57 of yhe Town Warrant to work in liason with the University, the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission, and the Five College Coordinators in providing public transportation for Amherst.

At its initial meeting, the committee members discussed some of the problems they might have to confront during their study.

While commenting on the university's free-bus system, committee member Duane Cromack, who is Acting Assistant Dean of the UMass School of Engineering said, "If the parking fee doesn't go through the Federal government may take the buses away. We may have to look for another source of revenue if the Federal money is gone."

A stipulation of the contract between the Federal government and the university called for an increase in campus parking fees. Presumably one of the intents of the parking fee increase is to discourage people from parking their cars on campus thereby encouraging them to use public transportation.

Cromack went on and said, "There are not enough buses now in the university free-bus system to serve the area. We need to expand to the south and west."

Ken Mosakowski, a committee member and University library employee said, "The free-bus system doesn't provide an early route; say for employee's of the university who must get to campus before 7 a.m. The parking-fee increase makes a need to bus employees to the University."

Committee member Karen Peters brought up the question of whether the proposed bus system should be free or low-cost. "It may be better to have a free bus if it solves the traffic problems," she said.

Mosakowski then said, "Cost might negate the bus system final effect. I think students would hitch rather than pay."

Mosakowski also said, "Our public transportation system cannot stop at the town line. We have to look at it on a regional scale."

Committee member Phil McKean, a professor at Hampshire College said, "When we think of public transportation we should be thinking of providing routes for bicycles." McKean then passed around a xeroxed copy of a newsletter entitled "Where are the bikeways?"

Selectperson Eddy told the Committee that a Sub-Committee on Bicycle Paths had been appointed and that $25,000 had been allocated in the long range capital budget specifically for bicycle paths.

Eddy also told the Committee that the selectmen have found a fantastic decrease in hitchhiking on public bus routes.

In other business the Committee on Transportation was told of the procedures of town committees and selected a chairman, vice-chairman and secretary to the Committee.

Ms. Eddy read aloud the Open Meeting Law which allows a committee to vote itself into executive session only to discuss matters which, if made public, might adversely effect the public security, the financial interst of the town, or the reputation of any person. "You should find very little cause to go into executive session," said Eddy.

Committee member Janet Werbie, also Amherst representative to the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission, nominated Robert Rivers, a professor at the UMass School of Business, for chairman of the Committee. When no other nominations were forthcoming Rivers nominated Duane Cromack for chairman. Cromack offered his services as vice-chairman leaving Rivers the position of chairman. David Hornfisher, who works at the Amherst College Computer Center, volunteered to be secretary.

The committee, which will meet weekly for the next two years, will make an interim report in 1974 to the Selectmen and the Annual Town Meeting a final report to the same bodies in 1975, which will include recommendations for implementation of public transit and for appropriation of $1000 for use by the Committee.

"Nerves"- Or Alcoholism?

as: "A person who is powerless to stop drinking and whose drinking seriously alters his normal living pattern." Averill, along with Ed Handlin, Massachusetts Public Health Regional Alcoholism Coordinator, both used a medically oriented definition based physical dependence, leaving the problem drinkers on a different level.

It is impossible to tell who the future alcoholic will be. Handlin has said, "there is no such thing as an alcoholic personality." The problem is seen at the Infirmary in diagnosis.

"Up till now," says Barry Averill, "the patient is usually treated symptomatically." The symptoms are merely the "acute" or immediate medical problems. The student who breaks an arm, sprains his ankle, or complains of an "upset stomach" as a result of their heavy drinking is treated for the physical ailments. His underlying problem is not treated, and the lack of records on alcohol related problems has left University Health officials not knowing the depth of the drinking problem.

Averill has said of alcoholism that medically "we can't diagnose it, can't prevent it, and we're not doing a good job of understanding it."

Problems in diagnosis, prevention and understanding might be inherent with the disease. The doctors inability to recognize problem cases might also be a factor.

Dr. Brent Spears, of University Health Services said that there was very little emphasis on alcoholism in medical school. Dr. Chittum said there was a need for change in professional attitudes to deal with more than symptoms, and Barry Averill said the problem "was not well handled by any of us".

How valid are these statements? After all, students are not Skid Row bums, they're too young to have serious alcohol problems. Aren't they?

No. These are a few of the myths surrounding the student alcoholic. And the myths are a crutch for the alcoholics rationalization.

Howland calls rationalization one of the first reactions for students. Ed Hanlin says that while University students are more articulate, and "articulation could be a way out of the problem (of alcohol)" it could be "also a way to rationalize the problem".

Press some with a problem about their drinking habits and listen to the excuses flow. "Well, everyone drinks." "It helps me relax." "It's part of my personality, it makes me an individual." "My drinking? I regard it as gift." "I'm too young to have a problem." "I just drink with the guys." "I study better after a drink."

Another one is the student who comes to the Infirmary with a "nervous problem". He seeks Librium or one of the other tranquilizers to help him "calm down", when the actual underlying problem is alcohol. This isn't as unusual as one might think. Dr. Chittum says this example happens frequently, and Ed Handlin said one fourth of all hospital admissions are due to alcoholism, but the patient gets admitted on a secondary illness such as nervous tension.

More dangerous than rationalizztion, harder to overcome than social or cultural factors, the biggest problem in treatment is denial.

Listen.

under control." "Look I can stop if I want. I just don't want to." don't want to."

The absolute refusal to acknowledge the possibility of a problem makes the problem impossible to treat.

John Barbaro pointed out that denial was even reinforced in the alcoholic by friends who refused to admit that a problem existed. Why? "It might hurt him." "I don't want to cause a scene." "He won't admit it anyway." "Why pick on him? We all have our problems." "He's just having a good time."

These represent some of the problems. Tomorrow's segment will deal with efforts to overcome these problems, including a look at the new Massachusetts Laws dealing with alcoholics and alcoholism, and some of the legal problems encountered by the UMass drinking population.

(Part two of this series will appear in tomorrow's Collegian)

All faculty are urged to attend these two important meetings.

'Noah And The Flood' To Try For Second Sailing

An outdoor performance of a medieval play, "Noah and the Flood," will be presented at the University of Massachusetts on Thursday and Friday, May 10 and 11 at 12 noon. The performance, which will be introduced by a musical prelude, will take place on the steps of the Campus Center (facing Metawampe). Admission is free.

Gen 7:8, 10-12: "Toward the end of seven days the waters of the flood came upon the earth . . . the windows of the sky were opened, and rain fell on the earth for forty days and forty nights."

The English Department in one of its Medieval Studies courses was to resail the biblical ark. Notwithstanding possible embayment in small Metawampee sound, the Department exercised sound judgement in expecting an instinctive reply from God. He knew the scrips, being a principle in the original Noah—He had even specified to the stage crew the exact measurements of the ship—certainly He could provide some water!

We arrived at the great pyramid steps of the Campus Center at five minutes to sailing time. We were amazed. We were aghast! If the windows of the sky were not open, they were at least cracked. It was, in fact, quite considerate for God to keep the storm at bay until the audience had gathered and the final furnishings of the ark completed. But where was the ark? Where was Noah? Oh ye of little faith! Oh second Noah! Oh, English Department. Oh Vincent of Naples! Oh God!

Check for second sailing. And, please, pray for a good rain.

In Cambodia: It's Hope For Rain

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - The United States is hoping that its bombing campaign and the rainy season next month will buy the Lon Nol regime a reprieve from antigovernment forces who hold a decisive military edge in Cambodia.

Non-American Western military experts say only "a miracle" can save the government.

The Americans hope their bombing can stabilize the military situation until the rainy season next month, when Cambodia's dry, dusty countryside will turn into a waterlogged swamp.

But even if the government can get through, what happens when the rainy season ends? The Americans are banking on the ruling Political Council to do some drastic reorganizing in a hurry.

They say there's a two-month supply of rice now in Phnom Penh and that supply convoys are getting through from the deepwater port of Kempong Som.

Other Western sources say that the bombing, particularly on the eastern bank on the Mekong River across from Phnom Penh, has forced farmers from their land-and needed food crops.

"In six weeks we could have a serious situation," said one Western diplomat. "It could give rise to rioting and plotting and a new regime."

This apparently is exactly what the Khmer Rouge - Cambodian Communists - and their Viet Cong and North Vietnamese supporters want.

Even many American diplomats have given up on the idea of peace talks now.

But the Americans don't see any large scale protests by the Cambodians.

Said one U.S. diplomat, I don't think you can expect any rioting. I think the feeling of the people here is that they have little control over their fate."

Lon Nol claims the enemy are North Vietnamese and Viet Cong. But Western military experts say 85 per cent of the enemy are Cambodian insurgents, both Communists and supporters of the exiled Prince Noredom Sihanouk.

In recent weeks, military sources said they have come to estimate the anti-goverernment force at between 45,000 and 50,000 main line soldiers, with between 50,000 and 60,000 in back line support units. U.S. experts estimate that there are no more than 3,000 insurgents close to Phnom Penh, and not more than 5,000 in theouter fringes.

The enemy forces are considered superior in every way.

Americans estimate government troops' strength at 170,000 but say the numbers aren't meaningful. The army depends on voluntary recruitment and sources said there are quite a number of 11-year-olds.

An Animal In A Circus Arena; A Spectator At His Own Trial

MADISON, Wis. (AP)-Karleton L. Armstrong, accused of arson and murder in the 1970 bombing of a University of Wisconsin building, has accused the prosecution of treating him like an animal in a circus arena.

"I don't want to be a spectator at my own trial," Armstrong said Tuesday in a 60-minute telephone interview.

The former University of Wisconsin student telephoned The Associated Press in defiance of an injunction which bars him fromdiscussing the case with members of the press.

Armstrong, 27, now held in Dane County Jail in lieu of $45,000 bail, was indicted in the 1970 bombing of UW's Army Mathematics Research Center following antiwar demonstrations. Robert Fasnacht, 33, a research physicist working in a laboratory, was killed in the predawn explosion.

Armstrong and three others were indicted.

Armstrong was arrested in Toronto, Ont., after 18 months of the FBI's list of most-wanted fuitives. The three other suspects remain at large.

Newsmen had made several attempts to interview Armstrong, but Circuit Court Judge William Sachtjen last week ordered Armstrong not to discuss the case while using his jail telephone privileges.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Douglas Haag contended interviews would create a "carnival-like atmosphere" around the trial, scheduled to begin June 11.

Armstrong's reaction: "I feel that because I have been prevented from making statements, a circus atmosphere has been set up, and I would prefer a carnival atmosphere, because a carnival lets people participate.

"What the attorney general is proposing is a circus where people can watch the trained animals perform, and I would be a spectator at my own trial."

Armstrong was also critical of news media coverage of the case.

A motion filed last month by Armstrong's lawyer, Melvin Greenberg, asks dismissal of the murder and arson charges against Armstrong because of pretrial publicity.

"I'm in complete agreement with the motion," Armstrong said, "first of all, because of the editorials, particularly those printed right after the bombing of the Army math center.

"And because I was placed on the FBI's most-wanted list, and classified a public enemy, I think newspapers have painted a picture of a mad bomber who doesn't have any scruples."

Armstrong said he believes pretrial defense motions will delay the start of his trial until fall.

Drill Sergeant Reports Brutality

By EWART ROUSE
Associated Press Writer

FT. DIX, N.J. (AP)—An Army drill sergeant told a military court here that he saw a fellow drill sergeant kick a recruit after the soldier, who later died, had collapsed during a rifle march last January.

Sgt. Colia King testified that he saw Staff Sgt. John D. Layton kick Pvt. John Ostergren at least twice while ordering him in abusive language to get up.

King was the first prosecution witness in the court martial of the 34-year-old Layton, a Vietnam veteran from Enfield, Conn., who is accused of maltreating Ostergren by kicking and verbally abusing him during the Jan. 15 march.

The 22-year-old Ostegren, of Norwood, Mass., died about a half hour after the incident. An Army hospital autopsy failed to determine the exact cause of death.

King testified that Layton and Ostergren were to his rear during the march when he heard the sergeant cursing.

"I recognized Layton's voice," he said. "I turned around and Ostergren was lying on the ground. Sgt. Layton was standing over him kicking him in the side."

Under cross-examination by John Coyle, a civilian attorney for Layton, King denied being upset by the fact that Layton had been assigned to assist him in conducting the drill.

His testimony was corroborated by Pvt. Emerrett Jones, a member of the company that made the march, who said he assisted Ostergren for about 76 feet after Layton had kicked him. Jones said he learned of Ostergren's death upon returning to the barracks.

The presiding judge, Col. Thomas J. Nichols, turned down a defense motion at the start of the hearing for a change of venue for the court martial.

Coyle argued that it was clear from his questioning of members of the jury panel that "a majority of them have been exposed to newspaper reports which gave them the impression there is a cause and effect relationship between the alleged mistreatment and the death of the recruit."

Convention Demonstrators Infiltrated By FBI

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—FBI agents and informers infiltrated the leadership of most groups that demonstrated at the national political conventions last summer and took part in planning protests, a Justice Department source said yesterday.

The source said he attended several department meetings at which convention intelligence reports from the FBI and other federal agencies, including Army intelligence, were discussed.

He said then-Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst ran the meetings and Former FBI acting Director L. Patrick Gray III and Robert Mardian, a former top department official who then was a staff member of the Committee for the Re-election of the President, attended them. The careers of all three men later were touched by the Watergate scandal.

A Justice Department spokesman said Wednesday night that Mardian did not attend all the meetings.

A Justice Department spokesman said that at no time did the department get Army intelligence on the conventions and the Army had no intelligence-gathering role at Miami Beach that the department was aware of. He said Republican and Democratic officials regularly were briefed on convention matters.

The source said he did not know the names of any of the groups the FBI infiltrated or of any protest planning that undercover agents and informers may have prompted during the Miami Beach, Fla., conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties.

An FBI spokesman said the bureau maintains surveillance through agents and informants on groups deemed a threat to national security. He said there were such groups in Miami Beach but declined to name them.

"This does not mean we had informants in legitimate peace groups," he added.

The source said that Mardian, head of the Justice Department's Internal Security Division until March 1973, had no status within the department at the time of the meetings. His job then was solely with the re-election committee. No representative of the Democratic Party ever attended the meetings, he said.

Countdown Continues As Skylab Nears Launch

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—Countdowns moved smoothly and in tandem Wednesday on the rockets which next week will launch Skylab, the nation's first space station, and the three-man crew which will live aboard the orbiting lab for 28 days. A strike which posed launch problems was settled.

Skylab, perched atop a 33-story Saturn 5 rocket, stood on a pad eight-tenths of a mile away from the 22-story Saturn 1B which will be used to launch astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz.

The unmanned Skylab will be launched at 1:30 p.m. Monday and the astronauts will be drilled into orbit at 1 p.m. the next day.

Separate 500-man teams worked in adjoining firing rooms at the launch control center three miles from the launch pads. As electrical power surged through the two rockets, the launch teams monitored thousands of systems in the complex space hardware.

A strike of tracking station technicians, which at one time threatened to delay the start of Skylab, was settled Wednesday with a tentative agreement between the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 2088, and the Bendix Field Engineering Division. Federal mediator William A. Rose said the agreement ending the 13-day-old strike came after a marathon session between union and company representatives.

Terms of the new contract, which were not announced, must be voted on by the 131 striking workers, but ratification was expected, sources said.

Bendix operates the tracking station under a contract with the space agency. The IBEW technicians operate recorders and other date gathering and dissemination equipment.

Conrad, Weitz and Kerwin remain in quarantine quarters at the Johnson Space Center, the working home of the spacemen near Houston.

The astronauts started the quarantine April 24 as part of a program to prevent their being exposed to diseases which could disable them during the four-week-long mission.

The astronauts are spending their time in quarantine practicing phases of the mission using simulators in Houston.

The astronauts' four-week mission aboard Skylab will end on June 12 when they reboard the Apollo command ship and return to earth.

Skylab will spend two months orbiting unmanned. A second crew will board the space station in August and their mission will last 56 days.

55,000: 'Guinea Pigs'

WASHINGTON (AP)—More than 55,000 persons were used as "human guinea pigs" to test 10 experimental drugs later withdrawn because they were hazardous to laboratory animals, a consumer organization said Wednesday.

Urging the Food and Drug Administration to tighten its testing regulations, Ralph Nader's Health Research Group said that American drug companies "are allowed to conduct the same type of experiments condemned when Nazi doctors performed them."

Specifically, the group petitioned for new rules prohibiting the use of human subjects in investigational drug studies until animal studies have been completed.

"An exception would be made in the very rare instance where a drug demonstrated promise in treating a fatal disease for which adequate alternative therapy was unavailable," said Anita Johnson, an attorney with the organization.

The FDA said its regulations for human experimentation "are the most stringent in the world. They are increasingly serving as a model for other nations."

"We recognize the system is not perfect but it is the best we can devise. We will, of course, carefully consider this petition and all other suggestions for improvement," the agency said.

The petition said that the 10 experimental drugs given to humans before completion of animal studies were withdrawn after indications arose that they caused cancer, tumors, eye damage, and bladder damage.

"The total human damage may never be known since the follow-up of the subjects is superficial or nonexistent," the petition said.

An estimated 50,000 persons were given DMSO, once hailed as a wonder drug, until animal tests demonstrated that it causes severe eye damage, the petition said. Companies identified as sponsoring DMSO studies include Crown Zellerbach' Merck Sharpe & Dohmen; Squibb and Syntex.

The other nine drugs cited in the petition were:

—MK-665, an oral contraceptive allegedly given by Merck Sharpe and Dohme to at least 340 women, and later found to cause cancer in test animals. The petition said Ortho and Wyeth gave a similar drug to another 549 women.

—Cinanserin, administered by Squibb to more than 300 persons, found to cause cancer in test animals.

—A mini-pill oral contraceptive by Syntex, given to 3,316 women, shown to cause cancer in animals.

—A minipill by Mead Johnson, given to several hundred women, caused tumors in animals.

—Pronethalol, given by Ayerst to at least 100 heart patients, caused cancer in animals.

—Hexabendine, given by Merrell to about 200 persons, caused serious eye damage in animal tests.

—BW-63-90, tested by Burroughs-Wellcome on 100 people, caused bladder damage in rat studies.

Lebanese Sorties Near Syrian Border Confirmed

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Lebanese jet fighters rocketed and strafed Palestinian guerrilla positions near the Syrian border late yesterday after a day-long artillery barrage against commando infiltrators. Residents of villages near the border said the jets—Hawker Hunters, Mirages and a Fouga Magister—hit positions near the villages of Yanta, Deir el Ashayer and Bayader al Adass for more than two hours.

A Lebanese army spokesman confirmed the report. There were 20 sorties, according to witnesses.

President Suleiman Franjieh halted the use of air force jets Tuesday night when he appealed to both sides to abide by the cease-fire.

But the Lebanese army, which has assumed control of the country under the state of emergency, warned guerrillas that "if they do not abide by the cease-fire we will retaliate intensively and violently." The army said the firing was in self-defense "to save lives."

Three hours after the air strikes, a military communique said a joint army-guerrilla commission overseeing the cease-fire reached a "series of agreements to make it final and prevent incidents that might strain the situation again."

The statement gave no details.

News reports of the fighting are subject to military censorship.

The open conflict erupted last week, triggered by the arrest of eight guerrillas accused of carrying explosives and the kidnapping in turn of two army corporals. The incidents reflected long-simmering tensions resulting from Lebanese desire to curb Palestinian militancy which has made the country subject to Israeli retaliation.

In the capital, an uneasy cease-fire prevailed, but there were five mysterious explosions that rocked banks, a restaurant and the Chamber of Commerce.

Grain Supplies Hit New Low

By GENE KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—World grain reserves have dipped to the point where rich and poor countries alike will depend "on the vagaries of a single year's weather" for adequate supplies, a U.N. group was told Wednesday.

Remaining stocks no longer provide an adequate buffer against crop failure, declared E. M. Ojala, assistant director of the world Food and Agriculture Organization.

He said food supplies for millions during the coming year thus will depend almost entirely on 1973 harvests.

"This is not a tolerable human condition in the latter part of the 20th century," the New Zealander added in a report to the U.N. Economic and Social Council.

"Governments and farmers in several important regions have reacted promptly to the situation," he said. "But the crop outlook is still uncertain—as demonstrated by recent floods in the United States."

Ojala announced that the FAO will propose at its meeting next month in Rome a "minimum world food security" program.

The proposal from FAO Director-General Addeke H. Boerma of the Netherlands would involve consultations and recommendations by the major grain-consuming countries on minimum national reserves of food grains.

Ojala said, "The world has drifted into this time of danger because there is, up to this moment, no acceptance by the international community . . . of the concept of a minimum safe level of basic food stocks for the world as a whole."

The world could afford this so long as the United States and Canada had huge surpluses, he said.

"But these have now disappeared . . . the governments concerned have developed new techniques for adjusting production to demand."

103rd Commencement May 26

Matina Horner

Paul Brooks

Shirley Graham DuBois

Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., the executive director of the National Urban League, will deliver the address at the 103rd UMass Commencement Saturday, May 26.

Mr. Jordan and seven other distinguished men and women will receive honorary degrees. The seven: editor and author Paul Brooks; linguistics scholar Noam Chomsky; Massachusetts Congressman Silvio O. Conte; Mrs. Shirley DuBois, biographical historian and widow of W.E.B. DuBois; Gilbert A. Highet, distinguished classics scholar; Radcliffe President Matina Horner; and muscular disease researcher Alexander Sandow.

Commencement ceremonies will begin at 10 a.m. in UMass Alumni Stadium with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery presiding. President Robert Wood will confer graduate and undergraduate degrees.

Mr. Jordan succeeded the late Whitney M. Young, Jr., as executive director of the Urban League in 1971. Before that Mr. Jordan was director of the United Negro College Fund. He has also been Georgia field director for the NAACP and head of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council. He is a DePauw University graduate with a law degree from Howard University.

Before retiring in 1969 to devote more time to writing, Paul Brooks was a vice-president of Houghton Mifflin Company in Boston, a firm he joined in 1931, the year he graduated cum laude from Harvard University. His books include the award-winning "Roadless Area," "The Pursuit of Wilderness" and last year's "The House of Life: Rachel Carson at Work." He is a frequent contributor to periodicals and is active in conservation and nature organizations.

Noam Chomsky, Ferrari P. Ward Professor of Modern Languages and Linguistics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is the author of a number of books and articles on linguistics, philosophy, intellectual history and contemporary issues. He has undergraduate and graduate degrees from the University of Pennsylvania and has lectured, taught, and done research at leading universities here and abroad.

A Pittsfield native with a law degree from Boston College, Silvio O. Conte was first elected to the U.S. Congress in 1958 and has represented the First Massachusetts District since. His political career began in 1950 with election to the Massachusetts Senate. In Congress he is a member of the Appropriations Committee, the House Select Committee on Small Business, the Migratory Bird Conservation Committee and the Joint Committee on Coinage.

Route 7 Improvements Challenged By WM-VPIRG

By BILL DENSMORE

RUTLAND, VT.–A coalition of environmental groups will seek to halt proposed four-lane improvements to U.S. Route 7 between Bennington and Manchester this morning in federal district court here in a case that may set national precendent in interstate environmental planning.

- The environmental groups, including the Western Mass. and Vermont Public Interest Research Groups (WM-VPIRG) and the national Sierrra Club are entering today's hearing as friends of the court in an attempt to demonstrate that an environmental impact statement (EIS) filed by the Vermont Highway Dept. in March is inadequate because the route 7 improvements are part of a much larger three state superhighway.

The groups will try to show U.S. Appeals Judge James L. Oakes that the Route 7 improvements are part of a north-south Vermont-Massachusetts-Connecticut highway passing near Pittsfield which will come close to Interstate standards and will damage the ecology of Massachusett's Berkshire County.

In February, when WMPIRG said Williams College students had discovered the three-state plan along the present Route 7 corridor, highway officials from all three states denied any coordinated planning of a highway.

But at an April 23 hearing before Judge Oakes in Rutland, WMPIRG and the other groups that such cooperation was indeed going on. At the hearing, Judge Oakes directed the group fighting the Bennington- Manchester, Vt. improvements to search records of each state's highway department in order to determine if such a road was being planned.

Ronald Bogard, an attorney and head of WMPIRG, said last night that as a result of the legal file search his group has information showing that Conn., Bay State and Vermont highway depts. "definitely have been communicating" and "we are prepared to go to court to prove it."

Bogard said if Judge Oakes rules that a tri-state federal impact statement is required the case will set a national precedent in environmental law.

Watergate

Aide Resigns, Claims Ordered Ellsberg Thefts

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) -Another top level executive quit the Nixon administration Wednesday, accepting full responsibility for dispatching a team of burglars to rifle Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatric files.

"With public confidence in our government already shaken by the Watergate affair, and with the complete affirmation of your personal integrety so imperative at this time, I cannot remain in the administration," Egil Krogh wrote President Nixon.

Krogh was undersecretary of transportation, a $42,500-a-year job he took last January after leaving a White House post as assistant to John D. Ehrlichman.

His resignation brought the number of high echelon people leaving or being fired from the administration to at least 10, including Ehrlichman, who had been Nixon's top domestic assistants.

The 33-year-old Krogh had said earlier he agreed to the burglary mission hatched by Watergate conspirators G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt, whom he had hired as "plumbers" to investigate leaks of the Pentagon Papers.

Hunt has testified that he and Liddy supervised the burglary of the office of Dr. Lewis Fielding in Beverly Hills, Calif. He said he and Liddy photographed Fielding's office and cased the operaion a week in advance and then returned with three Cubans Sept. 3, 1971 and acted as lookouts while they searched the files of Ellsberg, now on trial for stealing the Pentagon Papers.

Krogh's resignation came as the White House moved to recover original documents that ousted presidential counsel John W. Dean III secreted in a bank safe deposit box before he was fired by Nixon.

Dean had sent the keys to the box to Chief U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica saying that on one hand he feared they would otherwise be destroyed and, on the other, that he-Dean-had no right to them since he no longer had security clearance.

"As Mr. Dean acknowledges, these documents 'may have a bearing' on the subjects under investigation" by the Watergate grand jury, the government's brief said. It voiced no objection to copies being held by the court and by prosecutors.

The special Senate Watergate committee, due to begin hearings May 17, also is expected to ask for a copy.

Dean, who reportedly told investigators he can link Nixon to the coverup of the Watergate scandal, has been subpoenaed to appear before the Senate committee. Sources said the committee will consider testimonial immunity for Dean if he will not testify freely otherwise.

Ehrlichman and former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman were at the federal courthoue Wednesday to appear before the Watergate grand jury.

Another former administration aide, Charles W. Colsen, met at the courthouse again with federal prosecutors and was expected to go before the grand jury later.

There was Watergate-related activity on Capital Hill.

At the start of his confirmation hearing to be attorney general, Elliot L. Richardson said he would delegate full responsibility for the Watergate investigation to a special prosecutro-but said he would not surrender final authority.

"It's not a matter of needing someone to mind the store on all other matters," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I must be answerable for what the attorney general does and what the special prosecutor does."

Richardson said he is consulting on a choice with leading bar associations as well as judges, lawyers and prosecutors in private

Watergate At A Glance

WASHINGTON (AP) - Here, at a glance, are the latest developments in the Watergate case:

RESIGNATION - Egil Krogh, undersecretary of transportation and former White House aide, resigned saying he took full responsibility for sending a team to rifle Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatric files.

CIA-Director James L. Schlesinger of the Central Intelligence Agency told senators that John D. Ehrlichman, former presidential aide who resigned, smoothed the way for another White House aide to get technical help from the CIA for the Los Angeles burglary of the Ellsberg files.

DOCUMENTS - The White House moved to recover original documents that former presidential counsel John W. Dean III secreted in a bank safe deposit box before he was fired by President Nixon.

PROSECUTOR - Elliot L. Richardson, nominated to be attorney general, told a Senate hearing that he would delegate full responsibility for the Watergate investigation to a special prosecutor but also said he would not surrender final authority.

Richardson Will Delegate Full Responsibility If Attorney General

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Elliot L. Richardson said Wednesday he would delegate full responsibility for the Watergate case to a special prosecutor if he is confirmed as attorney general, but refused to surrender final authority.

Richardson, now defense secretary, said he would seek the advice of former Chief Justice Earl Warren and leading attorneys in making selection of the person to direct the government's investigation of the Watergate case.

He also said he believes the prosecutor should be part of the Justice Department with the title of special assistant attorney general and should answer to no one but himself.

The special prosecutor, he said, should not be established in an independent agency created by Congress because he would lack the resources of the Justice Department.

Richardson made his comments in his first appearance before the Senate Judiciary Committee reviewing his credentials to succeed Richard G. Kleindienst as attorney general.

Kleindienst resigned last week because his close personal and professional friends had been implicated in the Watergate scandal.

Richardson is not expected to run into trouble before the committee but there was speculation that the panel might delay final consideration of his nomination until he names the special prosecutor.

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D—Mich., said the committee "ought not move toward confirmation until there is an agreement on the ground rules governing the special prosecutor.

"We're concerned with more than giving the President his man," said Hart. "We're concerned with getting all the facts in the Watergate case and with restoring public confidence in the ability of government to work."

The Michigan Democrat's statements were prompted by Richardson's refusal to excuse himself from the Watergate case as did Kleindienst.

Hart said the public would want to know "who is the administration's man and who is their man."

Richardson said: "I would not expect in matters of judgment, to interpose my own judgment. The special prosecutor would, for all practical purposes, be in a position to do what needs to be done.

Liddy Powerful In Drug Control

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—In the months preceding his involvement in the Watergate bugging, G. Gordon Liddy portrayed himself—and might have been— a powerful force in high-level White House law enforcement projects.

White House sources said Wednesday that Liddy had more power and influence than most people attribute to him, particularly in formulating administration policies in the field of narcotics control.

Liddy, convicted as a conspirator in last spring's bugging of Democratic National Committee headquarters, worked for at least six months as a special assistant to Egil "Bud" Krogh Jr. Krogh, in turn, was an aide to John D. Ehrlichman, President Nixon's special assistant for domestic policy.

Krogh had a number of White House duties, among them to work on international and domestic problems of drug abuse control. Liddy worked for Krogh on the domestic aspects of narcotics matters.

Nixon Speaks Of Funds

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon told Republican campaign contributors Wednesday night he will get to the bottom of the Watergate scandal and not let it keep him from making "the next four years better than the last four years."

Nixon addressed a $1,000-a-plate fund raising dinner for the 1974 congressional campaign. Planners suid the turnout was far below what had been expected.

"I had been hearing that this would be less than an enthusiastic dinner tonight," Nixon said. "And you have proved that perhaps the critics were wrong."

The White House has been under mounting pressure to assuage the complaints of party contributors about the use of money they gave for last year's presidential campaign-part of which went to finance the Watergate burglars.

McCord Claims Anti-CIA Plot

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—James W. McCord Jr. says he is convinced the White House tried to blame the CIA for political espionage conducted by President Nixon's re-election campaign.

The statement by the former security chief for the Nixon campaign, who faces up to 45 years in jail on his conviction in the Watergate case, was disclosed on the heels of these developments:

—Former CIA deputy director Robert Cushman cut short a European tour by several days to return to Washington for talks with the Justice Department and congressional committees. Cushman authorized CIA help to White House aides who planned the 1971 burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, but the CIA says Cushman cut off the aid six days before the breaking after a subordinate became convinced the operation was a "domestic clandestine operation" forbidden to the CIA by law. Gen. Cushman is now Marine Corps commandant.

Interested In E.S.P.?

The Silva Method of Mental Training will be the subject of a lecture that will be presented this evening at the Campus center by Mr. Charles Tweedly, an instructor for Silva Mind Control of Springfield and Holyoke. The lecture will consist of an explanation of the research and development of the Mind Control Method and its uses and applications.

The Mind Control Course has had tremendous success internationally in teaching practical applications of controlled E.S.P. and is the first and only fully-guaranteed method known to be effective in developing and controlling E.S.P. The reason for such rapid acceptance and success is the Silva Method, which is designed to give the student control over Alpha and Theta Brain Wave frequencies and many associated activities. Independent scientific studies have demonstrated that Alpha Wave activity is associated with inner levels of mental activity, tranquility, rest, inspiration, creativity, accelerated healing, concentration, learning, Memory, E.S.P., and many other phenomena; while Theta Waves are related to deeper levels of meditation, concentration, and potentially even greater learning and recall abilities. Students of the Silva Method learn in just hours of classroom instruction to function at lower brain frequencies of Alpha and Theta with awareness. All this is accomplished without Biofeedback equipment.

UMass is part of a new experimental project of Mind Control. The goal is to set up a permanent student club or organization on campus to generate research and interest in the university community. These clubs will be affiliated with the national graduate organization and there will be ample opportunity to take part in many special projects. Two other experimental programs have already been taught at Boston College and Springfield College with great success. It is expected that the program will be in ull operation by the beginning of next year.

Volunteers Guard Walpole Cellblocks

BOSTON (AP)-A group of untrained volunteers is being allowed to supervise inmates at the state's maximum security prison with no more screening than that given to visitors.

The 800 to 900 volunteers and a group of 30 cadet correctional officers who have received only six weeks of on-the-job training are providing the only super vision to the 551 inmates at Walpole State prison.

"No regular professional officers are actually working within the cellblocks at this time," said Acting Supt. Walter Waitkevitch in testimony Wednesday before the Special Legislative Commission on Corrections.

Since the guard strike in early March, the institution's 274 guards have been used in positions outside the cellblocks, such as manning the walls, Waitkevitch said.

"The reason there aren't any correctional officers in the blocks is because they feel as though their position in there would create a hazard to them," he said. "Our only alternative to using the cadets would be to bring in the state police."

However, Waitkevitch said he goes into the cellblocks himself.

"I spend a lot of time in the cellblock areas. I go in by myself.

"There's no way you can rehabilitate anyone under the conditions that are prevailing at Walpole now," said Ernest Moreau, a representative of the guards. "The place is in utter chaos, confusion and lacks all security."

Moreau said a 50-gallon distillary is operating in the prison and that drug problems are rampant because inmate representatives are in charge of handing out prescription medicine.

Under questioning, Waitkevitch admitted that nearly 300 of the 551 inmates are on some official medication, in addition to a number of inmates receiving illegal drugs.

"Are we not making these inmates addicted to drugs by creating a tense situation and then giving them quieting drugs," asked Rep. Thomas Colo, D-Athol, chairman of the commission.

"I don't think Walpole should be the place to administer large quantities of quieting drugs, but it is being done," Waitkevitch said. "During the time I've been at Walpole-about 15 years-drugs have always been a problem."

New Criteria Set For Atomic Reactors

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Atomic Energy Commission staff estimated today it would cost about $193 million over 2-1/2 years—about a dime in the average householder's monthly electric bill—to tighten safety requirements in water-cooled nuclear power plants.

Industry sources said electricity replacement by fossil-fueled plants might be nearer $386 million.

The new criteria for emergency core-cooling systems are designed to keep atomic reactors from going out of control and spreading catastrophic, lethal radiation over a wide area—an accident that has never occurred.

If accepted by the commission, after a planned July hearing, the regulations could become effective next January.

Concerned environmental groups have pressed since 1969 for broader safety measures because of construction of more and more reactors around the country. Today there are 30 nuclear plants in operation, with another 50 expected in line by mid-1976.

UMass Boston:

Consultation Costs Soar

BOSTON (AP)—Private consultants supervising construction of the University of Massachusetts campus at Columbia Point have been paid over $5.2 million—already $1.5 million over estimates made two years ago.

A legislative committee formed to investigate the contract awarded to McKee-Berger-Mansueto MBM, found that the estimated fee of $3,695,000 for the duration of the project was "fair compensation" to the firm.

The project is still some six months from completion.

The fees being paid to MBM average $1.5 million a year—more than the entire annual budget for the state's Bureau of Building Construction.

The BBC with a $1.3 million appropriation in 1972 acts as project manager on most major state building projects.

In 1970 when state auditors questioned the propriety of the MBM contract, they noted that the private firm was hired to do exactly the type of work that the BBC was created to perform.

They said the BBC staff should have been increased to tackle the six-building, $133 million UMass complex.

"The costs of such an expansion would be considerably less than the cost of the existing contract with this private corporation," the audit report said.

But the MBM staff believes it has more than earned its fee by keeping the project within budget and on schedule.

Robert Cantrell, an MBM project manager, said change orders on the UMass project have increased the cost of original contracts by only 2 per cent.

Although some State House sources are not quite so optimistic, Cantrell said the project will be ready to accommodate some 51,000 students for the fall 1973 term.

Cantrell admits that there is some duplication of effort with the BBC, which remains responsible for the project. Both MBM and the BBC occupy offices on the construction site.

"The general rule is one of cooperation," Cantrell said.

"We have our accounting department checking ours, but they never find any discrepancies."

Cantrell contends the firm's independent status has enabled it to cut through red tape.

"We have no in-house politics," he said, "and no throat-cutting. They , the BBC know we're not out for their jobs."

In The Money

BOSTON (AP)—The first man to win $1 million in the Massachusetts state lottery says he retired because he couldn't afford to keep working.

Joseph Bonica, 47, of Newton, who picked up his second check for $50,000 Tuesday, said his tax consultant advised him to quit his job at the General Motors assembly plant in Framingham. He had worked there for 24 years.

Bonica also said he and his wife, Ernestine, still live in the same house as before that memorable lottery drawing, and they haven't even traveled much, except to visit his wife's family a couple of times in the South.

Bonica attended a luncheon Tuesday to mark the anniversary of the first Million Dollar Game in the lottery. He will receive 18 more $50,000 checks.

UMass Professor Publishes Botany Text Book

Prentice-Hall has published a major new textbook on "The Natural History of Man" by Professor Carl Swanson of the UMass Botany Department.

The publisher calls the volume "a noted biologist's interdisciplinary explorations of man's ever-changing view of himself and his place in the universe." The interdisciplinary approach has enabled Dr Swanson to weave together concepts from biology, cell theory, genetics, anthropology, comparative anatomy, geology and physics.

He has illuminated the text with quotations and illustrations from the natural sciences, the social sciences and the humanities. The book explores what man was, what he is and what he might become, reflecting "the web of thought and the web of life that interact within mankind," according to the publisher.

The 402-page volume has over 500 quotations and more than 350 illustrations, extensive bibliographies and comes with a teaching manual with lecture outlines. It is designed as a text for a one-semester general biology course or as a core volume for science courses.

The author is an internationally known cytologist who has taught biology for 30 years. At UMass he teaches a course on the Natural History of Man and is associate director of the Institute for Man and His Environment. He is a Rockport native and UMass graduate whose Ph.D. is from Harvard University. A fellow of the National Academy of Arts and Sciences, he is author of four other books and many other publications.

There are some very good reasons for flying to Europe on a well-known airline.

To put it very simply, when you fly on a well-known airline you get dependability. And when you fly on Pan Am, dependability means a lot of different things.

It means that when we tell you your flight is leaving at a certain time and from a certain gate, you can be sure it will.

It means that we offer youth fares direct to more European cities than any other airline.

So the chances are that wherever you want to go, whenever you want to go, we'll be able to take you.

It means that when you fly with us, you don't just get a plane ride there and back. We have offices throughout Europe that you can turn to for help, whether you want to pick up some mail from home or you just want some suggestions on what cities are worth visiting.

And finally, it means that when you fly on Pan Am you're flying on the airline that opened more of the world to air travel than the next five airlines combined.

So this year, take a flight on Pan Am. And you'll have more time to spend running around Europe. Instead of spending it sitting around the airport.

PAN AM
The world's most experienced airline.

The Clinic to Improve University Teaching needs doctoral candidates to work as teaching diagnosticians. The Clinic is a program funded by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation to work toward the improvement of teaching at the university level. We have developed a process for working with faclty members which we are trying out, elaborating, revising, and evaluating. Central to the process is the teaching diagnostician who works with individual faculty members. We will train diagnosticians this summer and next fall, but we would hope that they would come into the training program with some of the following experiences, skills and characteristics:

1. An interest in working toward the improvement of university teaching.
2. Teaching experience preferred: as TA at the university level or teaching at the secondary or elementary level.
3. Good interpersonal skills: must be able to work effectively with faculty members from a variety of departments and to work with peers in the Clinic.
4. Diplomatic, but self-confident, aggressive and energetic: credibility with faculty members is essential.
5. Flexible and creative.

We are offering assistantships of $3400 with tuition waivers for the academic year. If hired, we would hope that applicants would anticipate a two-year commitment. Applicants should apply immediately since work will begin June 18, 1973. Summer employment will be an eight week commitment at approximately $100.00 per week. Minority students and women are particularly urged to apply.

For additional information, and/or to arrange interviews, please contact George Bryniawsky at 5-2820 in the Graduate Research Center, Room 305-A.

History Dept. Offers Additional Fall Course

The History Department is offering History 209; History of Europe 1815-1870 this fall semester. It will be taught by Prof. Charles Rearick, Tues., Thurs. 1-2:15 in SBA 101.

The theme of the course is conflict over the large issues of the French Revolution: how is society to be organized and what social groups are to predominate politically. Much attention will be given to the opposition to Metternich and other conservatives who worked to defend the status quo. We will discuss the ideas and actions of reform movements, urban rioters, strikers, peasant rebels, secret societies, Mafiosi, anarchists, Romantic visionaries, and revolutionaries of nationalist, liberal, socialist, and democratic stripes. This social and political agitation will be examined in relationship to industrialization, population changes, and currents of critical thought. An effort will be made to view Europe as a whole and also to compare the different experiences of the European peoples through the half century after Napoleon's fall. Readings:

Engineers Receive Awards

In a recent Regional Conference of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the UMass Student Section returned as the recipients of the majority of the awards. The University ASME Student Section were the winners of the Bendix Corporation Student Sections Contest.

This award (a large plaque and $100 prize) is given to the outstanding Student Section of their region which consists of 18 Colleges and Universities in New England and New York State. Frank Skinner, Graduate Student at the University, received 1st prize in the Graduate Students Papers Contest. Mr. Skinner submitted a paper entitled "Design of Multiple Prehension Manipulator Systems", and was awarded a $100.00 prize. Jay Boot, a Senior in the Mechanical Engineering Department at the University, won 5th prize in the Undergraduate Student Papers Contest. Mr. Boot submitted a paper entitled "Selection of Working Fluids for Ocean Thermal Gradient Rankine Powerplants", and was awarded a prize of $15.00.

UMass Scientist To Visit Soviet Union

A UMass polymer scientist has been invited by the Soviet government to lecture in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev early in June.

Professor Otto Vogl of the UMass polymer science and engineering program will visit Russia during the first two weeks in June, with Mrs. Vogl, with expenses paid by the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

He will precede the Russian trip with a 10-day stay in Poland, to include lectures and a visit to the polymer research institute there. He was invited by the Polish Academy of Science.

A native of Austria, Dr. Vogl received his Ph. D. from the University of Vienna. He came to the U.S. in 1952 and held research posts at the University of Michigan, Princeton University and the DuPont company before joining the UMass faculty in 1970. Dr. Vogl has taught and lectured internationally and is the author of over 80 papers and patents, two books and several book chapters.

Summer Project Offered To Black Students

Black students wishing to use the summer to participate in community organizing and political action will be given an opportunity to do so through a summer project being organized by the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

The Department is seeking ten students from the five-College black community who have, or are interested in developing organizing skills, and who wish to spend the summer helping an urban black community develop its political institutions. The project will run for eight weeks, and upon the successful completion of the project, students will receive six hour's credit.

This summer's project will take place in the city of Detroit, which observers believe is the next major American city that will come under black political control.

Students from the five colleges will be working with the Labor Defense Coalition, an organization largely concerned with organizing black workers in the motor industries. Students will be working in the areas of criminal justice, worker organization, and community education.

Students will be responsible for the following activities, and will operate under the supervision of a member of the W.E.B. DuBois Department staff:

(1) doing political education on a bi-weekly basis, with the high-school students relating to these educational forums

(2) working in the production of LDC newspaper—involves typesetting, layout, photography, etc

(3) researching materials on Detroit and developments in the Third World, and organizing them in a form appropriate for mass distribution and consumption

(4) working in whatever campaign organization begins to take shape among our forces over the summer

(5) preparing educational mailings to LDC membership, and staffing the LDC office

Professor Mike Thelwell, Chairman of the Department, had this to say: "This project is a part of the on-going concern of the Department to provide interested students with productive political experiences in community organizing. In previous summers, students from the Department have worked in political campaigns in Atlanta, Georgia, and in community organizing in Mississippi. We have selected Detroit for this summer's project because it is a city in which significant political developments have taken place in the black community. It is part of the Department's philosophy, in the tradition of Dr. DuBois, to try to stimulate both intellectual excellence and committed political activism and leadership among Black students."

Dr. Malcolm A. McKenzie

Tree Lab Director Retires

Dr. Malcolm A. McKenzie has retired as director of the Shade Tree Laboratories at UMass after a career of 38 years.

Dr. McKenzie has spent some 50 years in public service and 38 years at the University. Under his direction, the Shade Tree Laboratories have served the public officials in the 351 cities and towns of Massachusetts, as well as county and state officials, professional arborists, public utilities, and the general publi', as a source of information and of applied research on all aspects of trees, including choice, planting, care, and recognition and treatment of diseases, pest and injuries.

Born in Providence, Dr. McKenzie graduated from Boston University with bachelor's and master's degrees in 1926 and the Ph.D. degree in botany in 1935.

At the University Dr. McKenzie has been a pathologist in shade tree diseases; research professor of botany; and director of Shade Tree Laboratories. In the latter position, he directed the Shade Tree Laboratory at Waltham, when it was inaugurated in conjunction with the Amherst laboratories. He also served as acting head of the department of botany and acting head of the department of entomology and plant pathology. He has taught courses in both undergraduate and graduate programs and has served on numerous department, college, and university committees.

Dr. McKenzie has published hundreds of articles in professional and popular journals, Experiment Station and Extension bulletins, and has participated extensively in educational conferences, shade tree workshops and professional and vocational meetings.

Prof. Emery Dies

Professor Walter B. Emery, 65, of 140 Sunset Avenue, died at 5 a.m. yesterday of a mild cardiac infraction.

Emery was a visiting professor from Ohio State University, who taught in the Department of Speech.

Surviving himare his wife, Olive Eagles, a son, Paul, attending school at Michigan State University, two daughters, Mrs. Helen Cooly, of Chicago, Illinois, Mrs. Scott Tingan of East Lansing, Michigan, three brothers, James of Schwanee, Oklahoma, Dean of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Harold of Miss Imogene Emery of Abolene, Texas, four grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

It is requested by the family that memorial gifts be sent to the Development Fund of Ohio State University, a scholarship fund in care of Professor Keith Brookes, Department of Speech.

Funeral services will be held at Mt. View Baptist Church in Columbus, Ohio on Saturday, May 12.

Looking Out For The Earth

A UMass junior from Framingham will study low-level radioactive waste disposal and its environmental impact under an award from the National Environmental Health Association.

Perry Hecht, an environmental health major in the Department of of Public Health, was awarded the $250 LaReine A. Hatch Memorial Scholarship. The National Environmental Health Association selects twelve students in the U.S. each year for the Hatch Scholarships.

Jay W. Stryker, radiation safety officer of University Health Services, will provide professional guidance to this study; other members of Perry Hecht's committee are Karol S. Wisniewski and Salvatore R. DiNardi of the University Department of Public Health.

This is the third consecutive NEHA scholarship awarded to a UMass student. Hecht's study will be a Senior Honors Project.

It's Been Real

After a year as first Executive Editor, then Editor-in-Chief of this "free and responsible press' (boy, have our detractors had a field day with that slogan) I guess I've had as good a vantage point as anyone for commenting on the year that was at UMass, especially as concerns my role at the newspaper.

The most educational experience for me has been gained from the people I've met, and there have been a lot of them. Since people are by far more disposed to griping when they're mad than to praising when they're happy, the majority of the people I've met have come to the Collegian to complain either to or about me. I've been called a fascist by the left wingers, a knee jerk liberal by the right wingers, a racist by the Third World, a sexist by the women. I guess all are true/untrue, depending on your perspectives. As far as I'm concerned, don't believe a word of it.

I've tried to make the paper more open to the community without selling out to special interest groups. I've tried, with little or no success, to get more minority input into the paper. I shall try again next fall and go down trying if I can't succeed.

I've seen a national election come and go, and have learned of the despicable operation of political machines and the even more hideous attitudes of the people of America. I've watched many of the people dedicated to changing those attitudes bungle things terribly and end up with less credibility than those they are fighting.

I've watched the administration of this University try to run the place. Sometimes they've been very bad, sometimes they've been very good.

I've watched some students at this University try to run the place. Sometimes they've been very bad, sometimes they've only been medium bad. One thing's for sure. After the first two weeks of the year they were always bad to some extent.

But they have been representative of their constituencies. That is because their constituencies are apathetic and don't have the common sense to try to seize control of their own lives. I guess they shouldn't expect their representatives to be any better than they are.

But most of all I've watched the Massachusetts Daily Collegian do its thing, and even though it's kind of an in house matter, I'd like now to thank all those people who have been a part of putting the thing together every night so thatyou'll have something to read in the morning. They've worked hard, and they deserve public acknowledgement, from the once a week reporter to the Managing Editor that I never could agree with but whom I still love and respect.

It's been an up and down year for me, and I'm sure it's been that for most all of you. UMass is, and I'm confident that it will remain, one hell of an educational experience, if you know where to find that education. Hopefully there will come a day when the whole campus is united in a common interest and the everyday frictions will disappear. When and if that comes it'll be one hell of a place, and I hope that when we come back next year we can all do a little toward getting there.

Keep well this summer. I hope it's the best you've ever had.

Time To Part

By MARY KEANE

"Tis time to part," she muttered, combing her hair over her eyes.

(What? Not that part? O.K.)

"Tis time to part," she muttered, considering graduation. Similarly, she reminisced about a few of the unresolvable conflicts of UMie life. Fr'instance:

1. Existential Trauma. What happens if you major in psych only to find you're just another dip in the subject pool?

2. Future Phobia. Is the neo-parking garage decor in the C.C. paving the way for a fixtureless future? Maybe Reader's Digest has the key. See "I am Joe's Parking Fee," on sale soon at your local newsstand.

3. Approach-Avoidance Conflict. What should you do should you get into the Eckandar philosophy only to discover its headquarters are in Las Vegas? What's the probability that if you play religious roulette you'll find complimentary Keno at the Pearly Gates?

4. Term Paper Turmoil. If you find yourself walled in by Walden II, should you drop everything and take five minutes to say goodbye?

Seems #4 is simple enough. So, I'd just like to say thank-you to everyone who's made it worthwhile to run around here for the past four years. I hope you all make it to Heaven half an hour before the Devil knows you're dead.

The Main Idea

I. What this is about is this...

I understand that people have often been confused by the content of my editorials, and I understand that a person can not afford the time to read these things, so I offer her an attempt to explain what I've been doing on this page the past few months.

This is about...administrators and faculty who actually (believe it or not) have good wishes for the students, but can not implement these changes due to a dehumanizing bureaucratic structure, which, because they are realists, they can see no way around. And, of course, there is always the spectre of governmental control lurking in the wings...and it is an ever-present danger.

This is about...the infamous students professionals, such as the Student Senate (which ends up as a mirror image of Whitmore, except it's dressed in blue jeans instead of business suits) and WMUA (which, for a public broadcast station ends up dangerously close to commercial ventures). The MDC often slips into this bind, and would have been long gone from reality unless a few people came into contact with it...

This is about...humanity being sacrificed to the sacred cow of "efficiency" and, of course, to the almight dollar as well. A dollar bill implies a morality behind it; that is, it's not really the person involved, but the money which is possessed by the person. And that is too high a potentially lethal system for us to deal with.

This is about...avoiding the issues and resorting to snide remarks when referring to somebody whose views you don't like. Saying a person is "full of shit" doesn't mean anything. Say WHY they are...

What this is about is ignorance, lack of thought, and elitism (in all its forms). Goddamn it! GET OFF YOUR HIGH HORSE!

II. The Equation

Thought I'd do something for the mathematically-inclined.

Commericial equals life divided by money (capitalism) minus personality.

Professionalism equals efficiency (deadlines, conciseness, conservation of money) multiplied by machines (systems) plus ego (of bosses) minus personality of peons.

Realism equals an additive quality between commercialism and professionalism (with liberal quantities of racism, sexism and elitism thrown in, because they are there.)

Idealism is the negative quantity in the equation, and looks at what could be rather than building its life around a mathematical formula.

I thank everybody who has ever called me an idealist, for whatever the reason.

III. Personal Request Column

This one's dedicated to Matt Tackeff—"I Left My Heart in the 19th Century" (I know, I know--it's corny)... To Dr. Gage I dedicate "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner"—"water, water everywhere and not a drop to drink" when I dunked him three times on the afternoon of the Heart Fund drive...To Michael Kostek, freedom for Poor Richard's...From Shelly from Hamlin "Why is it that all the rich girls on campus wear peasant blouses?" . . .From John "Why did the buses for the concert get there a half an hour before the Stadium was opening, thereby forcing people to climb over fences?"...To Concert Committee goes the 'We did the best we could' award, which I was proud possessor of last year...From Denny Matteau "I'll never take another drug unless it's for pleasure"... "This one goes out to the 14th floor of John Adams, for the new "Piss-on-you, Jack" major that was currently created.

IV. Additional praise

To Bill Hasson, for the gargantuan feat that was the Black Musicians Conference...to Archie Shepp, thank you for providing some of the finest insight that UMass could ever hope to receive in the interview I had with you...to Sun Ra, for an astounding concert and an even more astoudning discussion afterwards.

Also, I would like to give my highest regards to B.D. Emmart in the Journalistic Studies Department, since he is one of the few professors on this campus who still maintains a grip on sanity. Best of luck in your current conflict over Journalism. The idea of becoming a good technician but having no expertise in another field will lead to a group of empty-headed writers.

And lastly, I would like to thank my mother and father, without whom I would not be possible, in addition to Steve Tripoverme, our beloved editor-in-chief, and Jerry Lazar who unleashed me on you. "Well, I'm afraid we're going to have to leave it there, but we'll take you straight away right over to the Ellscourt Olympia to watch the shirt event...I'll repeat that, the shirt event...I'll repeat that..."

And I still wish you realization.

Sex Vs. The Revolution

"We are returning to the Ice Age," a Marxist friend of mine woefully told me the other day, ". . . all you see around here is that stinking apathy. Before you know it, kids'll be combing their hair in ducks-asses and putting on Zoot Suits. Anybody who believes that the Revolution is at hand ought to have his or her head examined."

The student left, which had seemed so formidable during the late sixties and early seventies, is apparently sinking into a cynical abatement. Sure, one will always find the true believers who are unwilling to foresake the Revolution just because the times are different. The die-hards can be found behind the literature tables which nobody has time to look at, or at the meetings which nobody seems to take an interest in, or at the rallies which don't seem to draw any new blood. They are no longer chased by the cameramen, hungry for a shot of the weirdoes, and their activities can no longer be guaranteed a front-page headline. The great masses of students who were supposed to rise up and deliver us from capitalism never responded to their call. The true believers are still in our midst, but they are no longer in the mainstream of academic life. Their Revolution has become peripheral.

The Great Universities were to have been the centers for the Greening of America. Consciousness Three and all of that Madison Avenue bullshit. But the realm of the typical student's attention was drawn away from the barricades, parades, and charades. Most students, while sympathizing with many of the radicals' professed goals, could not adjust themselves to the roles which were demanded by the imperatives of the Revolution. They were not willing to foresake their individuality, which they were told was bourgeois and decadent. They were not willing to relate to people ideologically. They were not willing to give up material values or embrace the Revolutionary asceticism. And they were not willing to get their heads cracked.

In order to make a Revolution, one must first make Revolutionaries. So said Lenin. But not many students were capable, tempermentally, of becoming self-denying automatons. The fundamental denial that must be made for today's revolution is that of self-esteem. We are all condemned by the Original Sin of wanting to elevate ourselves above the burdens of our predecessors. Being aquisitive is held to be depraved. Striving for constant self-betterment is held to be exploitative. Seeking to be different or unique is held to be elitist. Seeing virtue in continuity is denounced as reactionary. Intimacy with an individual of the opposite sex will bring taunts and cries of "sexism."

More than any other factor, it is sex that will bring about the ultimate isolation of the New Left from the rest of the academic community. It is ironic that a movement that started in part as a protest against the rigid puritanism of dormatory parietals should ultimately be strangled in neo-puritainism within its own ranks. The so-called traditional sex roles, which are the object of denunciation by radical feminists, are not, as they are trying to make us believe, products of arbitrary chauvinism on the part of a white, male exploiting class. Masculinity and Feminity are concepts which are a lot deeper, both psychologically and metaphysically, than the leftists are willing to acknowledge. Should their Revolution continue its onslaught against what is essentially an unalterable sexual awareness, their movement will travel the same road as history's most bankrupt sexual codes. AMOR VINCIT OMNIA.

An African In The United States

By DR. ALLAN O. LANA

It is one thing to be a foreign student in the United States, it is an entirely different story to be a student from Black Africa in America. To an African, love is life and he makes haste to be kind to people irrespective of their nationalities. Back in his mind before he arrives in this country, he has a deep-seated bias against hate and intolerance, against racial and religious bigotry and he is even ignorant of the sociological implications of the words "racism," "segregation," and "discrimination." Through his cultural background, he has a profound bias for peace and love, a bias which leads him to believe that no problem of human relations is ever insoluble.

But when he arrives in this country, he soon finds himself in the midst of a "social crisis." The African finds himself in the middle of a divided people—the black and the white. As time goes on, he begins to ask himself, ask the blacks and the whites alike, why the social condition is the way it is in this country; why, in a nation once proclaimed the land of God, of plenty, must there be so many helpless starving and powerless individuals, and why must there be so much mistrust? Sometimes, the emotional African questions the motives of the United States as to why America will take equality to Africa and practice inequality at home.

If he associates with the white Americans many Afro-Americans will look at him funny (which becomes understandable as time goes on) and if he dissasociates himself from his white colleagues that he works and lives with, they too will start back-stabbing and pass derogatory comments. I went through these changes. I went through so many unfortunate bitter racial experiences in different parts of this country that it is just absolutely and humanly impossible for me not to count myself as one of the victims of this social tragedy. These sad experiences have created so much bitterness in the innermost part of my soul. This bitterness is so hot and heavy that it runs through my blood just as the African music runs through my fingertips. After seven years in this country, I have seen what hate can do—it has kept some men alive, it has given some a lot of strength. But I have not lost faith in humanity.

For one thing, no one has to remind an African who he is—his identify has always been known. But to come to a country where some people tell me through their attitude and their actions that I'm nothing but a second class human being makes my thorough-bred African blood boil. I could never reconcile in anyway with anybody who feels he is my superior because of my skin color.

Americans will react coldly to you if you are black but once they find out that you are a foreigner who happens to be black, they will take their hearts out of the freezer and warm it up and receive you warmly. This schizophrenic personality has made me sick and it has stained my patience many times. And very frankly, I have been very cautious and diplomatic in my dealings with the Americans. I have explained to my parents over the phone on several occasions that to get involved with an American in this country has always been a very delicate thing to me because it requires a great deal of real maturity and true love for humanity to become involved with a group of people who feel you are inferior to them and not get messed up or violent. Funny enough, it is these same people who run out to bathe under the hot summer sun wanting to be as black as me. I cannot understand this schizophrenic behavior.

And, talking about being black, many Americans have asked me about my personal relationship with Afro-Americans and our general attitude toward each other. When I was ignorant of the social dilemma in this country, I used to say that if the black and white Americans could not live together as one, they could as well perish together as fools. Today, I know what's going on. The African and the Afro- American have their differences but let no one doubt, or fool, or mess around with the energy of a united black race. Today, the African and the Afro-American are a re-united people, not just by color but by heritage, conviction and unyielding opposition to a group of people who think they are superior homo sapiens. The African people (that includes the Afro-American) have to come to realize that there is only one confrontation that matters—the confrontation with the cultural rapists.

Dr. Allan O. Lana

Granted, the African problems are great but so are the resources of the continent and its people. Many attempts have been made to undermine and ridicule the independence of the African people whose wisdom, resources, and manpower have been savagely exploited by the empires of the western world. Africa has been painted in odious colors and has suffered a lot of setbacks through false and ungodly political propaganda of the western powers. However, let the whole world know that even though Black Africa has not become in ten to fifteen years of independence what Western Europe and America have become after centuries of transition, yet, Black Africa has progressed despite intricate problems, irresponsibe and irresponsible "neighbours" and exogenously calculated attempts to undermine and cripple her.

Through the philosophy of Pan-Africanism and the ideology of the Third World Alliance, attempts are now constantly being made, not only tonourish these roote of individual cultural uniqueness that have continued to live in the subsoil of Africanism despite the working of the topsoil by a foreign power, but also to gain greater access to the economic levers of powers, skills, and productivity. After seven years in this country, it is impossible for me or for any African to dissassociate himself from the Afro-American struggle because it is not only a national struggle, it is an international struggle and I feel that it must be waged with that important perspective. I hope that all black people will seize this initiative provided them by the international reality of that struggle and continue to develop specific programs for the co-ordination of the Afro-American struggle with those of their African brothers. This is one reason why people like Mrs. (Dr.) Johnnetta B. Cole, Dr. Godwin Oyewole and Mr. Bill Hasson have a special place in my heart because through their travels and cultural programs, each has respectively enlightened his community about the black race. But one caution to the black man: You must take your black woman along with you in the struggle, for, like my mama once told me, "The black woman is the culmination of every good woman in the world." Both the black man and the black woman need each other, they must stand by each other.

The American Academic System vs. African Needs

No question in my mind, the graduate curriculum in most American universities especially in the sciences has no rival in the whole world, but after receiving my first degree in January, 1969 from the University of Wisconsin, I became convinced that the undergraduate curriculum, especially for the foreign student sent to this country to study for a first degree, needs a serious revision.

If the North American university is to be an effective force in assisting the less developed nations, it must be innovative in developing an international dimension that would parallel the domestic problems of the developing countries that it is aiding. It cannot be successful (and reports show that it has not been) in its mission if it merely attempts to mold and/or make the rest of the world adopt a system that has evolved in response to the needs of the United States. Let me expand on my statement by laying an example on you. An African student who is sent to this country to specialize in a particular field only gets the opportunity to take two or three courses in that area of study before he returns home with a B.S. (!) because he has had to fulfill some other requirements. His counterpart in the same field who studies and graduates with the same degree in Britain knows a lot more in his area because he has taken more relevant courses in his major field. While I am in support of a broad education, I cannot comprehend what a course like American History and so on would do to benefit an African student whose stay in the U.S. is only temporary. I was almost a victim of this situation but once I got myself out of it, I successfully organized a series of negotiation meetings with the Deans of Student Affairs, and of different colleges concerned in my former institutions (University of Wisconsin at Madison and Ohio State) so that the academic programs of an African studying in the U.S. could be modified in such a way that he can meet some of the challenges that await him in his country. Unfortunately, due to my own academic commitments, I have had no time to meet with some of the UMass administrators on this issue. I regret this very much.

Since this is my last semester at the University of Massachusetts and the last of my seven years in the U.S. as a student, I would very much like to express my profound gratitude to everybody who has been nice to me. The cloud of bitterness in my heart created as a result of many sad racial experiences is not heavy enough to make me forget these nice people. If any of you ever get a chance to join any of those "love trains" or "friendship trains" that travels to Africa every Summer and Christmas and if your "train" ever stops in Nigeria, please check out Chief Samuel O. Lana of Ibadan. Whether I am in Nigeria or not, you can be sure you have a place in our home for my parents will show you how hospitable and lovable and loving Africans are.

Some of you who know me personally might have wondered why I shifted from one institution to the other so much. The reason was mainly in search of continued professional development and experience. As someone actually interested in the scientific advancement of Africa, I realize that the need to visit places, to gain as much scientific and practical experience as possible from different set-ups in different institutions is of paramount importance if he (the foreign student) is to be of maximum use in making decisions and in carrying out his assignments to the best of his ability when he returns home. With the guidance and assistance of the University of Wisconsin at Madison, the Ohio State University and the University of Massachusetts, I feel I have accomplished this mission and the time has come for me to make my exit.

I feel very lucky indeed to have been given the opportunity to study at UMass. As the president of the International Club at Ohio State, I was invited to participate in the planning of the long range program of that university from an international perspective. During some of those planning sessions, I envisioned where institutions like Wisconsin, California might be heading. All I can say now is that I hope that the University of Massachusetts will continue to rise up to the challenges of the future as it has done in the last eventful decade bearing in mind that the "University is people." I hope that the progressive administrators that this institution is fortunate to have will be very cautious against making UMass a carbon copy of Wisconsin or California or Ohio State but work closely with its students to make this institution the finest state institution in the world—to have its own uniqueness, its own integrity, its own criteria for high quality education. UMass must also create better programs for the disadvantaged and the oppressed minorities.

I cannot and will not forget UMass. My professors have been nice but my work here has been very demanding—but happily I have come to the sound realization that being a protected child all my life, I needed such discipline. UMass has helped me achieve one of my important goals in life but my search for education is endless.

When I return to Nigeria, I hope to use my experience in the U.S. in making some valuable and honorable contributions. It is amazing the tremendous amount of unshakable faith that young Africans have in Black Africa. I believe that with this faith, we shall overcome our problems, that we will go out and adjourn the councils of despair and bring new light into the dark chambers of pessimism; and we will be able to rise from the fatigue of despair to the brilliance of hope. I also anticipate a better life for an average African because every child who learns, every man who finds work and every sick body made whole is like a drop of water added to a fountain of knowledge—and that brightens the hope of the faithful. I pray and hope that by the beginning of the twenty-first century, Black Africa would be in a situation where, even though she might not be able to close completely the dark corridors of pain through which sufferers must pass, yet, she will be equppped to do all that is humanly possible to increase the knowledge of those diseases that plague us and to lessen the suffering and reduce the waste of human lives. This is my hope for Africa as I leave UMass and I know that these dreams and these goals can and must be achieved.

Dr. Allan O. Lana, plant pathologist, received his B.S. from Wisconsin in 1969, M.S. from Ohio State in 1970, and will receive an M.S. and a Ph.D. from UMass this year. He was an All-American soccer player at Wisconsin in 1967-68, President of the International club at Wisconsin in 1967-68 and Ohio State 1969-70. He was the most outstanding foreign student in 1968 at Wisconsin.

Letters To The Editor

A Suitable Victim?

To The Editor:

Watch Out. If You are a conscientious educator–You may be next. If You have high qualifications, if your students overwhelmingly acknowledge your excellence as an educator–You may be next. The fashionable practice, to which You may fall victim, is excercised by department heads or personnel committees. It is known to all as nonreappointment.

First place in the race of this month has been awarded to department Head Levin and His committee in the Russian department. They have dutifully recommended the nonreappointment of Professor L. Ostrorog–one of You.

What are the qualifications which have entitled her to be the victim of May? First, she is a native speaker with a Ph. D. from an excellent graduate department in her field. Second, she teaches three required, upper-level courses; and, she teaches them in a coherent, tangible manner. Third, she conducts the class in Russian. Professor Ostrorog is always available to answer our questions. In the past she has divided up the class-giving us more individual attention. Furthermore, she has even found time to publish a lengthy translation and is presently working on a second one. Of course she has served on departmental committees. Finally, her teacher evaluations reflect a consistent pattern of excellence (at least for the two years I have studied under her). In fact, twenty out of twenty-two students recently signed a lengthy petition outlining why she should receive the Distinguished Teacher's Award. Clearly, a more suitable victim would be hard to find!

It is with dubious pleasure that I have been delegated to congratulate you Head Levin and your personnel committee in the Russian department for disregarding her superb credentials, as well as your students' requests. You, Head Levin, stated publically that an emphasis is placed on teaching as the outstanding factor which determines reappointment/nonreappointment. After having six to eighteen credits as Dr. Ostrorog's students we are unquestionably not qualified to ascertain her capabilities. We thank you again for so admirably playing your role in the game of higher learning which strives for excellence in education.

Correspondence Helps

To The Editor:

I'm a straight forward person, so I'll get right to the point. Presently I'm incarcerated at McNeil Island Federal Prison. The purpose of this letter is that I'm seeking correspondence with females and I need your assistance. Correspondence helps a young man to maintain his sanity and also the time to pass by. If possible I would like for you to place these few lines in the school paper along with my address. All your efforts will be appreciated.

I hope you are not biased as far as convicts are concerned, for we are not disasterous beings. Thank you for your time.

What To Do With Nixon

To The Editor:

The dilemma of Watergate is this: what can the people do about Mr. Nixon? Our inability to do much of anything about him, short of impeachment, is evidence of a basic defect in our form of government. Watergate dramatically demonstrates that the President is not accountable directly to the people except every four years. Right now, the people's choices seem limited to the dread and unacceptable alternatives of doing nothing, or else impeaching the President.

Most parliamentary democracies hold the Chief Executive closely accountable by means of the vote of confidence, which may be held whenever an issue of major importance arises. The government can be voted up or down, and changed with a minimum of lasting damage or disruption to the governmental process itself.

What was most disturbing to me about Mr. Nixon's speech was the scarcely concealed implication: "You can't lay a hand on me!" That's true, except for impeachment. Many thoughtful people, however, feel that Nixon is certainly accountable for Watergate, even if not knowledgeable of it. As such, the courageous move on his part would have been to ask for a vote of confidence.

In our present predicament, Congress ought properly to ask Mr. Nixon to resign pending, not impeachment proceedings, but a special Presidential election. After all, Watergate was most obviously an assortment of illegal interferences with our supposedly free Presidential election. Indirectly, or more subtly, it illustrates a Constitutional defect which can be remedied, at least in the present instance, by the means I suggest.

If you agree with the above sentiments, or even if you don't, may I ask that you communicate your views to your Senator or Representative?

The Maple Hedge

To The Editor:

People speak of student imput; but who the hell listens? Residents of Brooks House were rudely illinformed on the alteration of their landscape. Certain plans for a University pharmacy were drawn up, which consisted of a trailer being placed ten (10) ft. north of Brooks. Fine. In order for this trailer to be put on this site, a 15-20 ft. Maole Hedge would have to be removed and replanted on the south side of Brooks. Fine. After looking the plans over, I realized that the tree must be removed. Fine. But the incompetance of the Physical Plant in the removal of the tree, is one of our complaints. In excavating the Maple Hedge, they severely damaged the root system of the adjoining Tulip tree, which may lead to the demise of this tree. With proper supervision and root pruning methods, this could have been avoided.

Our second complaint is: Brooks house would have been more than happy to partake in this removal process, but we were not informed of it. Whereas the aesthetic value of the increasingly diminishing greenery on this campus involves us all. In the future we strongly request that we be informed of administrative decisions involving the environment or otherwise.

Horrendous Mess

To The Editor:

I have been attending this illustrious university for nearly three years and to this day I have never seen anything to equal the horrendous mess that our parking lots are in this year.

Last September I changed to "H" Lot from "E" Lot so I could at least get a chance at a parking space; I got sick of rubbing fenders with "V" and "F" Lot cars in "E" Lot.

I estimated the police ticketed "E" Lot about twice during the 1971-72 academic year, small wonder that there were so many squatters. "H" Lot hasn't proven much better. Just to cite an example; I had to park on the lawn beside Chadbourne this morning because all the "H" Lots were filled. A quick count revealed a minute number of legally labelled cars, the remainder consisted of UNLABELLED cars. Where are all the stickers going? And we hear they want to increase sticker fees, what for?

I feel that with a more stringent ticketing system we could alleviate part of the problem. We hope for better, but I have my doubts.

Wondering what you're gonna do with all those clothes you can't fit in your trunk?

Wondering what you're gonna do with all those records that don't sound like they did last September?

Wondering what you're gonna do with all that stuff the head of residence doesn't want you to leave behind?

WELL

Volunteers from the J.O.E. Program are interested in taking it and most anything else that works off your hands.

Call 545-0917 or 0636 and ask for Barry or leave a message.

Please keep in mind we are interested in things teenagers could use like bicycles, records, record players, clothes, furniture, knick-knacks, etc.

More Letters To The Editor

Winning Them Over

To The Editor:

In reference to Ms. Best's letter of May 7, may I add that I am just as disgusted about the same governmental failings. My split with her is in my approach, which is republicanist and capitalist. My split with most Republican capitalists is my objective, which is the service of the people. My taking this position is intuitive, of course, but after reading The Communist Manifesto I found no better arguments in Marxism. The majority of Americans also happen to believe in capitalism, so my stance certainly has a nature of expediency.

Expediency should be a major consideration of the University, especially when you look at the credibility of the University outside of the University, which is nil. When you also see that the credibility of the Northeast outside of the Northeast is nil, you can understand the meaning of the proverbial spit in the sea. So when the hometown folks read of a group ousting an ROTC unit off a campus in the Northeast, they tend to dismiss all information from that campus. And when similar occurrences appear on other campuses, they tend to dismiss all information from all campuses. Anyone doubting the lack of leadership from the campuses should pick up a Newsweek or a Springfield Union, or recall that when Senator McGovern spoke out against absurd Pentagon spending, foreign interventionalism, and big business "ripoffs" he got thrown on his ass. Could it be that these very just causes suffered through their association with a "lunatic fringe?" On a more local level, please recall that the strike movement of last spring lost too much student support because of the numerous side issues. There were people who were for peace but not for women's liberation, and people who would not be for peace if the Third World Caucus could not share in the leadership of the thing. By the time it hit WWLP television the non-academics were splitting their guts. How can anyone expect a popular revolution to succeed when the populace is laughing at it?

Farm subsidies are the result of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1936, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, and the Soil Bank Act of 1956. The first two were passed when it was apparent that nobody was going to get rich at farming, and the last was probably the result of a little needling of the Eisenhower administration. They all are vehicles for granting subsidies for limiting productive acreage on farms, which is an ineffective way of production control in a technological age. The AAA also grants subsidies more directly in relation to production control, functions that any profit-maximizing farmer would engage in anyway. The Commodity Credit Corporation, which gives loans to farmers and buys surplus production in order to maintain parity, is part of the AAA. The Soil Conservation and Soil Bank acts should be repealed. The AAA should be reduced to the CCC, which is essential to equitably stabilized farm prices.

The Celler-Kefauver Act of 1950 prevents mergers such as the mentioned meat packers proposal; when it is enforced. That happens when the Justice Department or a private group draws charges. That John Connally's law firm is handling the case is deplorable in the light of current Executive integrity, but it can be brought up again in a civil suit.

How many people a firm should hire is a question of who will subsidize surplus labor. One way or another, people should put their money where their mouths are.

Defense spending appears to be dependent on the leverage the defense industry can use on the Pentagon. The defense industry gets most of that leverage from the apathy and ignorance of the voters, and the Universities' function of confusing rational spending with pacifism (which incidentally has very little nationwide popularity.)

What the problems come to is, how do you educate and commit people to your cause. My guess is that picking on an on-campus minority scapegoat is not an effective way to do this, and that those who indulge in it are seeking only to establish their consciousness.

Who Is Sinclair Foster?

To The Editor:

After several months of trying to psych out who Sinclair Foster really is, I believe I've got it. The notorious Mr. Foster, who obviously has a soft spot for Captain Ferber of the tennis team, is none other than Howie Bloom.

Inequitable Proposal

To The Editor:

I oppose the parking proposal on several counts: Firstly, I submit that the parking condition as it now stands does not present such an immediate and pressing problem as to require such a drastic proposal. Secondly, I am opposed to the fact that the committee submits this proposal as a solution to the inequities of the present point system. The proposed system would assign parking spaces according to one's ability to pay. I submit that this proposal is more, rather than less, inequitable to both the students and the University employees. Thirdly, an alternative to the purchasing of these extravagant parking stickers to ride the presently provided free buses. When questioned as to the source of funding for these buses when the present grant expires, no one on the [illegible] could provide an answer. So [illegible] on them! Fourthly, it has [illegible]en maintained that any person w[illegible] or some unknown reason does not wish to pay this outrageous fee, can, for the same five dollar fee, park in the infamous V Lot. From the people I have questioned on this subject, I would make a conservative estimate of fifty percent of the people who will bring cars onto campus next semester will want the five dollar "yellow specials". This puts the number of cars trying to get into V lot at Approximately 9000. Since V lot has a capacity of under 900 cars, some way will have to be figured out to fit ten cars in one spot. Fifthly, aside from the fact that you will have to fight nine others for your spot this proposal is quite reasonable. Until you discover that you have to walk from V lot to say the Graduate Research Center. Good Exercise! Fear not, Professor Shuldinger has promised us that a shuttle bus will be leaving V lot every ten minutes. A few short calculations, assuming that every one will arrive within say 8:00 and 10:00 a.m., tell me that one shuttle bus every ten minutes for two hours, carrying 9000 people to the campus, assuming no rushes before classes, yields a grand total of 750 people on one bus. Ten cars in one parking space maybe but 750 people on one bus, let's be reasonable.

I am afraid that the committee has not properly surveyed the situation and in its rash manner will put the University parking system in a shambles.

I have two proposals for the solution of the "parking problem", one of them drastic and one of them not so drastic.

The first proposal, is to determine how many if any paid employees of the University were paid to develop this travesty of a proposal. When that is determined, give them all a five year leave of absence (without pay) to think things over, and use their salaries to build an enormous parking lot somewhere and save the state, the taxpayers, and the students and employees of the University a lot of money.

The second proposal is for the committee to admit its mistake and meet again, this time allowing some input from the students and faculty and workers. To study the situation as it stands and determine whether or not there is a true parking crisis. If it is determined that there is then 1) Reinstitute the point plan without the distinctions between student, faculty and worker. 2) Re-write the point plan to take into account the fact that not all people have a choice whether or not to bring a car on campus. 3) Include a provision which would assign the worse lots to those who are within the scope of the present bys system and still drive a car. 4) Make a true effort to reach the legislature regarding any parking problem by submitting the parking budget as a higher priority item rather than assuming that the students, faculty and workers can take an increase.

Continuing Education

Study In Africa Or India

For those who shudder at the thought of perspiring in a summer-school classroom, the Center for International Education offers a unique alternative. This summer, the Center will sponsor four three-week study trips to Africa and one to India, granting up to six credits in education through the Division of Continuing Education.

In the third year of operation, the study trips are coordinated in cooperation with the American Forum for International Study, Cleveland, Ohio. Each group of about thirty participants will be accompanied by an American Forum representative and a Center course instructor.

For participants, three academic credits will be granted for participation in seminars, discussions, and field trips, and the preparation of a short paper. Following the trip, three additional credits may be earned through an independent study project in curriculum development.

The four study trips include: independent study to Ghana; introduction to African studies in Ghana, Togo, and Dahomey; comparative West African societies; and comparative East African societies. The Indian "From Independence to Green Revolution" program includes New Delhi, Bangalore, Madras, and Bombay in the itinerary.

The American Forum was established in 1968 to strengthen African Studies in American education through intensive academic seminars and field study programs for American educators in Africa. Working jointly with the Center for International Education, the Forum emphasizes learning through personal contact and experience.

Anyone interested in further details concerning the program is asked to contact Suzi Kindervatter, or Adeye Befecadu at the Center for International Education, 50465.

Come To The Fair!

Come rain or come shine, the twentieth annual Amherst Community Fair will be held tomorrow and Saturday, May 11 and 12.

The amusement rides will open at noon tomorrow, signalling the start of the weekend's festivities. All food and game booths open at 3:00 p.m. Events scheduled for Friday include an organ recital by Norman Charette at 6:00 p.m.; the crowning of the Amherst Fair Queen at 7:00 p.m.; and a Band Concert with a jazz ensemble under the direction of Andrew Phillips.

On Saturday, in addition to the booths and rides, a parade will begin at 9:30 a.m., followed by a Children's Zoo on the Commons from 10:00 a.m. until 2:00 p.m. Again for the children, the New Cell Theatre Ensemble will present the play, "The Velveteen Rabbit" at 11:00 a.m. In addition to a Canine Obedience Demonstration at noon, the Annual Children's Pet Parade will march off at 1:00 p.m. At 2:30, Andrew Phillips will conduct a symphony concert.

The Amherst Fair Committee welcomes everyone to come on down to the Amherst Commons on Friday and Saturday to taste the food, try the rides, and attend the amusement activities.

Continuing Ed Announces Program Of Summer Courses

The Division of Continuing Education at UMass announces its first program of summer courses. The courses, which carry full University credit, are offered in the evening and are open to any student possessing at least a high school diploma or its equivalent. Classes begin the week of June 25 and continue through the week of August 17.

Mail registration for the summer session runs from June 1 through June 15. In-person registration will be held on June 23 in Draper Annex from 10:00 in the morning to 12:00 noon, and from 1:00 to 4:00 in the afternoon. Students can also register on June 25 at Boyden Gymnasium between 9:00 and 12:00 and 1:30 and 4:30.

Altogether, 47 credit courses will be offered, with credit being available on both a graduate and an undergraduate level. Included are a number of University core requirements, and a series of intensive foreign language classes. Continuing Education students are also able to enroll in regular University day classes.

The Summer Session will also include special noncredit courses in: basic geneology, the mandala as a way of centering, and piano tuning. A full listing of Continuing Education summer courses is attached.

The Division charges a standard fee of $27.00 per credit for all its summer courses. The fee is applicable to Massachusetts residents and non-residents alike. For further information on the Continuing Education summer program contact: Summer Session Office, Division of Continuing Education, 314 Arnold House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002 or telephone 5-0480.

Afro-Am Dept. Summer Course

The Afro-Am Department announces a summer course on Pan-Africanism and liberation struggles in Africa. The course is designed to familiarize students with the nature of European (Portuguese in particular) imperialism and racism in Africa. It will consequently focus on the continuing Pan-Africanist revolutionary struggles by the African peoples against oppression and exploitation in South Africa, Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique, Guinea Bisal and Cape Verdean Islands.

Would you like to continue your Health Care at the Health Services this summer?

The University Health Services will provide continuing care to those students who will be in the Amherst area during the summer. Services may be obtained by electing one of the two options enumerated below:

OPTION A: Return the tear-off sheet at the bottom to the Health Services Business Office with a check in the amount of $30.00 payable to the University of Massachusetts. Payment of this fee will entitle you to receive the same services that are provided under the regular health fee at no additional charge for the entire summer. Services include unlimited physician consultation, nursing services, lab, x-ray, medications, 24-hour emergency care, inpatient care on campus, and mental health consultation. (Those attending Summer School need only send $12.00, as the Bursar will bill them for an $18.00 Summer School Health Fee.) The enrollment period for this option will close on June 15.

OPTION B: Any student who has paid the Health Fee this past year may receive care at the Health Center on a fee-for-service basis. You will be charged for each visit ($10 for an M.D., $5.00 for an R.N., etc.), as well as for all other services and medications you receive.
NOTE: The Student Health Insurance will not reimburse you for services received at the Health Center, except for emergency treatment resulting from accident or injury. There is no need to enroll for this option, but we would appreciate your returning the tear-off sheet with this option checked in order that we may have some idea of the number of students that may be utilizing this option.

Name _____ Student # _____

Option A ( )
Please enroll me in the University Health Services Prepaid Summer Program. Enclosed is my check or money order payable to "University of Massachusetts" in the amount of $30.00; $12.00 if attending Summer School.

Option B ( )
I plan to request services as needed on a fee-for-services basis.

Spanish-speaking children such as this one in Holyoke are tutored by a group of UMass students of Spanish. The UMass Hispanic languages and literatures department is offering a master of arts degree in bilingual-bicultural studies, with courses beginning this summer. Undergraduate and graduate courses will be offered for people who teach in bilingual classrooms or who are involved with other needs of Spanish-speaking communities.

University Year For Action

Special Days: Often In Holyoke

Some Holyoke kids learned one day a few months ago that plant food is manure, and that's why it smells the way it does.

Herbert Cockcroft was there that day and he explained plant food to those city youngsters who helped him plant trees in Hikers Park near the Holyoke Model Cities offices on Center St.

It was a special day for Herb, a UMass student enrolled in University Year for Action, the federal program which brings college students and the poor together, to combat poverty while educating college students outside the classroom.

Other days are special too, because Herb's projects as a landscape architect for Model Cities have given him a chance to improve some physical environments in Holyoke, and express his ideas on other improvements. At Hikers Park he selected and located the greenery, and said later, "One of the greatest things I've seen down here is four or five birds in a tree. It makes you feel kind of good. You're bringing some of the natural things back to the city."

When Herb saw plans for a new elementary school in Ward One he suggested the approach to the building be changed to incorporate a nearby existing park. This meant elimination of a street bwtween the park and the school, so school children might use the park without crossing the street.

So, Herb feels "kind of good"—a sentiment echoed by other University Year for Action students who leave the classroom for a year to work for UYA, earning $50 a week and 30 academic credits.

UYA fits nicely into Herb's second year of graduate work in landscape architecture, a year usually devoted to independent study in the field.

Other students have tailored their educational programs to suit themselves, and UYA means a chance to try out a field, learn outside the classroom, and help people by working within the system. UMass UYA students work in legal services offices, detention center, hospitals, and other social agencies.

Helping welfare recipients with legal problems is "a lot more valuable to me" than classroom instruction says Chris Meehan, a para- legal aid for Western Massachusetts Legal Services in Pittsfield. But he's under no illusions about what he can accomplish as a UYA student. "What I can do personally is very limited, so I do that. If you think you can save the world, you'll just depress yourself to death."

For academic credit and low pay, the UMass student volunteers help people get along in today's world. A University Year for Action.

National Science Foundation Awards Grants

U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke today announced that UMass has been awarded a $20,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to support a one-year study entitled "Differentiable Transformation Groups." Principal investigators will be Larry N. Mann and J.C. Su of the Mathematics Department.

Teachers Ecology Workshops To Be Given

Ecology Workshops on soil, water and vegetation for elementary and secondary school teachers will be given today and May 23 in Hawley and Lenox, Arless A. Spielman, director of the Cooperative Extension Service at the UMass, has announced.

The workshops are designed to give instructors field experience for teaching ecological subjects on their own school grounds or in environments near their school. There are three different workshops at the two locations. One of the workshops is being coordinated with an established program of outdoor education conducted by the Lanesboro School System. Thus, the teachers of Grades 5 through 6 will have the opportunity to work with students of these grades at the Hawley State Forest May 10. The other two workshops, designed for teachers of Grades K through 4 and 7 through 12, will be held at Shadowbrook in Lenox May 23. Although the program is teacher-oriented, the information and experience offered will be of value to anyone working toward environmental improvement.

The Planning Committee chairman is Dick L. Boyce, Regional Community Resource Development Specialist. Others are: Warren Archey and H. Peter Wood of the Pioneer-Valley Berkshire Region; Neil Anderson, Lanesboro School; Mitchie Backiel, Mount Greylock Regional High School; John Gagnon, Williams College Center for Environmental Studies; Donald Geer, Massachusetts Department of Education; George Hamilton, Berkshire Community College; Ronald Kujawski, Simons Rock College; Ann Nesbit, Pittsfield School Department; Betty Phinney, Massachusetts Audubon Society; George S. Pierre, Mount Greylock School Union; and Thomas White, Massachusetts Department of Education.

This program in Community Resource Development is being sponsored by the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Massachusetts Department of Education, Berkshire Consortium for Environmental Education, and Lanesboro Public Schools. Further information is available from the Cooperative Extension Service, Stockbridge Hall, UMass.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

By SYDNEY OMARR

It is difficult to cheal an honest man and almost impossible to take advantage of Capricorn. These natives can ride with the tide and emerge victorious. Capricorn knows the meaning of adversity and is capable of overcoming obstacles. These persons win in the long run. Capricorn suffers setbacks but becomes stronger as a result. James Earl Jones, Ava Gardner and Henry Miller are good examples of this vital zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be visiting individual who is confined to home or hospital. You may also be making decision about club, special group or organization. It is apparent that you are ending one phase of activity and getting ready for another.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Love could be rocky. Disputes are on agenda. But you do find out where you stand. Your individuality comes through you are better for it. Leo is in picture. Much sound and fury could be featured. Stick to principles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your hunches are apt to be on target. You learn by preparing to teach. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Older woman may confide problem. Be sympathetic without becoming inextricably involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Postpone journey, if practical. Some messages, calls, directions and reservations are subject to change and confusion. Relative is in mood to argue. Maintain balance and sense of humor. Then you ultimately gain.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check apparent minor matters. Be a shrewd observer. Don't be in too much of a hurry to sign. Money is involved and there are aspects which indicate necessity for caution. One who should be looking out for your interests could be asleep at wheel.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cycle is such that you want to take initiative. But there is angle here which indicates aggressive action aimed at you. Be prepared for one who opposes your ideas to take pugnacious stance. Be aware of alternatives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Aries message. Your health needs attention in sense that medical, dental appointments should be checked. Family member is willing to make concession. If you are diplomatic, you could win major point.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Perceive subtle nuances. Pisces could be involved. Friends may disagree among each other. Strive to maintain neutral stance without appearing disinterested. Not easy but probably is necessary. Member of opposite sex makes puzzling statemnt.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accept overtime or special assignment, if you take on more responsibility, you enhance chances for financial gain. Travel arrangements could be delayed. Message or correspondence turns up additional information. Don't be in too much of a hurry!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lunar aspect is such that your philosophical concepts are due to be shaken. Individual who seemed to lack intellectual capacity issues challenge. You may find yourself in somewhat of a quandary. Don't take everything in literal sense.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money that had been "tied up" is loosened. Means funds can flow where, in recent past, there were problems with red tape. Take initiative. Be original, creative. Set you own pace and be confident.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take special care in traffic. If in doubt, do nothing. Slow pace. Avoid taking unnecessary chances around machinery, electricity. One familiar with legal procedures could issue a challenge. Permit logic equal time with impulse or emotion.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, original, independent, stubborn, basically courageous and constantly trying to "find yourself". You are really an artist, though you might deny it. If single, marriage is indicated in 1973, with September highlighted. Married or single, this should be once of your significant years-more responsibility and the recognition to go with it.

Tony Pendleton

Pendleton-Two Out Of Three Isn't Bad

By WALT POWERS

After four years, sprinter Tony Pendleton has no regrets. When I joined the UMass track team back in 1971, I set three goals for myself. First, I wanted to make the team, then break the UMass records in the 100 and 220, and finally, qualify for the National championships. I've achieved the first two, and almost made the third. I wish I could have done more, but I'm not disappointed. My stay at UMass has been very satisfying."

Satisfying, yes, not only for Tony, but his teammates and coaches as well. Since he joined the varsity as a sophomore, the UMass trackmen have compiled a dual meet record of 22-6 and finished second and third in New England. This Saturday they'll be chasing their third conference title in a row, and Pendleton, as co-captain, will lead them. It's a role he's familiar with.

"I was captain of the Haverhill (Mass.) track team in my senior year," Tony recalls, "And I was the best 220 man on the team. Because of our strength in the 100, I almost never ran it, but when we ran the State Class B championships, I entered the 100, and won." Tony's high school success nearly kept him out of UMass." About ten schools sought me out, and John Thomas, the BU coach, recruited me personally. It was only at the last minute that I chose UMass."

Tony broke into the varsity with a bang. As a sophomore, he won the conference 220 and finished third in the IC4A 100. He set varsity records in the 100, 220, and as a member of the 440 relay team. Paul Metallo broke his 100 record last year, but the other two still stand.

Pendleton has always been serious about his work, but seriousness has never prevented him from enjoying it. As team captain, he trys to convey a sense of enjoyment along with personal achievement and team responsibility. "Sure, I laugh a lot." he admits "But I hate bossy people, and humor is a good way to get my point across. When I try something, I want to be the best at it, but I want to have fun. This year's team is the strongest I've ever run with, but we're loose, we get along with each other, we're a TEAM."

Though well known for his exploits on the track, his other interests take up just as much time. He's appeared in every production of the UMass Black Repertory theatre over the past four years, as well as working with Ray Nichols on the Bowker stage crew. For this reason, he's been accepted to the UMass theater grad school, despite the fact that he's a sociology major.

"With track and the theater being year-round occupations, it hasn't always been easy to study," he says, a little regretfully. "My grades have suffered, but I've done a lot of things at UMass, and I've really enjoyed it here. The future? If I don't hit 9.4 in the 100, by this summer, I'll stop running competitively. I've already been accepted to several law schools, so it looks like I'm headed for a career in law. I'd love to coach track someday, but the season isn't over yet, and right now I just want to help UMass win the Yankee Conference and New Englands."

Doubles-A Unique Experience

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Tennis is a demanding sport psychologically. You're always left with the notion that you could have played better. That one overhead you softeneted up on, that double fault that cost you the game, that volley at net that you should have landed in the corner, not in the net, they all nag at your psyche after the match.

Those are the frustrations of singles. Doubles is another matter, in doubles that feeling of total control is lost. You can be on top of your game and get slaughtered if your partner is having an off day.

Doubles involves a different strategy than singles. Here you seize the net to win. Doubles demands a more controlled temper. It's one thing to display anger and disgust at your own mistakes, but quite another to do so when your partner is erring.

When speaking of team unity, Coach John Chapman of UConn pointed out that, "Only getting along with your doubles partner is important." While UMass' top seven men exemplify team compatibility, their three doubles team represent an interesting paring of personalities.

At second doubles the sophomore duo, Robert Schpeiser and Mike Philipp (5-3 on the year) represent polarized positions on a calm-nervous continuum. Philipp is the eptiome of non-chalance. Disimilarly Schpeiser is more jittery on the court. As the match score tightens, so does he.

Philipp, whokeeps insisting that he's 21 in prison serving life without parole, creates pressure for excitement. And in his own flippant way, his looseness is often taken as a "I could care less" attitude by Schpeiser. But that's not the case.

Ex-Navy submariners, Ted Donahue and Don Douglas, claim top spot in the UMass doubles lineup. The D & D boys ar a 53 year old doubles team and their pro-wess lies in their power; they both know how to wail that ball.

With Douglas' immense intensity on the court it is rumored that Donahue has just the right medicine to crack a smile on Douglas' face. It's a third world expression that goes: "Far out man."

On the other hand, when Donahue's concentration goes adrift (as happens often) it's Douglas' job to remind Teddy that he's out on a tennis court, playing a tennis match.

In their third year together the team of Steve Ferber and Fred Braley are a left-right combo that have their heads in pretty much the same place. At 8-1 on the season, they are having even less trouble with their opposition that their record might indicate.

The greatest problem facing the duro is motivation. Both known to play extremely well under pressure (they clinched the Yan-Con's plus two subsequent dual matches), both Ferber and Braley have lost the one-strong killer instinct.

This doubles' team's greatest fear is that at the same time both players wll get that lackadaisical feeling. It's already happened once this season.

With a combined record of 20-5, UMass' doubles teams are their strong point. Few would dispute that close personal relationships among the doubles partners has had a great deal to do with that mark.

Rowers Compete In Dad Vail

By RICH CLAIR

For seniors Bill Moran, Al Flanders, and Jeff Allen, it is the end of four years of rowing at UMass, none of them having rowed before college, and they want to see this as the year that the Varsity takes it all the way. But there will be a lot of other crews doing their damndest to try and knock them out of there. Coast Guard being one of the first in this long list.

This line-up will be represeinting UMass's Varsity efforts for the Dad Vail Champ

This line-up will be representing UMass's Varsity efforts for the 1973 Dad Vail Champs; Peter Berg, Paul Gowen, Al Flanders, Tony Joneck, Rich Clair, Bill Fitzpatrick, Bill Moran, stroke Jeff Allen, and coxswain Roger Bonsall. This boat will be pulling for all they are worth when it comes to the elimination and qualifying heats on Friday and in Saturday afternoon's finals.

The pressure is no less on the men in J.V. eight. They have done the work, they have made the sacrifices and now they want the Gold! Once again it is Coast Guard in prime contention, along with a number of strong crews from the South (Rollins, F.I.T., Florida Tech).

And it may just come down to a question of who wants it bad enough. The boat that plans on being the one to get there first consists of Bill Vose, Dick D'Addario, Tom Fahey, Jim Bouzianis, Mike Kasmarek, Jack Watkins, Peter Flood, stroke Craig Peters, and cox Tom Richard.

Coach Charles "Chick" Leonard has produced another great freshman crew. Last year, he followed the philosophy of training his charges until they were "ready to race, or DEAD" and those men went out and won themselves a Silver medal, second place. Not bad for a team with no prior rowing experience.

And this year, he is at it again. Though not as big as last year's boat, these freshmen have been truckin' all over the Connecticut River and are ready to upset the established (and recruited boats from Marietta, Marist, Coast Guard, and Trinity. The ones to do the job this year are: John Moynihan, Dick Marshall, Al Baird, Ken Dodge, Kevin Connor, Tom Stone, stroke Steve Loomer and cox Rocco Diverdi.

In the fours, there is to be found a no less dedicated group of oarsmen. Bruce MacLean, Bruce Marcham, Paul Sweeney and Rob Hopkins in the "A" boat with cox Jim Campbell, and John Hansman, Peter Segerstrom, Al Besette, Peter Bates and cox Bruce Kline in the "B" boat.

Saturday night and Sunday will be the end of the year party, and hopefully the Varsity will be drinking from their pewter victory mugs and there will be a lot of Gold hanging around the necks of these deserving oarsmen. Nine months of work is an awful lot of time and work to accept anything else.

Minutemen Sports

Editor's Note

(Editor's Note) 1972-73 was a big year for the UMass athletic program. Frank McInerney became the athletic director in September and watched the school tear up the Yankee Conference, attend post-season tournaments, and roll on to the best all-around season in the history of the UMass athletic program. Here are some highlights from the top stories of that year.

UMass Reaps 1st NIT Gold

By EARLE BARROLL
March 19, 1973

New York - The numbers 78-71 will become enshrined in UMass sports history. With them the thoughts of N.I.T.'s past will remain just that—in the past. Right now the emphasis is on N.I.T. present and a clash with North Carolina tomorrow night in the quarter -finals at Madison Square Garden.

The Minutemen served the selection committee a mickey Saturday night wnen they sent heavy favored Missouri to an unanticipated early exit in their first ever opening round victory after two previous failures.

With this seemingly elusive plateau achieved coach Jack Leaman said after the game, "Every time you do something great, you have to go a step further. Our next step is to now win the tournament." Is it greed? Well, if so then leaman has a rallied horde waiting to back him to the end.

The manner in which the Minutemen pulled off this nationally viewed upset borders on the scary side, when you think about it. Said Leaman, "We didn't play well, but we did enough good things to beat a nationally ranked team."

Leaman has never pulled a punch. His above analysis is well documented, The Minutemen did not play well, but in the process they turned the odds into a heap of bunk, a team with a national tradition to alibis and a city into an emotional paradise for 7,000 plus UMies.

Jimmy the Greek had installed Missouri as six-point favorites earlier in the week, The Daily News went even further by upping the Greeks ante by seven more. And this was all augmented by some Louisville

Minutemen Fall To N.C., 73-63

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

NEW YORK - In the final eight minutes the highly favored (at least 12 points) and taller North Carolina Tarheels pulled away to defeat UMass 73-63 in a physical, multi-player contest last night in Madison Square Garden.

Both sides came out pressing and substituted freely. At the half, the Minutemen had to settle for 30-30 tie. They out hustled and out-rebounded, North Carolina, but poor shooting kept them from taking a lead. A six-foot-nine senior, Tom Austin, in his final appearnce as a Minuteman played his finest game ever to lead all scorers with 21 points and all rebounders with ten.

It was a game of "almost", similar to the first UMass NIT appearance four years ago. The Minutemen - played a tough defense, never lost their poise, and only a few missed buckets kept them out of the winner's column. The Tarheels were much taller and when they went one on one under the basket against the Minutemen, they were nearly unstoppable.

The race for the team title was close up until the consolation finals. The Rhode Island Rams proved to be the competition as they were ahead at various times in the tourney and indeed had more champions than UMass but couldn't do anything in the consolations. Brown University and

Bowdoin Stomps Minutemen, 9-5

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY
Thursday, March 8, 1973

"Goodbye UMass, goodbye UMass," chanted the exuberant Bowdoin College hockey fans at Orr Rink last night, after watching their Polar Bears totally humiliate the UMass hockey team on their way to a 9-3 rout. The Bowdoin fans will now usher their team up to Burlington, Vermont, and a clash with the Catamounts of Vermont in a game which will decide the ECAC Division II championship.

For the UMass hockey squad, the game marks the end of a long season, filled with ups and downs, good and bad performances, finishing with a game which in no way they deserved to win.

You couldn't fault any sigle individual or group of individuals for the horrendous UMass performance. It was a team effort as they were thoroughly manhandled by a well-drilled Bowdoin sextet.

Netsters Rack Up Yan Cons

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
April 30, 1973

STORRS, Conn. -As if the pressure of being the overwhelming favorites wasn't enough, the UMass netmen heaped upon themselves one ulcer-producing situation after another—all of which they responded to superbly in collecting their third Yankee Conference Championships in a row. By amassing 21 points (to that of 15 for URI and 13 for UConn) UMass captured five of the nine brackets, winning three singles and two doubles positions.

With rain forcing the tournament inside, the Yan Con's were held on three indoor courts, the surface of which was lightning fast. Ironically, the netmen feared playing at UConn because of their clay, the slowest of tennis surface. The Minutemen were hopeful of playing on hard surfaces, but hard doesn't mean lightning; after all,

Unless you were in some other world on Saturday (and then again maybe you were), the utter shock, but intense pride of UMass stunning (???), yet brilliant 28-7 humiliation of the Boston College football team is still with you today. Ifnot that, then perhaps the hangover from the celebrations thereafter.

But whatever it was or is, it happened. And so for the good people of Delaware who turned down a Board walk Bowl game with the Minutemen for reasons ranging from boredom to the opposition's inferiority, you get a UMass-B.C. game film (in black and white of course) to ask yourselves "why?".

And for the good people of Chestnut Hill you have the privilege of living for the next year at least with the thought of some "Aggies" from Western Mass not only knocking off your freshmen rather handily, but also the varsity to boot. (P.S.—For the Eagle's Eye, crow is pretty cheap in

UMass Bowls Over Davis

By EARLE BARROLL
(December 11, 1972)

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. - Imagine, Eastern College Division Football and the champion is from the West Coast. What was that? Dick Nixon and Abbie Hoffman on the same ticket?

And so it should come as no surprise for head coach Dick MacPherson if he comes across a letter this week that says: "Dear UMass football. . .thanks for sparing us the embarassment. . .Signed, the Boardwalk Bowl Committee."

The score was 35-14. The crowd was a meager 2857, and understandably so mostly UMass, as the UMass football team (9-2) completed the most successful season in the history of this school with a Boardwalk Bowl victory at Convention Hall on Saturday.

Thus, UCal-Davis, the team that came in from the West, joined Harvard and Boston College. What are the good people of Delaware saying this morning?

Historians will point to many reasons behind the vitory. But UCal-Davis Coach Jim Sochor beating Yale have an opportunity of moving up behind Penn State in the Lambert ratings.

Quarterback Peil Pennington (his name is probably in the little black book of every pro scout in the country--but breath easy, he's only a junior) was the chief architect of this demolition,

After getting over a shaky start--that seemed to engulf the entire team (i.e., missed passes, fumbles, etc.)--the rangy qb settled down to throw td passes of 66, 42, 39 and nine yards, run one in from three yards out and block on 95% of the sweeps in his three-quarters of service.

Then I broke down and told him my mission, that the Boston press and half the state of Vermont and our campus hooked to the transactions of Centinnial Field by a phone line simply had to know. He told me to check with the physicians. Kind of an impersonal reply but Paul was upset and as he gazed down the sidelines so were the rest of the Minutemen. Brown Trips Stickers; Caps NE Title

By HOWIE BLOOM

They were better than anyone had expected. Sure, Brown University had won their first Ivy League lacrosse title in four years, was ranked sixth in the country, and was in line for a trip to the NCAA championships later this month. But being realistic, how could any team expect to playwell in that kind of weather?

Whether or not anyone expected them to, the Brown University lacrosse team played magnificently, easily wrapping up the Gorillas and the New England lacrosse title. In rain that was heavy enough at times to drown a duck, the Bruins from Providence trounced UMass, 15-4.

The game should never have been played in conditions like those that prevailed on Wednesday. It was a day that was perfectly suited to Charlie the Tuna, not to playing lacrosse. The footing was treacherous and the visibility worse.

The Gorillas are primarily a fast break team, but the weather took care of that yesterday. The Gorillas did not score once on their favorite play all afternoon.

Failure to pick up ground balls was another factor that contributed to the Gorillas' disappointing loss. One of UMass' strong points this year, and an aspect of the game of lacrosse the team practices constantly, is scooping up loose ground balls. The Gorillas just couldn't find the handle yesterday.

Coach Garber had said before the game began that the team gettingoff to the fastest start would be in the best position to win. So, for the first three or four minutes of the contest, UMass looked as if it was on its way to an upset victory. Controlling the play in front of the Bruin's goal, the Gorillas pressed Dave Dampbell, Brown's goalie, but could not beat him until Bruce Sibson fired a bounce shot by the netminder at 4:32. It was the one and only time that UMass led in the ballgame.

It was also the only period of action the Gorillas dominated during the miserable afternoon. While the Garbermen slipped and slid their way through the rest of the game, scoring once in each of the final three periods, the Bruins played as if they had prepared for the encount er by practicing in the Amazon jungle during the rainy season. Their passing and playmaking was crisp, while the Gorillas were stymied completely by the pooor weather conditions...

Steve Russo, the all-time leading scorer in Brown lacrosse history scored three goals and assisted on five others while resisting the efforts of defenseman Bill Blaustein to shut him off. Russ Incorvia took over for Blaustein during the second half and performed admirably. Ever try covering Walt Frazier during a playoff game?

Certainly the score would have been closer had the downpour never commenced, but the Bruins would have come out on top even if it had been 70 degrees and sunny on Wednesday. It is frightening to think how well the Bruins execute when conditions are conducive to playing lacrosse. To win yesterday, the Gorillas would have had to play their best game of the year, and perhaps a bit over their heads, at that.

Goalie Rutledge cannot be blamed for the team's slaughter. Besides the fact that the UMass offense did nothing in the way of controlling the ball most of the afternoon, leaving it up to Rutledge to try to keep the Gorillas within striking range, conditions in front of the crease were such that it was a your-guess-is-as-good-as-mine situation whenever the Bruins fired a bounce shot at the UMass net.

For the fourth year in a row, the Gorillas had a chance to win the New England lacrosse championship. For the fourth year in a row, the team UMass had to defeat to win the coveted title was Brown University. And for the fourth year in a row, it is a group of lacrosse fanatics two hours away in Providence. Rhode Island who have the right to say, "we're number one."

Lacrosse is a crazy game. Fighting for a loose ball can be either a frightening or rewarding experience. Add a little mud (as was the case in yesterday's loss to Brown) and the situation can really get out of control.

Leaman: Money Isn't Everything

"After considering our families, the young men in our program and our recruits we just couldn't accept their offer."--Jack Leaman.

By EARLE BARROLL

The head coach was not alone in this package deal. An entire basketball program was on its way to Brunswick, New Jersey if the answer was "yes". "Of all the offers I've had," said Leaman, "this was by far the most substantial and serious in dollars and cents."

It was the kind of offer that you read about, nearing (almost) the magnitude of boats, houses, chalets on the Riveira and that kind of stuff. The deal they baited Leaman with involved not only the head coaching job but a teaching position, a summer camp and get this--his very own television show.

The monetary value was in the vicinity of $35-40,000 and who knows what else. He was going to a school that was in the process of building a new basketball facility. An alumnus who passed away bequeathed three-million dollars to the athletic department. Recruiting would be a cinch for the university was just outside of New York City. And the team he would inherit went to the N.I.T. this past season.

But Jack Leaman balked at this offer from Rutgers. Leaman was their number one choice as he was with the people of Harvard earlier in the spring. "They wanted me and my entire staff," he said referring to his assistants Ray Wilson and Fan Gaudette.

"They told us they wanted someone who would achieve a successful basketball program. And after examining the East they felt that UMass had one of the best programs in the region. They originally told us they felt they didn't have a chance, but sought to make it worthwhile for us."

It is obvious that Leaman's refusal is motivated by humans, not money. "We didn't think that the Rutgers area was as nice for our families to grow up in as is the Amherst area," he noted. He also has some unfinished business to take care of with another bunch of humans who have toiled for him during the past couple of years.

"I just couldn't leave an Al Skinner, a Rick Pitino, a Jim Burke (et al.)," he said. "It's awful tough to leave a program that you've worked at for years. We're not looked at across the country as financially a major power, but ability wise we're definitely on a national level."

Leaman has talked Top 20. He wants it and won't be satisfied until he gets it. He says he has the material to do so this year. He also is annoyed that they didn't get it this past season.

"I'm convinced that this past year's team was the second best to ever play in New England history. It just so happens that Providence was the best of all time. But it even took the Friars midway through their season to convince people that they were as good as anyone in the country.

"I looked back at our schedule. We played six teams that were at one time in the top 20 in the country and we were 3-3. But I guess the voters in the East were just afraid to give us the credit we deserved."

Leaman will continue to hear from schools opting for his services next year and the year after and many more yars to come. He has gotten the recognition that he has so deserved and earned. Many people have said that since Bobby Knight left Army to coach at Indiana Leaman has become the number one coach in the East at getting the most out of a program.

And not even $40,000 could deprive UMass of this kind of coaching.

Here is a man who turned his back on $40,000. And UMass is better off because of it.

"By Barroll" Says It All

A columnist's final column is always a traumatic experience.

For one thing he's not going to be able to foist his often uninformed and usually dull opinions on an unsuspecting campus community. For another he doesn't get to see his name in special print.

I'm not going to waste time and space delivering typewritten pies to faces I think deserve them, and I'm not going to do much praising. But I promised muself at the beginning of the semester that the last thing I would do was to write a column about Earle Barroll.

You've heard of the Red Cross--well, Earle Barroll is a sports editor's answer to that organization. I don't know how many times when I was sports editor that Barroll came in about 30 minutes before deadline and said, "I got something for you. You got room?" and of course I had some hole I had no idea how I'd fill, and Barroll filled it.

If I were Barroll, I'd have given up sportwriting as a hopeless cause long ago. Nobody ever suffered as badly from misprints and misunderstandings as he.

One night last year Barroll called in a basketball game from Boston College. It had been a great game and Barroll had written a great lead. After he'd finished phoing it in via a substitute man on the desk the lead read "There was a basketball game last night." He's never been able to live it down.

In the last Collegian of the year last May, Earle wrote a story about the cheerleaders. It was mostly about their role in getting the team "up" psychologically. Earle's first sentence read "They're agents of the word 'psyche'" when it left the Collegian office for the printer; when it came out the next morning, the lead read: "They're agents of the word 'psycho'".

He has his problems and faults as a writer. He can be too cute. He can be oversentimental and, especially since Marty Kelley came along, too Kelleyish.

But these are minor faults compared to the plus side of the Barroll ledger.

He's practically lawless as a game reporter. You may not think you saw the same game as him, but you can be sure that you'll know everything about the game he saw from who won to what Leaman said to John Murphy when he was putting on his sneakers in the locker room before the game.

Sometimes he's kind of hard to take for people in the office. Everytime he thinks he's got something worth writing, he figures it's worth hearing too, so he hollers it out for everyone to hear. And he's not noted for his tact, either.

Anyway, right now Earle Barroll is sending out what seems to be 70,000 job applications, and if he gets a job, he won't be here next year.

No matter, for Earle really hasn't been here for a couple of months. The spark has been gone, the glint in the eye when he gets behind a typewriter is gone, too. It probably left around NIT time.

Still, half an Earle Barroll is better than a whole of many so-called professional sports writers that parade around on today's sports pages, and anytime the name Barroll appears above a story, it's a bonus.

To say that the Collegian, both sports and otherwise, will miss Earle Barroll is an understatement. It will miss his copy, it will miss his presence in the office. But the paper isn't all that will miss him.

Boyden Gym, and all the people who call it home and have their lockers there will surely miss him more. For, on occasion, he was the only thing between Boyden and anonymity. And, right or wrong, he always had something to say.

And, in most cases, there was no one around who could say it any better.

Nixon Plugs 'Watergate' Holes

Connally-Special Adviser Schlesinger-Defense Sec.

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon shuffled personnel to fill Watergate-created White House vacancies Thursday as a federal grand jury indicted two of his former Cabinet members for financial irregularities in last year's re-election campaign.

The President recalled new Republican John B. Connally from private life to be a special adviser and named CIA Director James R. Schlesinger as secretary of defense.

As this was happening, evicted White House lawyer John W. Dean III charged someone is out to keep him from telling the full truth about Watergate and attempts to cover up the scandal. He said there are efforts to discredit what he has to say.

John N. Mitchell, who headed the re-election campaign until two weeks after the Watergate break-in, and Maurice H. Stans, the campaign's chief fund raiser, were charged with conspiring to arrange a secret $200,000 contribution to the election effort.

Also indicted by the grand jury in New York were a New Jersey Republican leader, Harry L. Sears, and Robert L. Vesco, former board chairman of International Controls Corp., who made the donation.

"There has been no wrongdoing on my part," said Mitchell, once Nixon's close associate and law partner. "I am certain that the judicial proceedings in this case will fully vindicate and confirm the absence of any wrongdoing."

Mitchell, who arrived at the Capitol to be questioned by Senate investigators Thursday afternoon, said the indictment was "one of the most irresponsible acts I ever heard of coming out of the Justice Department" which he formerly headed.

Both he and Stans also issued statements through the Nixon campaign committee.

Stans, budget director under President Dwight D. Eisenhower and before that a deputy postmaster general, had been Nixon's chief fund raiser in the 1968 campaign also.

"I am greatly dismayed by the action of the grand jury," he said in denying any wrongdoing. "I expect that when all the facts are heard I will be vindicated.'

The indictments are the highest-reaching charges to date in the ballooning scandal known by the all-encompassing name of Watergate. Only once in history has a U.S. attorney general been indicted and only one Cabinet member has ever been sent to prison.

The campus pond and the swans in a happier time.

Campus Pond Sings A Swan Song

By LARRY CARPMAN

The UMass Campus pond has been missing something, besides clean water, this spring semester.

Where are the swans?

Yes, those white vestiges of grace and beauty have not been gliding along the mirky water as usual.

A spokesman for the Grounds and Maintenance department said the reason for the lack of swans is because they are having babies.

"The swans are nesting in the pond at Tillson Farm and we do not want to disturb them," said Ken Billings of the Physical Plant.

Billings said that by Commencement time the swans should be back on the pond. But who will be here to receive their beauty?

An official of Tillson Farm where the swans are kept during the winter months said that there can be a problem with the swans eating their own eggs so they must be nested at the Tillson Farm.

When asked how long the swans have been at UMass the official said, "A long time, I don't know exactly, but they've been here all the time I have and that's 17 years."

Swans are not the only creatures that have had the good fortune of swimming on the pond. In the past there have been ducks and geese.

When asked if there was any danger to the swans because of the pollution in the pond the spokesman replied, "The Swans don't mind, they could even help the pond. Swans eat the algae that is in the pond."

"The same swans have not been here for the entire 17 years that I have," the spokesman from Tillson Farm was quick to note. "There have been four or five different swans."

According to Tillson Farm this is not the first year the swans have been delayed in returning to the pond. The swans must hatch their eggs this reporter was told and so we all lose out.

But just think next year there will be more of those beautiful feathery creatures to feed your lunch to while sunning along the banks of the pond on a warm spring day.

4 OH Staffers To Lose Jobs

By DAVID SPARLING

Four Orchard Hill staff members were notified by UMass administration officials yesterday that either their contracts would be terminated or they would be reassigned off the Hill.

Heads of residents Steven Stoia of Webster House and Dwight Middleton of Dickinson House will be reassigned next year. Area Director Jim West will also be reassigned; his contract will not be renewed. Head of Orchard Hill Academic Affairs Allen Davis' contract will not be renewed when it expires next September 1.

Vice Chancellor Robert L. Gage and Provost Robert L. Woodbury, who were responsible for the action, met in Webster House main lounge last night with protesting O.H. students. The meeting was moderated by Nick Apostola, president of the Student Government Association.

Both Administration members emphasized to the students that it was their own personal decision and that they would consider their action final unless their minds were changed by "appropriate" student groups.

Student opposition was based on the following points:

—What criteria was used to make these decisions;

—Did the decision come from the administrators personally or did it follow from recommendations of the Revaluation of Orchard Hill and Residential Colleges;

—There was not enough imput from any sources to make a decision of such magnitude.

—Why was such "unilateral decision resultant if the Administration was committed to "democratic" decision-making?

Gage replied to some of the students' questions. Frequently the crowded, stuffy lounge was filled with applause after various questions and statements by disturbed students.

Gage said that there was imput from various levels. He cited staff evaluations and the recommendation from the Re-evaluation Committee that there be a "clean sweep" in Orchard Hill staff in order to minimize "polarized elements",when the actual Committee proposals are put into effect next year.

The major recommendation of the Committee was to appoint an Interim Director for O.H. for a period of not more than two years.

One of the reassigned O.H. staff members said to this reporter that the Administration had been at odds with Orchard Hill for a long time and had used the Committee to "legitimize" yesterday's reassignments.

One angry student said that he thought the Administration would find any university program acceptable if it reflected the 1950's. The student said that they didn't find a student population that "threw water off balconies and listened to Sha Naa Naa records in their rooms."

Orchard Hill students have called a meeting today at 9 a.m. in Webster Lounge to decide if the rights of students in determining their education will be recognized at UMass. Vice Chancellor Gage has agreed to meet later in the day with students to discuss the issues brought up at last night's meeting.

The Hits Just Keep On Coming

By HOWIE BLOOM

I could have danced all night, but if I had, I wouldn't be here today to tell you the story of the third annual All Night Music Marathon. Twenty five hours and thirty nine minutes of mash potatoing, boogalooing, and locomotioning to the sounds of such top 40 greats of the Toys, Dino, Desi and Billy, and Barry and the Tamerlanes, would have been enough to send even the mighty Jack Armstrong to an early meeting with St. Gabriel.

A bit of background information might be useful at this juncture. In order to stage an All Night Music Marathon, one must first own enough golden oldies to ensure that once the sweet sounds of the 50's, 60's and 70's start emanating from his Rectilinears, the music won't cease, obviously, for the entire night. One must also make sure that his stereo is up to the task of cranking out hundreds of heavy hits, back-to-back, without blowing a transistor or two. Only two people on this campus have ever met this great challenge.

Three years ago, the idea for the 1st Annual All Night Music Marathon was born in between songs of the Beatle's second album. My roommate, Steve Ferber, and myself, were lamenting how we hadn't had the pleasure of hearing many of our groovy gold in a long, long time, and how it would be impossible to listen to all the songs we wanted to hear, that is, if we wanted to stay sane. At approximately the same instant, gleams appeared in our eyes and smiles creased our faces. A half an hour later, at 6:30 p.m. on a Saturday night, the 1st Annual All Night Music Marathon began, completely unrehearsed. It ended over 16 hours and 300 hits later.

Listening to over 16 consecutive hours of wall-to-wall gold was enough to make even the most diehard top 40 lover want to take refuge in the nearest bomb shelter. So, we vowed never to have another Marathon.

But, time heals all wounds, as the saying goes, and so by the time we were a year older (and presumably, though unfoundedly, a year wiser) Ferber and myself were psyched for another go with the gold. A year's time had also seen our record collection wax to over 400 solid singles.

The starting time for the Second Annual All Night Music Marathon was the same as it was for Number One, half past the dinner hour, on a Saturday night. The agony increased by almost seven hours, torturously enough, as Marathon II dragged on until six o'clock Sunday evening. The trusty Zenith had needled 423 45's.

Enough is enough, we decided when we finally came to after 16 hour sessions featuring an abundance of delta waves. The Third annual All Night Music Marathon didn't have a prayer.

At least until the end of March, 1973, it didn't. That's when, by popular demand of a few of the leftovers from Marathon II, we two fools made the momentuous decision to do it one more time-the 3rd Annual All Night Music Marathon was to commence, same time, same day, on April 14th.

It was, without a doubt, the biggest production of the triad. The Collegian's editorial points and weather both proclaimed the coming of Marathon III during the week prior to its arrival. Even D.J. at the Pub saw fit to give it a plug. Time flies when you're waiting to have fun, and in what seemed like less time than it would take to say "The Peppermint Twist," the Third Coming had begun. "Beginnings," by the group the Windy City is named after, started the festivities.

The stereo pressed on through heavy after heavy. The Forlorn Lovers Special, dedicated to those among the forty or so golden oldie lovers who had recently been jilted by the one they loved, left nary a dry eye in the room. "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Crying," "You Don't Have to Say You Love Me," "Forget Him," "I've Found Someone of my Own," "Maybe the Rain Will Fall," and "Baby Let's Wait," left everyone wringing his handkerchief.

We pressed on, through the Beatles Special, The Tommy James and The Shondells Special, on past the B. J. Thomas six-pack. By five o'clock Sunday morning, Steve and I were the only two people left to listen to the Solid gold.

Round and round the '45's turned, the Zenith doing its job to perfection. Now it was three in the afternoon, and the crowd was returning for the anticipated 6:30 finish. The second Beatles Bonanza and The Bread Special kept the audience movin' and groovin' towards the close. I didn't think we were going to make it. I counted the number of keys on my typewriter in an effort to stay awake.

The strategy worked. At 7:30 an hour past our predicted finishing time, the second to last biggie, "You're so Vain" by Carly Simon, started its run. The twenty steadies in our room sang along. Finally, the big moment had arrived.

"And now, live, from room 463 Cance, here is the last song of this, the Third and Final, All Night Music Marathon.

Let it be, people.

Breach Widens, Whitmore Wants To Talk

By BILL DENSMORE

Possibilities for open discussion of the proposed parking fee increases as well as a widening breach between the University administration and campus non-professional employees advanced yesterday with these developments:

--UMass Secretary Robert McCartney announced that the finance committee of the Trustees will hold an open meeting at 5 p.m. next Tuesday in the Student Union Ballroom to discuss the parking problem.

--Boston Atty. Mark Dalton, counsel for the Mass. State Employees' Union UMass chapter says he will file an unfair labor practices suit with the State Labor Relations Commission this morning. The suit will charge the University with a breach of good faith in bargaining.

--Carol Drew, President and spokesman for the other non-professional employees' union on campus (Local 1776, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees-AFL-CIO) called the proposed plan "unfair" and pledged to "do everything we can to stop it."

In other action, the UMass faculty senate yesterday defeated 27-30 a motion to freeze the present fee at the $5 level.

UMass Physical Plant employee Clarence Hunter, who is also a member of the state executive board of the M.S.E.A. yesterday called the Transportation and Parking Committee set up a year ago by the administration "a rubber stamp council put up to take the brunt of whatever the administration decides."

Hunter, who was once a member of the Committee but withdrew, said the UMass administration "committed us to something they wanted."

According to Hunter, "they said: 'we're gonna push this down your throat whether you want it or not.' "

"They're asking us to subsidize a system we've already paid for with our tax money," Hunter said.

Dr. Paul Shuldiner, who has taught civil engineering on campus for two years and is head of the Parking Committee said the main issue in the present parking controversy is whether a commuter feels it is his right to park a car on campus for free.

According to Shuldiner the rationale of the new parking fees rests on the assumption that "you are willing to give up the idea that free parking is a right."

He said that were opponents of the plan to accept that premise, and forget the "vain hope" that money will be forthcoming from the Legislature then "by a rational process' the new proposals make sense.

"It will generate revenue to pull us up by our bootstraps," he said, adding that "the unwillingness of the classified personnel to be represented (on the T&P Committee) "made the formulation of a plan acceptable to all very difficult. Shuldiner said since the University has no money or plans to build new parking facilities, spaces are "a scarce resource" and "one way or another you will have to ration its use."

He concluded that "most people who thought it through were in agreement a couple of years ago that higher fees should be charged for parking," and thus the issue became "not whether fees will be increased but by how much."

Reacting to charges that increased parking fees was a pre-condition of getting a $400,000 federal grant for running the free bus system, project director William Goss said yesterday that such was not the case.

"When we made the grant, we told the government we are going to make changes in parking', but we didn't specify what those changes would be," he said.

He added that a decision was made to review the present parking fees structure "before the grant was even thought of." The grant proposal was originally approved in February of 1972.

The lawyer for the M.S.E.A., in announcing his intent to file an unfair labor practices suit, said that he would also be sending a letter to the Trustees of the University notifying them of his action and citing three objections to the parking fee increase proposal.

Att. Mark Dalton said they would tell the trustees in a letter:

--the M.S.E.A. feels the use of parking fees for capital expenditures is improper.

--the M.S.E.A. feels the use of parking fees to fund the free bus system off campus routes improper.

--the M.S.E.A. feels the proposal's assumption that the increased fees will drop the number of parked cars from 16,000 to 8,075 is an "unwarranted assumption."

However, counsel for the AFL-CIO local, Boston Atty. Augustus J. Camellio, said yesterday any labor suits on the part of his union would be "premature", because "the trustees want to meet with our organization." Camillio, in an apparent refernce to the open meeting scheduled for Tuesday at 5 p.m., said "things have changed since the last time I was in Amherst" and the trustees have shown a willingness to discuss the problem.

Holyoke Black Studies Head Denounced

SOUTH HADLEY -- Four Mt. Holyoke College senior Black Studies majors have called for the resignation of the head of the Black Studies Dept., Prof. Walter Stewart because he has shown "no earnest commitment" to having what the group called an "effective and relevant black studies program."

The group cited "little progress and a lack of efficiency" during his term as head of the Black Studies Dept. at the college. The group made their claims in a letter to Mt. Holyoke President David Truman earlier this week, the Collegian has learned.

Study Coming On Jobs Equality

By DON BISHOP

(Ed. note: This is the final segment of a two part series dealing with the implementation of ramifications of the Affirmative Action Program.)

While the University's commitment to the Affirmative Action Program will probably continue for an indefinite period of time, a written and approved document outlining the University's specific plans for increasing the numbers of women and minority peoples employed here, while also guaranteeing equal opportunity employment in the future, will probably be completed the end of this year.

The program, under the ultimate direction of the Department of Health Education and Welfare, is presently being co-ordinated by five people representing the Chancellor's Office, the Personnel Office and the three Vice-Chancellor's Offices.

Mr. James DeShield, an Assistant to Chancellor Bromery, is the overall Co-ordinator for the program. Drawing up plans for their particular area of the University are: Marion McKamey for Administrative Services, Frederick Preston for Student Affairs and Zino Tillona for the Provost's Office.

At the present time, preliminary unit plans have been completed by Administrative Services and Student Affairs. The plan from the Provost's Office, which has been understandably more difficult to complete due to the some 60 different departments and programs that had to be consulted, is not expected to be completed for another couple of months according to Ms. Tillona.

When the different unit plans have been completed and approved by the HEW, then a final composite plan will be drawn up for this campus.

Additional Affirmative Action plans will be formulated for the other two UMass campuses along with other institutions of higher learning throughout the country. HEW is in charge of seeing that the federal guidelines concerning equal employment are carried out.

During this week, DeShields and another Whitmore staff associate working out of the Chancellor's Office: Dallas Darland, spoke at length about Affirmative Action.

DeShields defined the program as "not specifically a minorities program or a women's program but merely one of insuring that all those who come here looking for employment will have access to equal opportunity."

Darland saw it as "a tool by which the concept of equal opportunity in employment is put into action...It is also a set of guidelines designed to measure the actual success in carrying this out."

Both men stressed such things as the fact that Affirmative Action is also "very concerned" with rectifying the discriminatory situation presently existing in some areas of campus with regard to women employees.

DeShields referred back to a HEW survey done here two years ago which pointed out the fact that women faculty members tended to predominate in the lower ranks of academic departments. Also, there was evidence of discrimination in pay and a tendency for women staff employees to be stuck in the same job, with little chance for advancement.

Another important aspect of Affirmative Action concerns the lack of women and minorities in certain academic disciplines. DeShields and Darland both stressed that departments that have traditionally lacked the input of women and minorities, make special efforts to recruit these groups into their graduate and undergraduate programs so that in the future they will be adequately represented in these specialized fields in the future.

In response to a question concerning the type of feedback the various Co-ordinators have received as they have sought input into their particular unit plans, DeShields and Darland generalized the reaction to the program as being for the most part favorable, once the myths about Affirmative Action had been dispelled.

They both stated that some individuals in the academic realm had made Affirmative Action a scapegoat for their dismissal or denial of tenure. According to DeShields, no individual would be denied tenure because of the program. Rather their dismissal would come strictly on the basis of pre-established criteria of professional review.

Dr. Tillona, Co-ordinator for the Academic Area concurred with DeShields and Darland's view here. She stated that her areas immediate aim was for departmental commitment in principle to Affirmative Action.

Faculty Senate

Grads Get Equal Scholarships

By JOAN FASSNACHT

The Faculty Senate decided yesterday that scholarships will be granted to graduate students on an equal basis with undergraduates.

The meeting adjourned until next Thursday when a motion made by Associate Dean of Education Earl Seidman to establish a threshold grade level for scholarship consideration will be voted on. (See news analysis)

The Senate also voted to approve the Global Survival Studies Freshman Year Program, beginning in September, 1973. The Global Survival Series has already offered several courses this semester, including a film series in Southwest. Next fall will see the full implementation of this pet project of Professor Dave Schimmel (School of Education); Sylvia Forman (Anthropology and Education); Allan Hoffman (Physics); Horace Reed (Education); Richard Minear (History); Joseph Marcus (Engineering); Carl Swanson (Botany); and assorted graduate students.

In other business, a motion by Student Senate President Nick Apostola to require the Faculty Senate to have a quorum to run Senate meetings was roundly defeated. History Professor Dave Biddle's motion to recommend that the Administration keep the $5.00 parking fee was defeated, along with a substitute motion calling for more discussion on the proposed parking fee increase.

Alcoholism on Campus

Beer On Their Shoes; Overflowing Jails

By KATHY FRASER
and MARK CITRON

Dick Howland, student attorney, sat looking over his notes. This first week of March had really piled up the work. It had started at midnight on February 28 as the liberated pre-21 year olds rushed to the bar to take their first legal drink. The beer in the Blue Wall had flowed till it covered the floor and soaked through the shoes of the celebrators.

He was thinking of the 300 to 400 per cent increase in alcohol related incidents he's seen since Spring vacation - almost all of them under 21 years old. Carting all the students held on charges got to be a crowded affair in his small car, he even decided to get a larger "taxi".

When some of those 2,000 students with alcohol problems or those just out for Saturday night lark fill up the Amherst jail - yes, they have filled it up to overflowing - someone has to do something. And as student attorney and a "recovering" alcoholic, Howland has a viewpoint that is unique among those on campus concerned with the problem (such as the Infirmary, Room to Move, and the administration).

But after July 1, life will change a little for Dick Howland. No longer will his heavy legal case load include the 10 alcohol related cases a week handled now. (This is in contrast to four narcotics cases per month.)

On July 1, Massachusetts repeals its public drunkenness law and implements a new law which no longer treats the drunk as a criminal. The emphasis of the new law is upon rehabilitation and protection.

Police will no longer arrest, but now have three options when they confront the student who's had too much to drink.

A student will either:
--be brought back to the dorm
--taken to a detoxification center
--held at the jail - not booked - for a maximum of 12 hours

The nearest detoxification centers are Springfield and Greenfield. Under the law, the Department of Public Health has the responsibility of transporting individuals but, Deputy Chief of Police Donald Maia has yet to be informed how this is going to work.

Howland is optimistic about the new law, feeling that the police have the proper attitude and are concerned enough to assure the new law's success.

The Police have mixed reactions. Some feel that they will merely be taxis for drunks. Some say the new law won't work because the drunks will be ignored until they commit a crime like disorderly conduct or driving under the influence of alcohol.

An alternative to the detoxification centers is the Infirmary. Barry Averill, Director of University Health Services, doesn't see the Infirmary functioning as a "detox" center because the Infirmary can't handle the violent drunk. The Infirmary plans a low key approach handling those non-violent students who can't make it home.

Health Services has established an Ad Hoc Committee to study the problem. Averill says the committee will look at the total problem, colaborating with the Police Department and working with residence hass heads. Averill was quick to point out that all patient problems are handled in a strictly confidential manner.

Strict definition of the Infirmary's policy towards the problem awaits the report of the Ad Hoc committee's study.

Averill calls Room to Move a crisis center for acute problems, but that no one solution works for everyone: Though one method of treatment works for one person, another person might not have success. He went on to say that past alcoholics often have parochial viewpoints: that their solutions will work for everyone, and their problems in treatment are the same for everyone.

Averill points to a three pronged program to attack the problem. Besides counselling and treatment, Averill says there is a need for education of the community and the staff. This is on all levels - peer group, medical, and mental health.

Community education rests on acknowledgement of the problem. Howland complains that administrators and parents can't deal with the problem because "it's too close to home." Howland says, "They get uptight about relatively mild drugs, in terms of peoples' behavior."

Howland feels alcohol is more than just a health problem and "it is a social problem which people need to learn about." He went on, "Students are encouraged by administrators drinking at their meetings."

The drinking problem is, of course, more than one dimensional. Any student can go to the Top of the Campus, sit down and have a few drinks while one of their professors sits drinking next to them. Averill feels that more alcohol related problems exist in the staff than in the student population and programs should be developed for them.

There are programs on campus that are attempting to deal with the problem. At Room to Move education workshops offered to dorms and fraternities a film is shown describing the physical effects of alcohol. Following the film, discussions try to reach students on a personal level. The Infirmary estimates that several thousands of dollars in staff time will be spent this year on programs, and around 10,000 next year as programs get under way.

Dr. Chittum of Health Services has suggested that alcohol workshops be held at freshman orientation or that an education program be developed similar to the Peer Sex Education program. This would mean the training of students as para-professionals to counsel, educate and refer other students in alcohol problems.

The track record of University programs to set up alternatives to drinking is summed up in: What is there to do on a Saturday night besides go to a movie? It appears that any solution lies deeper than treating symptoms, setting up programs, and educating students that a problem exists.

John Mitchell

Mitchell, Stans Indicted In N.Y.

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

NEW YORK (AP)—Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and ex-Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans were indicted Thursday on federal charges of influence peddling, conspiracy and perjury. The charges were based on a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

The money later was returned.

U.S. Attorney Whitney North Seymour, Jr., said there was "nothing to indicate" President Nixon knew of the purported conspiracy. Seymour had tears in his eyes as he announced the indictment of his old Justice Department boss, Mitchell.

Indicted with the two former Cabinet officers were financier Robert L. Vesco and New Jersey Republican leader Harry L. Sears.

Vesco, 37, was said to have contributed the $200,000 to Stans to try to delay or derail a Securities and Exchange Commission probe of his far-flung financial operations. Sears, a business associate of Vesco, was described as a go-between.

At one point, the indictment claimed, Mitchell got hold of, and suppressed, a written threat by Vesco to disclose the secret cash contribution unless the SEC dropped all proceedings against him.

The indictment was announced here as Mitchell was entering the new Senate office building in Washington, where investigators were waiting to question him about the Watergate scandal.

The two cases were not directly connected. However, besides overlapping roles ascribed to Mitchell and Stans in both cases, John W. Dean III was mentioned in the Vesco case. He was ousted as President Nixon's counsel April 30, having admitted a role in covering up the bugging and burglary of the Democratic national headquarters at the Watergate apartments in Washington.

In a statement, Mitchell denied any wrongdoing in connection with Vesco, and to newsmen in Washington he described the New York indictment as "one of the most irresponsible acts I ever heard of coming out of the Justice Department."

Stans said in a statement: "I am greatly dismayed by the action of the grand jury . . . I expect when all the facts are heard, I will be vindicated." Through his attorney in Newark, N.J., Sears said he had not seen the indictment and would not comment. He added: "However, I am innocent of any wrongdoing and will enter a plea of not guilty to the indictment."

The indictment charged conspiracy to defraud the United States, obstructing justice and lying to a federal grand jury. Arraignment was scheduled for May 21. If convicted, Mitchell and Stans would face maximum prison terms of up to 50 years, Vesco and Sears 20 years.

There was no comment from the White House on the indictments. In his move to the Pentagon, Schlesinger would succeed Elliot L. Richardson who is undergoing Senate confirmation hearings for attorney general. Richard G. Kleindienst, Mitchell's successor in that post, resigned because of close personal and official associations with Watergate figures.

Nixon named William E. Colby to replace Schlesinger as head of the CIA. Pentagon general counsel J. Fred Buzhardt Jr. was appointed as a special counsel in the White House with "full responsibility in matters relating to the Watergate investigation."

The shuffling followed by 10 days the resignation of Nixon's closest aides, H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, as chief of staff and domestic assistant respectively.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, in announcing the shifts and Connally's return as a part-time, unpaid adviser, said Nixon intends to maintain more direct communication with his Cabinet. The President informed the Cabinet about the changes before making them public.

Dean, dismissed as White House counsel April 30, issued his statement through an intermediary in wake of published reports that Senate and Justice Department lawyers feel he has no evidence linking Nixon to the Watergate coverup. There have been contrary reports that he has such evidence.

"The information contained in these stories is neither complete nor accurate," he said. "I have not, and will not, leak my testimony to the media."

While he was still the official presidential lawyer, Dean issued a statement saying he would not be made a scapegoat for others' misdeeds. He later put documents into a bank safe deposit box and turned the key over to U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica, who will hold a hearing Monday on their disposition.

In part, Dean's statement said:

". . . I am not willing to see the truth distorted further, nor am I willing to shoulder the blame for those unwilling to accept the truth."

Ziegler would not comment on Dean's statement or say whether the 34-year-old lawyer had sought access to White House files.

A request was filed in federal court Thursday to obtain a sworn pre-trial statement from Dean May 17 in a series of civil suits growing out of Watergate.

Dean was asked to bring all documents and photographs in his possession as well as documents relating to "any effort made on behalf of anybody to cover up the names of persons and-or associations corporations or other entities involved in planning, financing and execution" of the Watergate break-in and bugging.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Here are major developments

Vesco: Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans were indicted by a federal grand jury in New York on charges of conspiring to defraud the United States in connection with a secret $200,000 contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign. Both denied any wrongdoing. They were accused also of obstructing justice and making false statements to a grand jury. Two others were indicted, including financier Robert L. Vesco, who made the contribution.

White House: The President recalled John B. Connally from private life to be an unpaid adviser, and named CIA Director James R. Schlesinger to be secretary of defense. Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon told the Cabinet he will treat its members as coequals with full and direct communication with the presidential office.

Dean: Ousted presidential counsel John W. Dean III said someone is out to keep him from telling the full truth about the Watergate scandal and to discredit what he has to say. In a statement issued by an intermediary, Dean described as neither complete nor accurate news accounts about his prospective testimony.

Richardson: Elliot L. Richardson, at Senate hearings on his nomination to be attorney general, quoted Nixon as telling him he doesn't want to be kept informed about his Watergate inquiries--"I am to have authority over these investigations and prosecutions and . . . I am to press them to a conclusion no matter who is hurt."

Pentagon Papers: Judge Matt Byrne said at the Pentagon Papers trial in Los Angeles that acting FBI Director William Ruckelshaus has said in a memo that defendant Daniel Ellsberg was overheard on wiretaps as long as two years before Ellsberg released the papers to the press.

Connally Trying To Patch Up GOP

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—John Connally has his first assignment as a Republican, and it is made to order for a man with the peculiar problems of the former chief Democrat for Nixon.

As special adviser to the President, Connally will have a hand in putting the White House image back together—a healer and mender with a role much like the one which launched his boss to the Oval Office.

At the same time, Connally didn't want or get a full-time Washington job that would tie him in too closely with the Watergate upheaval. He can advise and minister to his party's wounds from a position where the scandal is least likely to rub off on him.

News Analysis

The appointment Thursday came the morning after Nixon made it clear he is going to do all he can to get the nation's attention back on the choice it made in last year's election and off the seamier revelations about the campaign.

Connally's dissident Democrat movement played a big part in Nixon's landslide, and his presence in the new Nixon's official family may be expected to return national thought to the issues of 1972 and away from the less favorable issues of 1973.

Nixon told a fund-raising dinner Wednesday night he would not allow Watergate to deter him from "achieving the great goals that an overwhelming majority of the American people elected us to achieve in November of 1972."

But if he is to do that, Nixon must first get his New American Majority to renew its concern for the national issues which turned it to him last year. Connally is a good start toward that.

Connally's switch to the GOP, coming at the height of the Watergate storm, has been probably the biggest boost the embattled party has had in its crisis and undoubtedly will be appreciated for years to come.

The former Democratic governor of Texas and treasury secretary in Nixon's first term cabinet won't move to Washington, but he will be available to help Nixon reshape his administration and lend his lustre where it is sorely needed.

If the Nixon administration can overcome the scandal which party officials openly complain is hurting fund raising and threatening election grief in 1974, Connally undoubtedly will get a nice share of the credit. If it doesn't, he isn't likely to get the blame.

Coincidentally, it was in a similar role that Nixon began to pick up the pieces of a shattered party in 1964 after Barry Goldwater's humiliating presidential defeat.

HUMAN CELLS IN SPACE--Living human cells, stored in these tiny chambers displayed by Prof. Leonard Hayflick of Stanford University School of Medicine, will be orbited in outer space to determine effects of prolonged weightlessness on cell growth. Cells will be placed aboard Skylab, the United States' first manned orbital space station scheduled for launching May 14.

Skylab Readies Dual Launch

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—Dual countdowns continued trouble free and on schedule toward the launches next week of Skylab and of the three astronauts who will live aboard the orbiting space station for 28 days, officials said Thursday.

Technicians checked the electrical and onboard guidance systems of the Saturn 5 rocket which will launch the house-sized Skylab.

Water and other supplies were loaded aboard the Apollo command service module which will carry astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz to a docking with the Skylab craft. A Saturn 1B rocket will drill the Apollo craft into orbit.

The Skylab 1 astronauts remained in quarantine at the Johnson Space Center near Houston. They practiced the launch phase of their mission in simulators Thursday and listened on closed circuit television to lectures on the scientific elements of Skylab. The spacemen will remain at the center until Sunday when they fly to Cape Kennedy.

Two separate launch teams in adjoining firing rooms at Cape Kennedy are working their way through a lengthy check list as the rockets are prepared for launch.

Skylab, atop a 33-story Saturn 5, will be launched at 1:30 p.m. Monday in an orbit 270 miles high.

On Thursday at 1 p.m., the Saturn 1B will hurtle the astronauts into orbit. The spacemen will spend 7-1/2 hours maneuvering their spacecraft to a rendezvous and link up with the space station.

Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz dock with Skylab about 8:40 p.m. Tuesday and spend their first night in space aboard the Apollo craft. On Wednesday, they board Skylab and set up housekeeping.

During their four weeks in space, the astronauts will use complex instruments aboard the $2.6 billion Skylab to study the earth, the sun, the stars and themselves. Primary mission of Skylab is to learn how well man can endure the rigors of living and working in space for long periods of time.

Skylab 1 will end on June 12 when the astronauts separate from the orbiting laboratory and return to earth aboard their Apollo craft. Splashdown is in the Pacific ocean.

The Skylab 2 crew will rocket up to the space station in August for a 56-day stay. Skylab 3, also an eight-week mission, will start in November.

House Denies Nixon War Money

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House Thursday passed a measure interpreted as opposing continued U.S. bombing in Cambodia.

It approved an amendment by Rep. Joseph P. Adabbo, D-N. Y., denying President Nixon's $430 million-defense spending transfer request, including at least $175 million for the bombing and other Indochina activities.

The Vote was 219 to 188. Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson has said the bombing effort to force a Cambodia cease-fire would not be obstructed by congressional rejection of the transfer authority.

The vote marked the first antiwar measure passed by the House during the Indochina conflict.

Both sides had expected the balloting to be close.

"When it's this close you can't forecast the outcome," said House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan, who wanted House support for the bombing.

Republican Conference Chairman John B. Anderson of Illinois said he was among past supporters of Presidents' war policies who turned against the bombing after "intensive soul searching."

"You cannot create the structure of peace with a rain of falling bombs," Anderson said in opening House debate.

At issue was authority in a $2.8 billion supplemental money bill to transfer $430 million for defense spending, including some $175 million for the bombing and other Indochina activities.

Secretary of Defense Elliot L. Richardson said Monday the bombing would continue in an effort to force a Cambodia cease-fire even if Congress rejected the transfer authority.

He said the additional spending authority is needed to cover U.S. defense costs worldwide through June 30 and if Congress denied it, cut would be taken out of programs other than the war operations.

Top Democratic leaders of both the House and Senate led the drive against the spending authority, contending it might be construed not only as Congress' sanction for the bombing but for any other future U.S. military action taken in an effort to force compliance with the Jan. 27 Vietnam ceasefire.

Senate Democrats approved by overwhelming voice vote two weeks ago a policy stand against approving any new money for U.S. military operations in Cambodia.

Ellsberg Bugged For Two Years

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The Pentagon papers trial judge was told Thursday that Daniel Ellsberg was overheard on FBI wiretaps as long as two years before he released the papers to news media but that records of the wiretaps are missing from the FBI files.

The disclosure that a telephone conversation of Ellsberg's had been tapped while he was at a friend's home was made by the new acting FBI director, William Ruckelshaus, in a memo to the judge. The judge immediately stopped further proceedings in the trial and ordered the government to find all records on electronic surveillance of Ellsberg.

But later the judge received word from the Justice Department in Washington that the records are missing.

Defense attorneys immediately charged that the records were either intentionally destroyed or hidden. Ellsberg's chief attorney, Leonard Boudin, citing news reports to that effect, asked that the government question former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and, if necessary, question President Nixon himself about the whereabouts of the records.

The judge ordered the government to get moving on its inquiry into the records' disappearance and told attorneys to be ready Friday morning to present legal arguments on whether the case should be thrown out because of the revelation of the electronic surveillance.

The government had been under orders for more than a year to tell the judge about all wiretaps relating to the trial.

The Justice Department said the home phone of Morton Halperin, a former deputy assistant secretary of defense, had been tapped from the spring of 1969 to June 1971. During that time, Ruckelshaus' memo said, a conversation involving Ellsberg was monitored by the FBI while he was a guest at Halperin's home.

The Justice Department said records of the surveillance Halperin's phone disappeared from the FBI files some time between July and October of 1971.

The department said the wiretaps of Halperin's phone were authorized by "the attorney general." Mitchell was attorney general in 1969.

It was the first disclosure that Ellsberg, whose name did not surface publicly until 1971, when he released the Pentagon papers, had been overheard on taps. A member of the defense team was overheard by the government last summer, but it was determined the tap was directed at another person unrelated to the case.

Over objections by the prosecutor, U.S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne then made public an FBI report on an interview with Charles W. Colson, President Nixon's former counsel, in which Colson said he was told by White House adviser John D. Ehrlichman about the burglary of Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

Lebanese Strike Guerillas

By HARRY DUNPHY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)-Lebanese air force jets and artillery again struck Palestinian guerrillas positions near the Syrian border Thursday, but fighting appeared to be subsiding.

Kremlin leaders, concerned over the Lebanese fighting and its effect on the Middle East, appealed to President Suleiman Franjieh to bring the crisis to a quick end.

The army command called up reservists with technical skills, but emphasized that no combat reserves were mobilized.

Arab mediators began leaving Beirut as Tuesday night's cease-fire continued to hold up. The curfew was lifted during daylight hours.

Mirage jets went into action for 40 minutes after guerrillas shelled the Klaiat airstrip near the northern frontier. Official sources said the field suffered no damage.

Earlier, guerrillas forces inside Syria fired mortars and rockets at the border checkpoint of Arida near the airfield and at army postions in neighboring Chadra in the Akkar region.

The guerrillas, who last week reportedly moved 5,000 men into Lebanon but then withdrew them, made no attempt to cross the border, official sources said.

The fighting this week and last week climaxed mounting tension between the Palestinian refugees and Lebanese who resent Palestinian liberties in their country. They claim guerrilla activities make Lebanon a target for Israeli reprisals.

News reports from Lebanon continued to be subject to military censorship.

In Beirut, a Lebanese army helicopter flew over the city dropping leaflets calling for national unity and urging strict adherence to the cease-fire.

Reports in Lebanese newspapers said the Foreign Ministry was concerned about a possible Israeli intervention if Arab forces launched an invasion into Lebanon.

But Beirut radio quoted Foreign Minister Khalil Abu Hamad as denying reports that Lebanon had asked for French and U.S. military intervention in the event of an invasion.

Israel announced one of its army brigades had begun summer training on the occupied Golan Heights near the scene of Lebanese-Palestinian fighting, but an Israeli spokesman said the exercise had been planned for some time.

MEETING WITH NEWSMEN--Convicted Watergate conspirator James McCord briefs newsmen after McCord delivered a deposition dealing with civil suits to a Democratic Party lawyer.

McCord Says Mitchell Got Wiretap Logs

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Watergate conspirator James W. McCord says he was told logs of wiretapped conversations were delivered to John W. Mitchell while he was President Nixon's campaign director, court papers showed Thursday.

McCord also said in a pretrial statement taken under oath April 30 and May 1, that he was told Mitchell urged the Watergate bugging crew to get into operation as quickly as possible.

The information in both cases, McCord testified, came from G. Gordon Liddy, another convicted Watergate figure who was boss of the crew that entered and bugged Democratic Party headquarters over the Memorial weekend last year.

He said Liddy also told him that an espionage budget of $50,000 had been approved by White House counsel John W. Dean III and former Atty. Gen. Mitchell and that another $100,000 was available.

Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans were indicted Thursday in New York on federal charges of influence peddling conspiracy and perjury in a separate matter growing out of a secret $200,000 contribution to Nixon's re-election campaign. Nixon fired Dean April 30 and Dean claimed Thursday unnamed persons were out to discredit and censor what he has to say about the Watergate Affair.

The McCord deposition was taken in connection with the Democrats' $6.4 million civil suit against Committee for the Re-election of the President and others connected with the Nixon campaign.

McCord said there had been periodic discussions between him and Liddy about the proposed Watergate burglary extending back to December 1971.

"My best recollection of the conversation at that particular point was he referred to the fact of previous approval of the operation and that Mr. Mitchell...in effect had told him that let's go ahead and be prepared to get into operation as quickly as possible and he said by that Mr. Mitchell meant within 30 days if possible."

McCord said he planted the bugs in the Democratic headquarters Sunday morning of the Memorial Day weekend. On the receiving end, in a motal across the street, was former FBI man Alfred C. Baldwin III. Baldwin kept logs that McCord then delivered to Liddy.

Q. Did he tell you what he was doing with the logs.

A. He told me they were being delivered to R. Mitchell.

McCord refused to say what was contained in the logs because federal law forbids such disclosure.

McCord said while he was planting taps in an extention of Democratic party chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien's telephone and into the phone of state coordinator R. Spencer Oliver, the four men with him were photographing documents from files. The O'Brien tap did not work.

MIT Devises Asbestos Test

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Potentially harmful asbestos in the lungs of asbestos workers can be detected using simple magnetic methods, says a Massachusetts Institute of Technology researcher.

Dr. David Cohen has developed a method to detect large amounts of asbestos in the lungs with a simple commercial magnetism detector which he says spots the mineral deposits before they are seen on chest X-rays.

In a report in the latest issue of Science, Dr. Cohen said he and his colleagues found that the iron oxides mixed with most asbestos can be made magnetic and this magnetism could be detected by a commercial magneto-meter called a fluxgate.

Dr. Cohen said in an interview he first noticed ferromagnetic magnetized iron oxide particles in animals and humans while investigating the magnetic fields which generate from electrical activity within the body. The magnetic fields slightly magnetized the iron exides in the body and the oxides then can be detected in the lungs and other organs.

Finding that internal ferromagnetic particles could be magnetized with a magnet from outside the body and hold that induced field for up to half an hour, Dr. Cohen devised a way to measure that residual field and pinpoint the location of the particles.

"People must have a lot of ferromagnetic particles in their lungs to detect them with a fluxgate," he said, "and we found that there were two occupations in which people's lungs get very full are welders and asbestos workers."

Asbestos is not magnetic, he said, but ferromagnetic magnetite particles adhere to asbestos fibers when they are mined and are seldom separated. Therefore, if the magnetic-asbestos ratio is known for the dust which is breathed, he said, a fluxgate, which is about the size of a radio, could be used in a mine area to monitor the asbestos accumulation in miners' lungs to avoid the harmful effects of extreme accumulation.

Asbestos in the lungs can cause several kinds of cancer and a disease called asbestosis, in which fibers wad up in the lungs and interfere with breathing.

Dr. Cohen said he hoped that his simple technique would be useful to asbestos-working communities in helping to set limits of allowed accumulation.

Republican Questions Tactics In '70 Lieut. Gov. Nomination

BOSTON (AP) - A Sherborn Republican accused the Sargent Administration Thursday of employing "strong-arm tactics" and using "goons" in the 1970 party battle for the lieutenant governorship nomination.

Rep. George R. Sprague bolted his party's traditional position to support repeal of the pre-primary convention law. He said what transpired at the 1970 GOP convention "would make Bess Tweed blush." He said it was vulgar, corrupt, vile and outrageous. He said "storm troopers" and "goons" were used.

Sprague said he wasn't blaming Gov. Francis W. Sargent for what went on but said delegates, after leaving his conference area, came out "broken men...their spirits had been cut by the machine." Sprague said the administration threatened state employes with the loss of jobs and he said they even threatened his job at the time, with the Department of Natural Resources.

"I told them what they could do with their job," Sprague said.

The repealer won final House approval 153 to 68.

Sprague, 35, was an assistant attorney general under Elliot Lee Richardson and has been chairman of his town's Republican Committee for six years.

He surprised colleagues in the House by his strong denunciation of the convention system which in the past two decades has had almost solid Republican support while most Democrats have been against a convention.

"Any system which is so evil and so corrupt, whether it favors one party or another, should be abolished."

He said Republicans are "supposed to be more refined and less rambunctious" than Democrats but said the 1970 GOP convention didn't bear this out. The fight that year for the lieutenant governor's endorsement was between Sen. John M. Quinlan of Norwood, conceded to be the frontrunnter prior to the convention, and then Administration Commissioner Donald R. Dwight who had the open support of the entire Sargent machine and prevailed.

Ironically, four years earlier, the main fight was also for lieutenant governor, and was between Sargent-who had the active backing of then Gov. John A. Volpe-and Rep. Francis W. Hatch Jr. of Beverly who was reputed to be the front runner prior to the convention.

Several others took part in the repealer debate but the most attention was accorded Sprague who received applause and public commendation from the presiding officer Rep. Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn when he concluded.

Sprague talked of "Machiavelian" tactics at conventions and said, "The fact it is done at the Dedham County and Polo Club doesn't make them more acceptable." He said a convention "brings out the baseness in such great men as Leverett Saltonstall."

He said he wanted conventions repealed to spare these individuals from "temptation."

Financier Vesco Indicted

Until he resigned last July, Mitchell directed the Committee to Re-elect the President. Stans was Nixon's chief fund raiser.

On April 10, 1972, the government charged, Vesco's $200,000 in $100 bills was delivered in a black suitcase to Stans. Sears was said to have helped convey the money.

This was three days after the campaign disclosure law took effect.

That very afternoon, the indictment claimed, Mitchell arranged a conference on Vesco's case with William J. Casey, then chairman of the SEC. After this initial contact, the complaint went on, the 53-year-old Sears held a number of meetings with Casey and his chief counsel, G. Bradford Cook, who later became SEC chairman.

After these meetings, according to the indictment, Mitchell called upon Dean to seek a delay in the SEC investigation of Vesco, former board chairman of a conglomerate, International Controls Corp. That corporation now is under federal court supervision.

Despite the purported maneuvering in Vesco's behalf, the SEC filed a civil complaint against the financier last Nov. 27. The indictment charged that Stans prevailed upon Cook to delete all references to campaign funds from the civil complaint.

The money was returned to Vesco last February, after the campaign contribution was revealed by Sears in a sworn deposition concerning the SEC suit.

In its suit, the SEC charged that Vesco masterminded the looting of $224 million from four foreign mutual funds controlled by Investors Overseas Ltd. Named in the suit besides Vesco were 20 other persons and a score of corporations.

Vesco refused to answer a subpoena from the grand jury that indicted him, and was believed to have left the country.

Randolph Heads Westfield

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Dr. Robert L. Randolph, executive vice president of Chicago State University, was named Thursday as president of Westfield State College.

Randolph will be the first black president of a four year college in New England, according to the trustees of the Massachusetts state college system.

Randolph, 47, will take over at the 2,400-student college July 1. He succeeds Leonard J. Savignano, who resigned last year. Before going to Chicago State in 1969, Randolph was director of compliance for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Washington.

He holds degrees from Depauw University and the University of Illinois.

WMPIRG Battles Rt. 7; Impact Suit Continues

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) - Testimony was scheduled to continue this morning in a suit seeking to block the construction of a four-lane upgraded section of U.S. Route 7 in Vermont.

Eleven environmental groups, including the Amherst-based Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) claim the section is part of a Connecticut-to-Canada superhighway plan which would follow the Route 7 corridor from Vermont thru the Berkshire region of Massachusetts into northwestern Connecticut.

In February, WMPIRG and three other environmental groups said the three states were cooperating in building the intrastate road, but highway officials in all three states denied the charge.

In Thursday's hearing before federal Judge James Oakes here, a traffic engineer from Maryland charged that Vermont's projected highway figures of 8,000 cars a day on the highway in 1995 were extremely low.

Robert Morris of Potomac, Md., said the formula used by the Vermont Highway Department had been out of date for 15 years.

The stretch of road in question is a two-lane highway between Bennington and Manchester, Vt.

Morris said 8,000 cars a day could be accommodated easily by a normal two-lane road.

He maintained that new highways generated more traffic, and, in turn, the extra traffic created a demand for newer highways.

Three national and eight regional environmental groups joined the suit Thursday as friends of the court. Collectively calling themselves the Coalition on Route 7, the groups have claimed that highway officials plan to build a four-lane superhighway along the Route 7 corridor from Norwalk, Conn., to Burlington, Vt.

Part of the suit, originally brought by the Conservation Society of Southern Vermont and others, was to call for an environmental impact statement. The statement was provided, but the present hearings were called because of objections to the document.

Environmentalists charged it should have been drawn by the federal government, not the state. They also contended that if a three-state highway plan existed, the impact study should cover the entire length.

Morris testified that separate highway projects planned by Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont indicated an intent to build an expressway system which would link with interstates on both ends.

However, testimony was entered by Vermont House Speaker Walter Kennedy of Chelsea, a former Highway Committee chairman. Kennedy said the state had never approved a federal 14-year plan for such a highway and Vermont had been told by the other two states that there was no intention to funnel traffic into Vermont.

Barely Barley In The Barrel

By STEVE FERBER

One look into the barley barrel and you had the idea. The chick peas were low and the corn meal hardly covered the bottom of that huge yellow barrel. The People's Market was closing up shop after an extremely successful four-month co-op venture.

This afternoon at 5:30 the shelves will be cleaned, and if you thought the prices you'd been paying at the People's Market were low, wait until you see today's clearance offers.

As with all new ventures the non-profit People's Market had growing pains; problems in space, shortage of products, supply companies going out of business on them. But withstanding the initial difficulties, the market achieved it's ultimate goal: "giving students lower prices."

Gail Sullivan and Ellen Gavin, the market's founders and full-time managers, are joined by 10 employees in handling all phases of the shops operations. Each worker shelves the food, works the cash register and handles the pricing of items.

The rules of the market are simple. No products may be marked up more than 15%. The purpose of the markup is two-fold. While paying the salaries of the employees, money is needed to pay back the loan given them by the Student Senate for the purchase of two refrigerators.

Consistent with the People's Market philosphy is the concern over recyclable bottles and the provision which prevents any one worker from spending more than 10 hours a week in the shop. This latter restriction allows more people a chance to make some money.

Rivaled only by sales of yogurt, produce products (whose prices vary weekly) are number one on the selling list. Other than produce and yogurt, the store carries health foods, milk, bread, soups, canned goods, jello, Bosco and even some toothpaste. The main supplier for the People's Market is the Amherst co-op, an non-profit organization whose motives are similarly for lower prices.

In a comparison done between the People's Market and Munchies, glaring price discrepancies were evident. In the People's market 7 oz. of toothpaste sells for 46¢. At Munchies 5 oz. costs you 73¢. Milk goes for 32¢ a quart and 54¢ a half gallon at the market, whereas Munchies charges 36¢ and 65¢ respectively. Yogurt, a big favorite matches up 26¢ to 32¢ with the People's Market on the short end. Campbell's soup represents the smallest of price differences. Munchies sells it for 23¢, the market bests that by 2¢.

All of this adds up to a daily income of approximately $350 for the semester-old shop. With an eye towards upping that figure, job reports have been submitted by all employees telling of the market's strength and weaknesses.

With the continuation of the shop next fall, the only question asked by student's of the People's Market is likely to be: How long can they go?

Viet Tribe Faces 'Death'

By DAVID SPARLING

A resident of Dwight House is involved in a struggle to aid his people from experiencing endless encroachments on their land and his tribal societies rent apart. An American Indian? No, a student from South Vietnam who is a Montagnard, a race who is facing cultural extinction because of the Vietnam War.

The student, Tang Lieng-Hot is trying to raise money for the education of Montagnards so they can meet the South Vietnamese on a level of "mutual respect".

The Montagnards are a mainly primitive people who live in the highlands of South Vietnam. Their ancestral villages have been relocated by Special Forces units and the South Vietnamese army.

Tang came to this country with two members of Project Concern, a private medical relief group, in 1968. They are providing for his education here at UMass and while he is here he is determined to aid in educating his people. He said that there was only five other Montagnards in college in the U.S. at this time.

There are about a million Montagnards in South Vietnam according to Tang. He said that in 10-20 years he foresaw the "ethnic extinction" of his people.

Tang presently is selling authentic Montagnard bracelets to raise money. These brass bracelets are a traditional gift of the Montagnard signifying love and respect. He has raised over four hundred dollars so far in this venture.

Tang asks for support. The situation is "critical", according to him.

Contributions can be mailed, and bracelets can be bought from the—

It was the beginning and it was the end.

September 5 was the first University registration day for those in the class of 1977, and the last registration day for the class of 1973.

The academic year that started on that fall day wasn't to end until May 26, senior graduation day. Those days in between were bad for some, good for some, but bad and good for all.

For UMass students, all of the days in between were recorded by the Daily Collegian. Students were overheard to say "there isn't a better way to waste time than by reading the Collegian." On stormy days in January, the paper was read under a cup of coffee in the Hatch. On rainy days in April, it served as an umbrella.

The Collegian no doubt contributed during 1972-73 also to the training of puppies, the removal of uneaten food and the padding of bicycle seats.

But it also chronologued what happened around the world and on campus, that would interest the UMass students. All the "news that fits was printed," in Amherst's only "free and responsible press."

Here are some of the highlights during the beginning, and the end, and all the days in between:

There was the 1972 Presidential campaign and election between George McGovern and Richard Nixon. McGovern won Massachusetts and the District of Columbia, Nixon won the rest.

News about Vietnam kept appearing, even after the POW's returned home, and a peace with honor was negotiated.

You might still remember reading about the nation's inflation problems in the Collegian, even though you knew about it when you "got very little change back for a dollar at McDonald's."

More students were killed in Louisiana; men again walked on the moon.

The U.S. Supreme Court declared some state abortion laws unconstitutional, and the "Watergate scandal" may cause President Nixon to wish he won Massachusetts but lost the presidential election.

You may try hard, but could anyone forget the Collegian's front page? From silly jingles to words of "wisdumb," pollution was taken from the air and put onto paper, found under "the weather."

The Collegian reported the controversy concerning Third World representation in the Student Senate, the loyalty oath, and the search for a vice-chancellor for student affairs.

Candidates for, and representatives of (Shirley MacLaine) public office visited the campus as the rhetoric requirement came under vocal and vociferous attack from students.

Orchard Hill residents kept getting interference from WMUA's radio transmitter; Governor Sargent received flak for his reform plans for public higher education.

A Collegian reporter investigated the dining commons for alleged thefts of food by employees, while the Campus Center kept losing money. The Campus Center manager and food service director were to resign.

Other leading stories included the take-over and closing of the School of Education, faculty unionization (AAUP, SMP, MTA, NEA). 18 year olds were legally allowed to drink on campus.

Automobiles on campus caused parking problems, parking meters were installed, bus service improved with a federal transportation grant, and a large parking fee increase was proposed.

The Student Senate finally "made a buck" as it sold the campus humor magazine Yahoo, put the yearbook Index on a subscription only basis, and passed a "fiscally tight and responsible" $835,000 budget.

The Collegian's editorial pages made Representative Louis Morini (R—Northampton) a campus celebrity, Bob Estelle famous, and first reported the sinking of the library in an editorial point.

For the first time in its history, two full pages of classified ads appeared in the Collegian, and Charlie Brown won a baseball game.

And that is the way it was—1972-1973. . . .

That's All Folks!

Bilingual Education

Bilingual Education is a hot item. One of the reasons for this interest is money. When other programs are dying for lack of funds, money for biligual programs is increasing. How many of you, for instance, knew that there is a State Bilingual Education Law passed last year and backed by a million dollars in State aid. There is also a Federal Bilingual Education Law with "mucho" noney attached. It's no wonder that so many people want to get into the act, including those who knew nothing about bilingual education.

For the uninitiated, bilingual/bicultural education is an alternative mode of education used with students whose native language is not English and which utilizes that native language as the vehicle of instruction. English is taught as a second language, and the curriculum is augmented to include methods and materials relevant to the students' culture. Whether the purpose of this program is to speed assimilation or as a recognition of the cultural pluralism of this society is debatable, but several points are clear. Chicanos and Puerto Ricans were the driving force for legislation in this area. The effort was spurred by a firm resolve to encourage academic success, but not at the expense of rejecting their cultural heritage. These two groups along with American Indians have the highest dropout rates in the country.

AHORA, as the representative of the Spanish-speaking university community is committed to these aims. We feel the obligation to insure that such programs so viatal to the survival of our poeple, accomplish their aim. We are, therefore, looking very closely at any programs established for this purpose.

Such a program was recently established by the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literature. It is called Bilingual/Bicultural studies and a B.A. and M.A. are being offered.

Some of you may be thinking of taking these courses or majoring in this area. Several courses are being offered in the summer. We sincerely urge you NOT to take these courses. Let's look at the facts. Eighty percent of the Spanish-speaking people in Massachusetts are Puerto Ricans and the percentage is higher in Western area. The courses are intended for people who teach in bilingual classrooms or who are involved with other needs of Spanish-speaking communities. Yet one course will be given dealing with this major group; Literature of Puerto Rico. This course will be taught by a Puerto Rican, the only Puerto Rican in the Department who is resigning because he cannot stand to be part of a hoax or a farce. The other staff members have little or no experience with Puerto Ricans by their own admission.

"Catering Kitchen" Brings It All Home

By SHARON HUGHES

Recognized Student Groups (RSO) may now use the Campus Center Catering Kitchen for one day per semester to prepare food for special functions according to a "Catering Kitchen Policy Act" approved last night by the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors.

The Board passed a motion requiring CC Food Services to report to the Student Union Task Force before making physical renovations in the CC. They also passed the Program Council's proposed bylaws.

"The "Catering Kitchen Act" states that RSO groups may use the Catering Kitchen providing the event is not "directly providable" as a catering service by Food Services and it has written permission by the Food Services Director.

A supervisor designated by Food Services, but paid by the group, will remain in the kitchen while it is in use to supervise the kitchen equipment and the persons using it.

If the kitchen is not left in the same condition in which it was found, the cost of cleaning will be sent to the group. Also, the group will be responsible for any equipment, damaged, lost, stolen or otherwise rendered inoperable.

Food Services will supply utensils and miscellaneous cooking equipment on an availability basis only.

Persons using the facilities must report their gross sales to the Food Service Director within ten days, and there will be a limit of four prescheduled events per semester.

The Act forbids the sale of alcoholic beverages. Any complaints against the policy will ultimately be directed to the Food Serives Director.

The Student Union Task Force have power to prevent Food Services from making or instituting any physical renovations in the CC until the proposals are submitted and approved by the Task Force. The Force which is meeting this summer will control 75,000 renovation allocation.

The Board approved the proposed Program Council's by laws, thus passing the Council's budget.

In other business, the Board approved:

--a loading dock ventilation proposal at a cost not to exceed $2,000 (from unallocated capital)

--the expenditure of not more than $700 (from unallocated capital) to purchase a calculator for the administration

--the new rate changes on meeting rooms will be based on room and not attendance

--negotiation of a contract with Creative Conveniences for refrigerator rentals.

Counseling Center Improved

The Counseling Center has developed a number of new services to students over the past year, commented Dr. Al Southworth, Director of the Counseling Center, Whitmore, In addition to providing substantial traditional counseling services, the Center has developed an undergraduate internship program this year. It has also collaborated in the development of a B.D.I.C. program in human services, provided substantial support to the CCEBS Counseling Program, and training to women through Everywoman's Center. The Center also trained fifteen graduate and one undergraduate student in psychological counseling. Much attention and planning has gone into evaluation and revising the Summer Counseling Program for 1973. Project Cohort, a novel action research program that addresses adjustment concerns of freshmen, has successfully completed and will be reported to the student body in the fall.

Career Opportunities Program To Graduate 31 Students

By THE BROOKLYN COP STAFF

Countless miles, untold explanations, and many classes later, thirty-one students from the Career Opportunities Program will be graduating from UMass with B.A.s in Education. What makes this graduating group so unusual is that very few of the students have been to the Amherst campus.

In cooperation with local school districts UMass has joined the communities of Springfield, Worcester and Brooklyn, N.Y. in creating an innovative teacher preparation program. The uniqueness of these programs is that their student bodies consist of paraprofessionals from the community. Through the programs these paraprofessions are able to advance upward on an institutionalized career lattice from the position of teacher aide to a professional classroom teacher.

The advantages of COP are many. First, it involves concerned people from the community who have a real stake in the education of their children. Through direct involvement, as paraprofessionals, these people can improve the local educational services because they can relate more effectively to the needs of inner city children. By combining the academic background of a four year program with their personal experiences as community residents, the COP students, as teachers in the classroom, will represent a meaningful bridge between the academic world and the "real" world.

But making these programs work has not been easy. In the case of the Brooklyn COP program, the day to day logistics of transporting instructors, coordinating schedules, and fighting the weather has often proved frustrating. Springfield and Worcester, though closer, have similar problems. However, the attitudes and enthusiasm of the students, for whom this is often their only chance at a college education, has carried the program through.

The graduation of thirty one of these students attests to the success of the programs.

Goodell Library Announces Amnesty On Overdue Books

In conjunction with the move to the new University Library a general amnesty on all overdue library materials has been declared. The amnesty will cover all books and other library materials returned between Thursday, May 10 and Monday, June 25, after which normal fines will again apply.

All persons having overdue materials in their possession are encouraged to retrun them to the library either in person or by mail.

All members of the University community who come upon abandoned library materials in dorms, classrooms, or other University buildings are urged to return them to the library by campus mail.

Conte To Address Women Voters

Congressman Silvio Conte will speak at a luncheon meeting of the Amherst League of Women Voters on Saturday, at 12:30 at the Lord Jeffrey Inn. Mr. Conte will speak on Congressional Reform with special emphasis on the Relationship between Congress and the President.

Mr. Conte graduated from Boston College Law School and was elected to the Massachusetts State Senate in 1950. In 1958 he was elected to the 86th Congress from the First District of Massachusetts. Mr. Conte has been overwhelmingly re-elected to every Congress since then.

Congressman Conte is the fifth-ranking Republican on the powerful House Appropriations Committee, serving as the ranking minority member of the Transportation Subcommittee and as a member of the Labor-Health, Education and Welfare Subcommittee and th Foreign Operations Subcommittee. He is also the ranking minority member of the House Small Business Committee.

In addition to his efforts in behalf of the environment, education and small business, Congressman Conte has been a leader in the struggle against exorbitant domestic oil prices levied on the Northeast.

Good-Bye!

Opening Doors?

Thursday afternoon, a group of concerned students from Orchard Hill and members of the Student Senate confronted three members of the administration and one faculty member with an issue that is of central concern to every resident on this campus. An administrative trio, comprised of Dean Field, Vice-Chancellor Gage, and Provost Woodbury took it upon themselves to "open some doors" in Orchard Hill by terminally transferring four staff members from that area to, as of yet, unknown parts of the campus. This move was precipitated by a report made by a Faculty Senate evaluation committee which was published in the "Collegian" last week. Without asking the Faculty Senate, who had initiated the evaluation, or the students, who are going to have to work with the new "replacements," to approve this report, this administrative oligarchy interpreted the evaluation as meaning that the Hill needed new personnel, that the present staff would be "barriers" to the future of Orchard Hill during their interim two-year planning period.

The central issue behind this maneuver is that of community control. It was said that the students would be able to select replacements for these staff members with the interim director who at the same time has veto power over student decisions. The administration saw fit to wait until the crush of finals and the exodus of students to announce their major move, knowing full well that few would have the time to notice or respond. The criteria used to distinguish between those that stayed and those that were "reassigned" was one of ideology.

According to Field those identified with any position, other than neutrality, the "placard-carriers," would hinder progress in the residential college under its new administratively designed structure. Specific recommendations from the committee concerning increases in faculty, funding, and classroom space went unheeded by this Whitmore triumvirate and they chose only to concentrate on personnel changes, even though, the committee did not feel itself in a position to suggest such changes.

We demand that these "terminal transfers" be retracted until this Evaluation Committee report is approved or rejected by the Faculty Senate and the Orchard Hill community.

Aiding The Montagnards

An organization has been formed to aid a group of people who have been most adversely affected by the War in Vietnam. The founder and president is a UMass student. The Montagnard tribesmen who live in the Central Highlands of South Vietnam have suffered at the hands of almost every participant in the Vietnam war. Their residence in the strategic Highlands have meant that they have been involved in almost every major offensive. The Montagnards not only live in the war-torn highlands but they are also at a disadvantage because they are a primitive native rural tribe in an increasingly urban nation.

The Montagnards and the Vietnamese have not gotten along together too well in the past. The South Vietnamese regard the Highlanders as savages while the Montagnards refer to the Vietnamese as land eaters. The Highlanders compose only about five percent of the total population but they have occupied territories that included over sixty percent of the land area. The Tribes first began to suffer under the Diem regime. Before that, they had been protected by the French. The Diem government moved over 200,000 Vietnamese into the area. He also tried to impose cultural standards on the Montagnards by banning the teaching of their language in schools and giving many of their villages Vietnamese names. Despite these activities the Tribesmen have remained loyal to the Government. Time reported that about twenty percent of the Highlanders were in the Armed Forces of The Republic of Vietnam.

In recent years the plight of these people has not improved any; Communist advances have forced them to leave many of their villages. This has been coupled with a Government policy to remove the Natives from insecure areas to resettlement camps. According to Daniel Southerland in the Christian Science Monitor these insecure lands have often been populated by Vietnamese after the Tribesmen have been removed. President Thieu has appointed Nay Luett, a Montagnard, Minister for the Development of Ethnic Minorities. Luett has had trouble dealing with local Vietnamese officials; during the seige of Kontum he had to beg until the Mountain people could be flown out like the Vietnamese were.

UMass student Ha-Tang Lieng-Hot, the first Montagnard student in this country, has founded an organization to aid his people through education. The program will not educate all Montagnard but instead a few potential leaders and educators. Because the Tribesmen have been moved to urban areas, education is especially important and also hard to get. There is only one public high school in the Montagnard region; students can receive elementary education in government schools. The Fund hopes to be able to support ten students in school who, after they graduate, will pay the fund back to allow other students to be aided. This high school education will allow the students to acquire better jobs and aid their community. The cost of the program is very small; room, board, tuition and books cost about $25 a month or $250 a year. This education may save the Montagnard from becoming another race like the American Indian. Donations or questions may be directed to: Leing-Hot Education Fund, Inc., 114 Harris Ave., Needham, Ma. 02192, care of Mr. & Mrs. Frank Bridges.

Many local student voters will be receiving notices from the Town Clerk informing them that their names will be dropped from the voting lists. It isn't because the Town Clerk has anything personal against students; it's just that the system she must use is not designed for a growing town like Amherst with a large student population. State law requires that the listing of voters be done in January and February; unfortunately, most students are not here in January so the work must be done in February which is next to impossible. Another problem that faces the Town Clerk is that the voting population of the town has doubled in the last few years. Small town Amherst has become big city Amherst. The voting registration and listing procedures have not yet caught up to the phenomenal growth. So, if you receive a notice from the Town Clerk and you want to remain a voter, simply fill out the form and return it to her as soon as possible. It will make things much easier for her and much easier for you the next time you vote.

People I Have Known

This year is now over, except for finals. Needless, to say, it's been interesting...for me anyway. This is the first year I've written for the Collegian. Actually, my first article came out one year ago today, May 11, 1972. It was on the sports page and it was titled, "Council Changes...Don't Rob UMass Athletics." I wrote it simply because I felt that there were things about the Athletic Council controversy that needed saying and, from my own observations, nobody else was doing anything about it. I still can't believe what has happened since. If anybody had told me that I'd have my own editorial column last year at this time, or even last December, I'd have told them they were nuts. Yet here I am.

What happened is that I started writing for the Sports page in September, covering the Red Sox, who came so close, yet so far last fall. I also was writing up the Giants games last fall. Then I found muself writing Letters to the Editor on subjects with points I felt (and still do) strongly about. Then, I started writing features in my spare time. I found that in writing features, I had to deal with people (coaches and athletes) in an entirely different perspective. And I found that the people I dealt with (Coaches MacPherson, Lord, Flood, Canniff, Leaman and Garber and athletes Brooks, Metallo, McLaughlin, Riley, Peters, Austin, Michels and Garahan are perfect gentlemen and easy to deal with. I can't say the same about writing those features. But I'm sorry that I couldn't write about more of these seniors who have contributed so much to the various Minutemen sports programs. These people deserve that kind of recognition.

Anyway, this is how I got my column. After the changover in the Board of Editors, I ended up bullshitting with Matt Tackeff in the Collegian office. The new Executive Editor, Jerry Lazar, came over and Matt introduced us. Jerry mentioned to Matt that he needed columnists to fill out his roster. I immediately volunteered in jest. But, to my surprise, Jerry asked me if I could get him a column for the following Thursday evening. I did, it was printed and I've been going strong since.

I can say with strong convictions that I've truly enjoyed the experience of writing for the Collegian. It's the first time I've ever done anything like this and it has added to my total education. I've worked with all different kinds of people who make up the staff and I've gotten to know a lot of them. Now, I will offer my reflection on some of the people who have graced the headlines:

STEVE TRIPOLI...The current Editor-in-Chief. Steve realizes his responsibility of NOT producing a one-sided paper. I wish I could say the same thing about the Editor-in-Chief of the New York Times. Steve is trying as best he can to present all points of view, even though he disagrees with people like me and Matt Tackeff. This guy is a real gem, a rarity among editors of any newspapers.

MATT TACKEFF...a Buckley conservative, a libertarian. I agree with him on some things but disagree on some (many) others. The two of us can get into real heavy arguments although we each bust our ass to avoid such. But he did have the guts to present a conservative view in the paper when it was badly needed, and I respect him for that.

JERALD HOWARD LAZAR...another gem like Steve Tripoli. Otherwise I might not be writing this. One of the nicest guys around. Would you believe that he even agrees with me on some subjects of controversy?

DON GLICKSTEIN...a long-lost flower child. This guy is far out in left field. So far out that nothing can help him. He overdid the bit on athletics, a field he obviously knows little about. I'm glad he is gone, for UMass sake. My only fear is the influence he may have as a teacher. But at least he and I still have a mutual respect. I wish him the best of luck but I do have my reservations about him.

GARY GOMES...I just wish him realization, that's all.

BILL BALLOU...I might not be writing this, if not for Ballou. I first met Ballou when I threw him out of a soccer game last year. But he did allow my story on the Athletic Council to be printed. He was the news editor this semester, and he was a good one. As Marty Kelley might say, "Ballou is another name for efficient." He's also the biggest minor league hockey fanatic I've ever met.

EARLE BARROLL...one of the smartest sports writers around. One of the few Collegian writers who could become a career journalist. A helluva guy, totally receptive to anybody's opinion, based on fact, on any team in any sport. I wish him luck. He'll make it.

MARTY KELLEY...the best sideline cheerleader I've ever met. Marty's a nice guy but he reminds me of Howard Cosell, or Gary Baltick (ask any UMass coach who that is).

BOB ESTELLE...a complex person to be sure. A loyal New Yorker despite his hatred of Rockefeller. Has a good deal of personal interests...none of which interest anybody else, so he hears abut doesn't believe. Feels he has to say what he thinks, no matter what the consequences. Hates people who delight in hassling or screwing others, even though he is guilty of this sometimes. Is a Bircher only because he believes in their principles and philosophies. Feels it is very important to work so that we can have a limited government, with the emphasis on individual responsibility. It's as William Penn said so long ago, "Either you will be ruled by God or by tyranny." And Bob does believe that the U.S. is on the road to tyranny.

Bob Estelle made his Collegian debut on May 11, 1972.

Howie And Steve Kiss It. Goodbye.

By HOWIE BLOOM

I remember when I first got to this school, and I remember reading the farewell editorials written by who knows who everyday for the last week of school during my freshman year, and I remember thinking to myself how lucky I was that I still had three years to go, and to hide in this ivory tower, even though I knew that the first year had gone by quickly, and the rest would pass even quicker, and I remember Ellen DiCicco, and getting drunk like everyone else does freshman year, and I remember Sue Rosen and Tom Sununu and Pete Dugre, who gave sex counseling like no one else could, and I remember going home during the summer and acting like a hot shit wise ass know-more-than-my-parents and being told that's how I acted, and I remember I couldn't wait to get the hell back here for year two, and I hoped I could have another terrific spring like the one before, even though it didn't work, and I remember meeting the Melville girls, Patty, Gale, Lisa and the crowd, and I remember flunking all my exams to begin the semester and that it scared the shit out of me, because that's what everyone thought would happen, and I remember getting a 3.2 because I flunked those exams, which is irony at its best, and I remember a friend getting really hurt and I remember praying more than I had in 19 years, and I remember having my prayers answered thank God, and I remember wanting to leave even less at the end of year two, and I remember when I went I was in Revere and I said to SKF in two years we're gone, and I remember getting a sick feeling then, because it's rough out there, and I remember dreading the situation I'm in now, leaving, and I couldn't understand why other people didn't think the same way, and I remember working at Sunny's again, the summer before I met her, and I remember staying in the same room for another semester with the same roommate which is a miracle in itself, but SKF's easy to take, and the junior year of my life is one I don't remember too well, perhaps I don't want to, I wrote lacrosse for the Collegian again, second year in a row, boy the room looked funny with yellow, orange, and blue, and Dotty and Fran and the dining commons I love them both, and maybe God was saving me up for my senior year, Melville was still there, but it was upstairs, downstairs, I don't like her, I don't like her, blah, blah, blah, and counseling Jeff and everyone and basketball games and Julie and Cliff and Carol for the third year in a row and I hope I remember everybody, 463 Cance I love you, and I remember the summer in between the last and this semester, and it was the best of my life and I remember her and I remember having two jobs for a change and selling ice cream again and throwing barrels and ice cream, and I remember Revere again, and always will, and I remember being glad to come back to school because I wanted to get it over with, my attitude was different, and I remember doing more that year, and worrying about what was going to be with law school, and applications, and last, and a pain in the ass, and I remember Popov and I remember Med School for Popov, and I remember the reappearance of Dugre, and I remember Jayes, and Jack, and Neimo, and Bass, and Jeff B. and Kuppy and Andy, who made the longer All Night Music Marathon possible, and who's Bobbi Berman and Beth and Frek and Quinn babes and again Lisa and Patty and everybody I love you and I remember commencement fee and puke once a semester and Fassy Fass fassnacht and Law and Linda and book and errr and puppy and hit the door, break the phone, someone said I love you and great and here I am I want more I want more I need more give me more.

When Dick's On Your Screen, Here's What He Means

By LARRY SCHWARTZ

It's been a few years since
Kennedy, Jack
Was neatly disposed of with a knife in his back.
Key witnesses, six, from this world were exported.
On the hill men were seen with the rifles they sported,
And that testimony from others
aborted,
For it wasn't there when Warren reported.

And it's been a few years since
Bob saw his last day,
Again by a man paid by C.I. & A.
Like Stewart and Day in a movie
by Hitchcock
They had to make sure that he suffered from jaw-lock.
He'd soon be too important for people to harass him
Like they did to the District
Attorney Garrison.

Then L.B.&J. all of a sudden resigns
From the office he could have had for a dime,
And ex-gov'nor Connally who was in the car at the crime
Now can have G.O.&P. offices any old time.

Now this engineer, this disgusting cheat Sits snuggled right in, in this nation's top seat;
Four more years he said and two more years there are.
I'm surprised the world's nation let things get this far.
For look up and see with the dirks he has honed
He's changed the top seat from a seat to a throne.
"Ignorance is bliss," I now say with a frown,
For if they don't smarten-up and see past his crown
King Richard IV may never get down,
Our inheritance stolen by the Baskerville hound.

He made bread from the wheat deal, but he made it sans yeast,
He'll have to hit Switzerland to enjoy his feast.
For how could a Quaker's son make millions abound?

If he spends it here he's bound to be found.

Americans are too smart to be fooled by his knaving, Unless he said the millions were from green stamps he's been saving.

A kick-back from Thieu and his narcotic bordella,
What's he hold over your head
besides an umbrella?
At least we don't worry about foreign aid amounts,
You're holding them for us in
Swiss bank accounts,
After all, who here will argue when he and Pat explain thus:
"For sure Switzerland's foreign and the aid is for us."

To bust I.T.&.T. would be truly insane,
For who really cares about the state of Maine?
As long as U.S. ers can watch
Gilligan and O'Rourke
They wouldn't mind waving good-bye to New York.

The Cambodian bombing and the Vietnam war,
Your excuses for both I really abhor.
Your impounding of funds, now that I adore
The old should just die and the poor should stay poor.

Sinatra, Wayne, Hope—it's you
they revere,
But they can afford to, at a few million a year,
And the less wealthy Americans,
they love your might,
They'd send you some letters but they can't read or write.

Can you now avoid this latest scandal?
You try to burn wicks on both sides of a candle.
I don't think—I mean I really doubt
That even you sweat enough to put the flames out.

So what do you do? You appear on T.V.
To make another eloquent plea;
"Don't worry America, just believe me.
I have no reason to lie, I of course played no part.
But I want to talk to you from deep in my heart."

We turn in late, "Hey what's this,
a mannequin sweating?
And on every channel that's all that we're getting."
But back to the King-woops, I mean President, sorry;
It's just that once I was very good friends with a Tory.

"It seems that my friends and my trusted aides
Made what has come to be called the Watergate raids.
I know that I chose them and I know that I picked 'em,
But it's not like Tom for it was a Republican dictum
That picked these men, for they are the best,
They do whatever they're told at my behest;
And besides some years ago
Eagleton was depressed."

"Now let me make one thing perfectly clear,
I did not hear of this thing 'til
June of last year.
(It seems that because they have such honest faces
I forgot to put bugs in my own private places.)"

"By the way, let me mention, I was then trying to rest,
'Cause my mission to Moscow, it was a real test.
Struggling towards peace by leaps and by bounds (And besides bowling balls there weigh at least twenty pounds.)"

"When I heard of this news I was shocked and appalled, ('Cause they told me they were certain they'd left no clues at all.)

"I immediately ordered an investigation,
And (although) I did all within my limitation,
The defendants were caught,
they were no longer at large.
I did all that I could (but) they were found guilty as charged."

"I then questioned next my administration.
You now know that we received prevarication.

They lied so well that we could not tell;
(They must have learned what I taught them well.)"

"(They had asked for some money and they had asked for some more,
I had asked them what the money was for.
'On the Democrats, yes on them
we'll spy.'
I asked them when, I asked them
why.
They looked at each other and they threw up their hands,
They said, 'Don't you remember,
you gave us the plans.')"

"They lied to me, they covered it up.
Now sorrow and shame over-
runneth my cup.
(The lie that they made was that
I'd never be linked,
But now I know that one of them finked.)

"They all resigned and they really did want to.
(I only wish I knew who the reporters were on to.)
Even John Dean resigned, isn't that nice?
(Right after I tightened his head in a vise.)"

"We must work for justice, it's the matter at hand,
Let's get more witnesses up on the stand.
(I best take precautions, my protection wears thin,
If I steal the bible, they can't be sworn in.)"

"We will pursue justice so fully,
so fair,
And all responsibility alone I shall bear."

It was just at this moment that I started to gag.
I'm glad on the floor next to me was a bag,
But I'm sure that in every American city
He got what he schemed for,
America's pity.

"Let me commend our vigorous press.
(If they print what I want they won't be repressed.)"

"Now it is essential that we not be so distracted
By events such as this (that could get me extracted).
It has claimed too much time and too much attention
So forget Watergate (that's my intention,
And I'm sure that you will, oh I have no doubt,
Because that's what my speeches are really about.
See when I say A, the truth lies in B,
But you believe A, because you don't yet know me.)"

"(If you pity me now then you'll certainly grieve,
When I tell you this story about Christmas eve.)
I was filled with such anguish about whether to bomb, (But I gave the order with standard aplomb,)
And after twelve years (of killing people and fauna)
This move helped bring about
peace with great honor, (And though there's still war I just care how I'll look
In my great-grandchild's history book.)"

"(Now let me get schmaltzy for the rest of this speech,
I must cover the bad lest I get impeached.)
Let me talk of this office, and of what it means,
How I'll do anything to achieve
your great dreams,
Of red, white and blue, and Mom's apple pie,
Of peace for the world, of how God is nigh."

"And now let me end with a cute little tale,
I sent four year calendars out in the mail.
(I really didn't do it, but you must admit,
I get away with being full of shit.)"

"With honest Abe on my left, and our flag on my right,
And my family too, let me now say good-night.
I ask for your prayers, your generosity,
(I'm making it seem like humility.
I can't let on, but don't you see,
The Lord no longer will listen to me.)"

"God bless America, and God bless you,
(Because God knows that I've still got two.)"

Doing It By The Book Can Be A Drag

HONOLULU (AP)—Explicit literature stressing the "female sexual response" has apparently led to unhappy sex lives for many young married couples, a husband and wife team of sex researchers reported Thursday.

They added that such books and magazines help create a "cultural conflict" for such couples that seemingly only professional sex counseling can resolve.

Psychiatrist Dr. Saul H. Rosenthall of the University of Texas Medical School at San Antonio, and his wife, Chauncey, a registered nurse, made their report to the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association.

They also said they had achieved excellent results in the last two years in treating young-marrieds "in whom the recurring complaint has been that the wife is not enjoying sex but wants to."

"They have not been typical psychiatric patients," they said, "but rather people caught in a time of rapidly shifting cultural values. They are basically healthy young married couples who like each other.

"Twenty years ago, it is probable that they would not have considered that they had a problem which required professional intervention.

"Now, however, the wife reads Cosmopolitan and 'The Sensuous Woman,' and feels that she should be enjoying sexuality.

"This modern expectation, however, is sharply in conflict with what she has been prepared by her upbringing to accept as her own personal sexual identity.

"Her husband, similarly, feels that his wife should be enjoying sex and usually desires active sexual responsiveness, rather than activity . . ."

They said they believed the sexual problems of their patients of this type "may well be typical of a large segment of young married couples today."

Referring to the "cultural conflicts" in which they said such couples are enmeshed, they added, "The media barrage the women with what they ought to be doing, feeling and experiencing sexually.

"Often the women know all the answers on an intellectual basis. Being aware intellectually, however, does not answer the problem for them. For many of them, with upbringings which either emphasize sexual inhibitions or treated sex as a necessary chore for the husband's satisfaction, it is difficult, if not impossible, to incorporate new expectations on an emotional basis without professional help . . .

"They are reluctant to experiment, afraid of appearing aggressive or perverted, unable to think of themselves sensually—and they gave up acting seductive on their wedding day."

Vermont Co-op Costs Med. Students More

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—Massachusetts and other New England states have an agreement to send students to the University of Vermont Medical School, but it is costing more than three times as much for these students as for students from outside the New England states.

Under the program, which was established in 1955 to provide New England with more physicians, the university sets a quota for each New England state, and then accepts, up to the quota number, students it considers qualified.

The states pay $5,000 to the University of Vermont for each available quota position, whether the school accepts that many students or not. The Massachusetts quota this year was 91, although only 85 were admitted.

The students themselves are then required to pay an additional $1,000 in tuition; while students from outside the New England area pay a total of $2,550, although all are subject to the same entrance requirements.

Besides the $455,000 which Massachusetts was asked to pay the University of Vermont this year, the state is also assessed a portion of the operating costs of the New England Board of Higher Education, which administers the exchange program.

The 1973 assessment for Massachusetts was $148,825 which brings the cost per student, including their own contributions, up to an average of $8,100 per year, more than three times the regular out-of-state tuition of $2,550.

Tuition at a private institution like Harvard University is $3,000.

Massachusetts currently has seven members on the official New England board who do not receive salaries but are reimbursed for expenses. The members are appointed by the governor.

However, there is another segment of the New England board made up of about 20 salaried employes in an office in Wellesley. A recent state audit of the group revealed that annual rental for that office is $46,036.

Dr. Alan D. Ferguson, who is director of the Wellesley office, said he regards the appointed board members "like a board of trustees—they decide the policies of my board."

Ferguson's budget from the New England states was $348,070.79 in 1972, but he said he also gets "at least three times that amount in grants from outside sources."

Asked how he justifies the existence of such a large staff and budget, since the school makes its own admission decisions in both that program and a similar program at Tufts University, Ferguson said, "That's the smallest part of what we do—we do far too much to be able to tell you about it all."

"We operate a regional student exchange program," he said when asked to elaborate. That program is an established policy of allowing students in the New England states to go to a state college outside their own states at an in-state tuition rate, when a certain program is not available in the student's state or when the student would travel a shorter distance to an out-of-state school.

Asked for further elaboration, Ferguson said, "We also do extensive research. Just now we're concluding a two-year research study on establishing a regional college of veterinary medicine in New England."

Black Caucus Statement

Baird And The Black Caucus

(following is a statement of the Black Caucus)

Recently a grave injustice was committed to the Blacks living in the Southwest Residential Area. It seems that in the initial vote on the action concerning the controversial speaker Bill Baird voted the Black Caucus with the assembly to withdraw their support for that speaker. There existed no problems at that time within the Black community as the Black Caucus represented us on the Southwest Assembly. So no apparent controversy arose in the Black Community. However, then came the controversy; it seems as though it went again for a vote to rescind the action taken the previous week concerning Bill Baird by the Southwest Assembly.

After a lengthy discussion the Black Caucus voted unanimously to hold the decision they made the previous week. That is they stood firm in opposition against Bill Baird. However, an assembly man motioned to put it before a referendum, since it was of magnitude that involved the entire Southwest Area. Again the Southwest Black Caucus voted unanimously to send it to a referendum. However, a new result occurred: someone called a misvote and asked for a new election. This was finally passed, however again, the Black Caucus (our representatives for the Black community) voted unanimously to hold firm on their decision. The matter of Bill Baird is inconsequential to the greater injustice; it is only to exemplify that through the black community representatives in what you term your democratic procedure and representation on Southwest.

They voted against as a black community and yet they were so out voted and out numbered by the white community their wishes were not being represented. It seems that the white community feels that by putting a ration proportion of Blacks on their boards they are meeting the needs of the Black community and that further the Black community has input into what is done.

However when I look at the situation it seems that the Blacks were not receiving other than in the broad scope of the total institution. Instead, though, they voted unanimously against something they were not considered to have any effect whatever when the total vote was cast.

In other words the Blacks were cast together with the Southwest Assembly giving the impression that some people were in favor of the motion while some were against it. Why was it not made known that an entire group voted in opposition and not treat it as a part of them voted in favor and part of them in opposition?

This is an example of what happens to minorities in the U.S. Some may be in opposition to what is done yet if the other people are in favor. The minority must be oppressed or forced to abide by other interests even if they are in opposition to their direct interests.

New York Players To Perform

The New York Players will be featured with University Chorus and Madrigal singers in a recital at 8:30 p.m. Sunday, in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

The six-member dance group directed by Anthony Bassae will join the Madrigal Singers, directed by Alan Harler, in Brahms' "Liebeslieder Waltzes."

Mozart's "Requiem" will also be performed by the 130-voice University Chorus also directed by Mr. Harler, and accompanied by members of the University Symphony Orchestra.

The free concert is presented by the UMass music department.

Religion Major Proposed

A proposal for an interdisciplinary and interdepartmental major in Religious Studies has been submitted at UMass. The program of studies that a student would follow in this major would be made up of courses in various departments (Philosphy, English, Classics, Anthropology, Sociology, Comparative Literature) and courses taken in the departments of religion at the neighboring colleges. An introductory course in Comparative Religions taught by Professor Edward Phinney of the Department of Classics would be offered at the University, and an integrative senior seminar would be arranged on an interdepartmental basis. Field experiences could be incorporated into the student's program of studies under the new course titled UMass 200, Practicum.

The proposal for a Religious Studies major was submitted by Professor Gilbert Lawall of the Department of Classics. During the 1973/1974 academic year Professor Edward Phinney will chair an informal Religious Studies Committee, and Mr. Charles Isbell of the Department of Clasics will serve as Chief Advisor to Religious Studies majors if the proposal for the major is approved. To date the proposal has been approved by the Curriculum Committee of the College of Arts and Sciences and by Dean Jeremiah Allen. From him it goes to the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate. This committee will want to know the extent of student intrest in such a major. Accordingly, it is now urgently requested that all students who might be interested in majoring in Religious Studies contact Professor Gilbert Lawall or the Classics Department office (545-0512; Herter 537) as soon as posible. There must be a show of support from students if this major is to be approved.

For further information about the proposed major, contact the Classics Department, Professor Lawall, or Mr. Isbell (729 Herter Hall; 545-0543). A list of all religion courses taught at the five colleges in the Valley is available at the Campus Center information desk. The Department of Classics has lists of courses that will be offered in the fall semester, with meeting times.

Chorale In Sunday Concert

Selections ranging from Baroque to contemporary will be offered by UMass Chorale and the University String Quartet Sunday, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The concert will feature performances of Bach's motet "Jesu, Meine Freude" and the "Mass in Ancient Style" by the contemporary French composer Jean Langlais.

Two shorter selections, by Robert Muczinski and by Irving Fine, will be performed under the direction of two student conductors, Miss Cyrille Doutherd and Miss Karen Thomas. The University Chamber Singers will perform a Monteverdi motet for chorus and instrumental ensemble.

The University String Quartet, in its first public appearance, will perform Schubert's "String Quartet No. 14 in D minor" ("Death and the Maiden"). The quartet's members--Ann Leathers and Dean Radin, violin; Phillip Magnuson, viola; and Fredrick Hood, cello,--are all UMass students.

This semester, while Dr. Richard duBois is on sabbatical leave, the Chorale is under the direction of Mr. Russell Falvey. Mr. Falvey received his master of arts degree at Columbia University and his master of music degree at UMass, where he studies with Dr. duBcis. He is director of music at Springfield Technical Community College.

The concert is open without charge to the public.

Grads Get OSCAR

Commencing with the Fall 1973 semester the Graduate School will begin to use the student scheduling system commonly known as OSCAR. In order to use this system effectively it has been found necessary to change graduate registration scheduled for Boyden Gymnasium to Day #3, Thursday, September 6, 1973. Undergraduate registration previously held in Boyden on this day will be moved to other locations on campus.

Italian Chemist To Speak About Biomechanics

On May 16 at 4:00 p.m., in the Engineering East Auditorium, the Department of Exercise Science will sponsor Prof. Rodolfo Margaria, M.D., eminent Italian physiologist - biochemist.

His topic will be: "Biomechanics of Human Locomotion on Earth and on the Moon." Professor Margaria served as a Rockefeller Fellow, conducted research at University College London and at Cambridge, England. He served on the staff at the Harvard Fatigue Laboratory, the Johnson Foundation for Medical Physics (Philadelphia) and was a visiting professor of physiology at Yale from 1948-50. His many accomplishments are listed in World Who's Who in Science.

Would you like to continue your Health Care at the Health Services this summer?

The University Health Services will provide continuing care to those students who will be in the Amherst area during the summer. Services may be obtained by electing one of the two options enumerated below:

OPTION A: Return the tear-off sheet at the bottom to the Health Services Business Office with a check in the amount of $30.00 payable to the University of Massachusetts. Payment of this fee will entitle you to receive the same services that are provided under the regular health fee at no additional charge for the entire summer. Services include unlimited physician consultation, nursing services, lab, x-ray, medications, 24-hour emergency care, inpatient care on campus, and mental health consultation. (Those attending Summer School need only send $12.00, as the Bursar will bill them for an $18.00 Summer School Health Fee.) The enrollment period for this option will close on June 15.

OPTION B: Any student who has paid the Health Fee this past year may receive care at the Health Center on a fee-for-service basis. You will be charged for each visit ($10 for an M.D., $5.00 for an R.N., etc.), as well as for all other services and medications you receive.
NOTE: The Student Health Insurance will not reimburse you for services received at the Health Center, except for emergency treatment resulting from accident or injury. There is no need to enroll for this option, but we would appreciate your returning the tear-off sheet with this option checked in order that we may have some idea of the number of students that may be utilizing this option.

Name _____ Student # _____

Option A ( )
Please enroll me in the University Health Services Prepaid Summer Program. Enclosed is my check or money order payable to "University of Massachusetts" in the amount of $30.00; $12.00 if attending Summer School.

Option B ( )
I plan to request services as needed on a fee-for-services basis.

May 25

Senior Day '73

Commencement weekend 1973 at UMass will begin Friday, May 25, with Senior Day in the Northeast Quad from noon to 7 p.m.

There will be two bands, an oldies disc jockey, beer and soft drinks and a food concession. Tickets are $1 for seniors and $2 for guests. They are on sale now at the Campus Center concourse and will be on sale at the event.

Commencement Day is Saturday, May 26. Robing will begin at 9:30 a.m. with students at the south end of the stadium and faculty members at the stadium facilities building. The processional will begin at 10. All degree candidates should be in line by 9:45. In the event of substantial rain, ceremonies will be indoors. The platform party, distinguished guests, Graduate School and College of Arts and Sciences will go to Curry Hicks Cage and all others to Boyden Gym. Admission to these locations is on a first come basis.

Caps and gowns for graduates and undergraduates may be picked up through May 25 at the University Store or at the stadium for 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. on Commencement Day.

Stockbridge Graduation

The 51st Commencement of the UMass Stockbridge School of Agriculture will be held Friday, May 25, at 1 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Dean John W. Denison has announced.

President Robert Wood will confer associate degrees on 280 graduates of the two-year school. Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, chancellor of UMass Amherst, will deliver the commencement address.

A special guest will be His Excellency R.B. Mbaya, ambassador to the United Nations from Malawi in central Africa. Two Malawi students majoring in hotel, restaurant and travel management are in the graduating class.

The Stockbridge School was established by the General Court May 14, 1918 and graduated its first class four years later. In the beginning it offered a course in "practical agriculture" that included six months of farm work.

Today the school has 650 students, over 6,000 alumni, and offers 12 major programs related to agriculture.

Attorney For Students

An Opinion Filled Good-Bye

By RICHARD HOWLAND

This represents the terminal column for my office for this semester at least. The question of whether there will continue to be an Attorney for Students, what it will do and who it will be remains unresolved. It might be worthwhile for students with an opinion on such matters to communicate with those in a position to act on any or all of those questions.

Since there is some degree of finality about this column, I intend to share some views which are avowedly political and are my own.

Watergate is the worst political scandal in our history from a Presidential viewpoint and the single most important event in the preservation of the republic as we know it (whether that is desirable or not). The Press has vindicated the First Amendment and its own place in a democratic structure quite beyond any poet's ability to capture its essence. The final stroke in my view is the absolute necessity that the House of Representatives vote impeachment whether or not the Senate convicts. If the alleged conduct of the Presidency does not constitute grounds adequate for impeachment, the imagination boggles at what more should be required. By the act of impeachment (regardless of conviction) the people of this nation and the Congress will restore the balance to government which is presently missing.

Parking is a gross problem for the University and the town. When the rhetoric subsides perhaps all concerned will address some of the real issues. The parking fee is a tax being used to effect a social goal. Every effort should be made to make it progressive and not regressive. The resources generated by it should be employed to subsidize mass transit and improved facilities. The mechanism of its implementation should be effective to reduce central area parking, reduce use of the automobile, promote health and to encourage satellite parking and car pools. Every breathing person will benefit as will every pedestrian.

Unionization of the faculty is as much of a threat to the faculty as to the rest of the University. There are simply better and more efficient vehicles for the faculty to organize itself rather than subjecting to outside interests and controls. From my view it's also a ridiculous expense for so little benefit. My general philosophy is that unions tend to be beneficial to their members and are, therefore, subject to being "good". I do not agree that this is a universal proposition, however, and consider a dispassionate analysis of the facts somewhat elementary. To date the union issue appears to me to be conservative in character as opposed to progressive. Ultimately the power of an individual or a group is proportional to its ability and information. To rely upon unionization as a panacea is to misunderstand the potential and the purpose. I think the unrealized potential of the Faculty Senate serves the greater interest of both the faculty and the University. I hesitate to emphasize that this view is exclusively my own which should be obvious.

Presumably the summer will provide students with exposure to many parts of the Commonwealth and the nation. This column has provided rules regarding arrest and a variety of crimes. The most significant rule of general application is to think before acting. Most people don't break laws whether they know about them or not, if they consider the ramifications of their actions. I suppose it's obvious that it helps to retain some sort of control over oneself to make this possible.

I hope the summer is pleasant and without legal complications for anyone.

June 1-3: Fulbright Scholars Conference

On June 1-3 the International Programs Office, in cooperation with the Committee on International Exchange of Persons, will host a conference for Senior Fulbright-Hays Scholars on the topic, "The University's Response to the Challenge of Modernization." Fifty scholars from a wide range of disciplines will gather on the UMass campus to discuss current issues and developments in higher education around the world. Workshop discussions will explore such topics as "The Democratization of University Governance" and "Recurrent Education: Implications for Structure and Aims." Faculty interested in participating in the conference should contact Mr. Haverkamp in the Foreign Student Office (5-0019).

An important event of the conference will be individual dinners for the scholars to be hosted by UMass and Five-College faculty and staff on Saturday evening, June 2. Volunteers are needed and interested persons are asked to offer their hospitality by calling Professor Varley (5-0377) or Mr. Haverkamp (5-0019).

CC Store Renamed

In a contest held last fall to rename the University Store, the name "Minuteman Mercantile" has been chosen. It was submitted by Ellis Seidman and Neil Tolciss of 125 Draper Hall.

There were 573 entrees competing for a $25 prize. The renaming was part of an effort to improve the image of the store.

It was reported by the Board of Governors that "the name chosen reflected a feeling relevant to student interests. The store is in fact owned by the student body as part of the Campus Center Complex."

Because it was a joint entree, the prize was upped to $30.

Does a man who "loves" America seek to destroy the two-party system? Corruption is a life-style comfortable for Nixon, but must he infect the nation with it? Watergate is just the tip of the iceberg. It is time for patriots to wake up to the Big Brother mentality in the executive branch, being spread over the "free" world!

SSS Registration Continues

Many young men under the misconception that they are no longer required by law to register for Selective Service. The Serlective Service System has noticed the Veterans Affairs Office that all males who reach the age of eighteen are still required to register.

All males who reach their eighteenth birthday while attending UMass may fulfill their obligation and register at the Veterans Affairs Office, Room 239D in Whitmore Administration Building.

Non-Formal Learning To Be Discussed

Academic credit for non-formal learning will be discussed at UMass tonight and Saturday, as the UMass University Without Walls programs hosts a conference for representatives from UMass and three other colleges.

Panels and talks at the two-day conference will involve education outside the classrooms, and how such education may be evaluated for academic credit toward a bachelor's degree. The conference is titled "The Assessment of Non-Formal Learning."

A Friday afternoon session titled "Academic Policy and Non-Formal Learning" will include panelists from Empire State College in New York, the University of Minnesota, Morgan State College in Maryland, and UMass.

UMass faculty members and administrators will participate in the conference, as will the Antioch-Harrisville Graduate School, of New Hampshire; and Dr. Sam Baskin, president of the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities in Yellowsprings, Ohio.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

One of the most intriguing Aquarians I know: Tommy Smothers. An Aries who told me she wanted to do everything she could to help astrology: Jayne Mansfield. An Aries whose eyes hypnotized me: Gloria Swanson. A Cancer who started by being disinterested, slightly derisive and finished by being courteous and fascinated: Milton Berle.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Confusion exists. Don't attempt too much at once. Outline goal. Stick to specified course. Be versatile without scattering forces. Sagittarian could play prominent role. Be aware of potential. Don't sell yourself short.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may be pulled in two directions at once. Budget will have much to do with where you go. Cancer individual could play prominent role. Young person does not really have all the answers. Rise above petty details.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have more responsibility than you perhaps anticipated. Obtain hint from Aries message. You will be able to make contacts which prove of value. Be frank. Say what you mean and mean what you say. This now is productive policy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Legal procedure may block planned move or change. Relative could be in picture. Accent is on desire for more freedom and versatility. Key is not to overlook important details. Thoroughness now is your ally.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Avoid tendency to be careless with money. Being extravagant now would compound recent mistake. Know it and act accordingly. One who performs services may lack enthusiasm. If necessary, make needed change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What seemed a problem can be solved. Your timing improves. Family member becomes active ally. Be diplomatic. Avoid "I told you so" attitude. Taurus, Libra persons play important roles. Cycle is such that you can successfully take initiative.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may not be dealing with facts as they exist. Key now is to see picture in proper perspective. You could be pulling wool over your own eyes. Specifically, realize that full story may be occurring behind the scenes. Withhold final judgment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Friend who wants to do much is handicapped by work or health problem. You will have to assume more responsibility than originally intended. Know it and prepare accordingly. Capricorn is featured.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Finish what you start. Round out projects. Question of "love" arises. You may be challenged to prove intentions. Key is to stick within bounds. Means don't promise more than you can deliver. Study Libra message.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You need restoration of confidence, self-esteem. This is best obtained now by adopting a more independent course. Do something on your own. Be willing to take a chance on your abilities. One you care for wants to give you respect-if you so permit.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emotions are apt to dominate. Don't get involved in money argument. One who means much to you could say foolish things. Condition is but temporary. Know it and respond in mature manner. Don't compound error.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You don't have what you need at present. Know it and go slow. Let others make first moves. Be a shrewd observer. One close to you may be better equipped to lead the way where legal commitments are concerned.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a fine teacher, basically loyal to family, capable of making money but not always so skillful when it comes to saving it. August could be an outstanding month for you in 1973. You are better at aiding others than when it comes to helping yourself. But greater happiness is due and is on horizon.

Minutemen in Post-Season Play

Gorillas in USILA

Washington and Lee is still in the running for a berth in the NCAA playoffs. If the team gets a bid to the NCAA's, Morgan State will move over and be the fourth seed in the South regionals, with all other teams in the region moving up one notch.

The higher nationally ranked team in each pairing will be the home team for its game. If a team is not nationally-ranked, then the team with the higher seed will be the home squad. UMass will play the winner of today's B.C.—Springfield game at Alumni Stadium next Wednesday. Their inevitable quarterfinal match would be played on May 19th against the winner of the Cortland-Adelphi game, probably in New York. The semifinal matches will be held on May 23rd, and the finals will be played on May 26th, graduation day at the University. Let's hope some of those senior lacrosse players have to make a little date with a lacrosse championship final game their excuse for missing commencement that day. It's been real.

Netmen in NE's

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

In New England tennis there is only one name worth mentioning: Harvard. Second-rate to the overwhelming favorites are teams like Brown, Dartmouth, Williams, Amherst, Wesleyan and UMass. In the season finale to be held at Williams College, the 9-1 netmen are shooting for fourth or higher. No Minuteman team has ever finished that high.

The New England tourney is supposed to represent the climax of the netmen's season but you'd hardly get that feeling from the team's lackadaisical attitude.

For years and years the Yankee Conference Championship was the seasonal apex. This year the Minutemen wanted the New Englands to own that title. But it just didn't happen.

One could sense it coming. At the Springfield match Coach Kosakowski explained to the opposing coach how this post-Yankee Conference Championship match did UMass little good. But for Springfield, ah, the match was "good preparation" for their upcoming tournament, the New Englands. For all intents and purposes, Kosakowski indicated that UMass had "completed" their season.

Unfortunate has been the inability of the player's to generate some enthusiasm of their own. After the Yan-Con's practices became a thing of the past. Thus now mentally, as well as physically, the Minutemen are ill-prepared to make their best possible showing this weekend.

Hopeful of single's seeds are Captain Steve Ferber (9-1 at #3), Don Douglas (7-2 at #5) and Fred Braley (9-2 at #6).

Doubles-wise both Donahue and Douglas at one, and Ferber and Braley at three might receive seeds.

Each team has lost only one match.

Ruggers Vie For NE Championship

By STEVE FERRARA

The UMass rugby season comes to a climax this weekend when twenty two of the best teams in New England travel to Amherst for the New England Rugby Football Union (NERFU) tournament

First round games area scheduled for Saturday morning at 9 on the fields across from Boyden and at Amherst College and run through Sunday afternoon. Teams are competing for the Sykes Trophy, a memorial to the best team in New England.

This is the chance the ruggers have been waiting for all season–to prove that their record is no fluke, and that UMass can compete with the best in New England. UMass is currently 6-2-1.

The tournament is also a chance for the ruggers to meet some of the teams they have played this season. At any point in the tournament UMass may find itself in a rematch with Charles River, Brown or Portland (the only teams UMass has not beaten this season).

The Sykes trophy is awarded to the winner of the tournament, and the holder is in most parts acknowledged as the best in New England for the season. A last place trophy, similar to the "Toilet Bowl Award" that UMass won in the 1972 Florida tournament, is awarded to the last place entrant. The team who loses the most games in the tournament is given this award.

The Sykes Trophy has been donated by Frank Sykes, president of the New England Union. The eighteen inch plate was originally given to Sykes' father in England for his work in building a local team to national prominence. The elder Sykes sent the plate to his son to be used for the tournament.

Frank Sykes if a former center from the England National team. He is presently a physics professor and rugby coach for the Cambridge School in Weston.

The Falstaff Brewing Company has donated the second and third trophies as well as tie pins for individual achievement awards for the three teams.

Sinclair Foster Unmasked!

By JOHN BOCK

Attention all you "conflict of interest fans." The time has come to unmask the Collegian's ace tennis writer Sinclair Foster. For the last four years the man who has been writing tennis headlines at UMass has also been making them. This season is rapidly drawing to a close and he is finishing his career as Captain of the team, the number three man and Coach Steve Kosakowski's "eyes" on the court.

Sinclair Foster is none other than, STEVE FERBER. Yes, "the clean shaven Ferber" as Coach Kosakowski dubbed him during rlections on the past four years. "Amherst College's loss was my gain when Steve came here four years ago. He has done everything anyone could ask of a player, team captain, and person."

Ferber's record speaks for itself as in the three years on the Varsity he has helped carry the UMass team to the Yankee Conference title three years in a row. While so doing he posted a 28-7 record of his own. Said Coach Kos, "He is definitely one of the outstanding players in New England. There isn't a coach of any team that we have played against that wouldn't have been glad to have him."

Steve, though the Captain, does not play the number one position on the team, but occupies the number three spot instead. "He could have played number one for three years," emphasized Coach K, "But heunselfishly played Number three. That is a tough spot because it is the place where you know whether or not you need a victory to win the match; it's a pivotal spot. I looked on him as a two point winner every time we played. We had to play without him at Springfield and, even though we won, we felt his absence."

It is a scarce kept fact that Ferber is at times Coach Kosakowski's "eyes" on the court. "He is definitely one of the best captains I've ever had and his knowledge of the game has helped me a lot. Without him I don't think I could have done as much. He ran pre-season training this year and that involved a lot of running and no one likes to run, but Steve got them to."

Sinclair Ferber

But the name, Sinclair Foster - where did he get it? "He just made it up I suppose, but Sinclair Foster-couldn't anyone fit that name but him. His knowledge of tennis is excellent and he could write for any of the tennis magazines today. He always carried the New York Times with him and either his association with that paper or his writing ability will put him on their staff."

In the game Ferber is a very competitive player, that hates to lose and is adept at psyching his opponent out. In the Collegian office he is almost as secretive as his pseudonym - he enters quietly, does his article, and leaves. The days that he stays around to shoot the bull he is almost a different person.

The Collegian will be hard pressed to find another tennis writer who has resisted the impulse to glory himself, even at the times when he was the only one that deserved some. Said Coach Kosakowski "It'll be a long time before we can get another tennis player that can write."

Track: Comraderie Without Money

By EARLE BARROLL

When track coach Ken O'Brien defines his program he speaks of comraderie, of numbers, of equals, but never money. The Boyden pinch is a fact of life, but O'Brien does not complain. Instead he continues to build a track program nearly penny-free that rivals in places and wins any multi-scholarshiped university in New England.

"I can't give you the exact figure on the amount of money Boston College, Dartmouth or Holy Cross pumps into their track programs," he says, "but I'll guarantee it's an awful lot." The UMass economics is likewise unspeakable. As a matter of fact it's just about invisible.

"If we're lucky," O'Brien notes, "we might be able to squeeze two scholarships worth of money for both track and cross country over a period of five years and even that's a conservative estimate."

Nevertheless O'Brien seeks out the blue-chip high school athlete. "I've found that these young men like the school, they like the program, they like our track facility," he says. "But when it comes to the subject of money I usually try to get off on another tangent as quickly as possible."

These are the athletes the Penn's, the Villanova's, the Tennessee's and even a couple of New England money-giants gobble up. They're usually the number one or two finishers in their events in the New England meet. They're usually only about 25% of all trackmen in the region.

"If I can get one out of 75 blue-chippers I speak to," O'Brien says, "we're moving our program ahead in that event. We need these type of kids to compete on an IC4A level. We've already proven we can will the Yankee Conference, we're always a threat in the N.E.'s. Now we need that kid to go out of the region."

In the meantime O'Brien looks for the number three, four and five finishers in New England. These are the comraderie, these are the numbers he speaks of, these are the equals. These are the guys who make the UMass track program go. "They're the hungry type of athlete," says O'Brien. "They've never been number one, but amongst themselves up here they breed the type of motivation that makes them a great athlete."

Coach O'Brien's "Comrades" throw him into the Steeple chase pool.

Never in Steve Levine's dreams did he ever think of beating a Rick Comeau or a Paul Horrigan over a quarter of a mile. He didn't approach an athlete's body in high school, he still has problems convincing people he can run 50 yards. But he beat both Comeau and Horrigan while at UMass. This is the experience of UMass track. It permiates the Tony Pendleton's the Tommy Belands, the Randy Thomas', the Dennis Boisvert's.

"Our program is better overall than any other in New England," says O'Brien. "We have more fun, we have more participants, we have no prima-donas, we have a better facility, the athletes work harder. And no matter what the money situation continues to be I'll still work as hard as I can to build this program year after year."

And produce winner after winner.

Toast To The Campus Champs

Staff Photo/Frank Antosiewicz

IT'S ALL OVER—The Intramural softball and soccer champs were crowned yesterday evening. TEP won the men's softball title, The Anonymous Women took the women's title, and Phi Sigma Delta grabbed the soccer crown.

TEP Men's Softball Champ

The IM campus championship softball game was won by TEP over the Ginnies by a score of 8-3 in a game that saw Bob Plaisance clout a three run triple in the fifth frame. Frank Galligan was the winning pitcher and pitched five shutout innings as he finished strong allowing only four hits in those closing frames. Galligan has now won nine games in his nine starts on the season.

Close defensive play was the key to TEP success on the diamond as their defensive squad only allowed two runs per game while scoring nine per game.

On their way to the finals, TEP defeated Kappa Sigma, Beta Kappa Phi, and Residential Champs Butterfield Lemons 12-5 in the semi's.

Anonymous Women Cop Title

On the distaff side of the field, the Anonymous Women won the Women's Softball Championships yesterday with a 15-8 victory over the Mary Lyons Dupas.

Good hitting marked the Anonymous attack as they hammered out five triples in taking an early lead.

The Dupas had the lead at the end of the first frame by a 2-1 margin but surrendered that lead to the power hitting of the Anonymous attack.

Along the way the champs defeated Sorority Champs Alpha Chi Omega, by a score of 11-2.

Pitcher Ann Casey allowed only five hits while striking out three enemy batters. During the course of the season the club allowed only one run while scoring 66.

Phi Sigma Delta Soccer Champ

Mark Gaviglio scored on a blazing tie-breaking penalty shot to give Phi Sigma Delta a 1-0 victory over the McNamara Magicians in the campus championship soccer game yesterday afternoon.

The Greeks kept offensive pressure on the Magicians for most of the game, but dorm goalie Dave Armata made several great stops to prevent a fraternity score.

The teams remained tied 0-0 after regulation time and then for three overtime periods to set up the penalty kick tie-breaking situation. Lou Lousararian, who shut out every opponent this year, stopped the Magician's attempt to score to set up the game-winning kick.

In the opening contest of the afternoon Phi-Sig upset the Independent Champion Black Stars 1-0. Chuck Mills deflected a kick off a Star fullback for the only score. Skip Kelley set up the play when he passed to Mills in the corner.

McNamara became the Dormitory Champions when they defeated the Mackimmie Lion 1-0 earlier in the day. Frank Guros deflected the tie-breaker off the goal post into the nets after three overtime periods were played.

UMass-UConn Meet For YanCon Title

By GEOFF KURINSKY

Yes, they let it get away from them last year. It would have been a YanCon title, a trip to the District I playoffs and maybe even a round-trip flight to Omaha for the College World Series. The pitching staff was highly touted, having the fifth best team ERA in the country. The hitters banged away for a better than .300 clip.

If you don't think the Minutemen are out for vengeance you're out of your tree. The Huskies spanked the Redmen not once but twice, last year, and by convincing scores nonetheless. The Huskies picked up their bags and went on to take the District I playoffs in bazaar style. The UMass baseball season was over.

This year, hopefully things will be different. Going into the UConn showdown, the Minutemen need but one win to clinch the conference. Thank you UNH for tying the fearless Huskies, a tie which, if the two teams split over the weekend, will have given UMass a distinction they maintain in 7 of 9 other sports, the Yankee Conference Title.

The trip to Storrs, Connecticut is ordinarily a short one. If the Minutemen chalk up a victory this afternoon, it might be the shortest ride on record. They may even fly (not literally of course) back the 100 miles, they'll be in that kind of a festive mood.

Mike Flannagan will hike to the mound today, and if historical records are any indication, UMass will win. Flannagan is seeking to end his second season as a starter with a clean slate (12-0).

Tom White or Chuck Olsen will pitch on Saturday here at Earl Lorden Field, but hopefully the pressure will be off . . . until Tuesday.

You wanted to go to Harvard, eh. If you're on the baseball squad you get to go once a year. That game means the world, as Harvard is also a member of the New England baseball elite (top 4). the Minutemen will in all probability be seeing Harvard in the playoffs. This game could in fact be the preview of the District I championship series.

To a super squad, who've won some big ones, and been disappointing at other times (Springfield and Amherst for two), if things are going right, this squad could go to the top, yes the National Championship.

Asking a little too much? Only time will tell.

Where Do They Go From Here?

Gorillas in USILA

By HOWIE BLOOM

The UMass lacrosse team still has one game left on its regular season schedule, but Garber and his Gorillas are already looking past their encounter with lowly MIT in Boston on Saturday toward their first round game in the USILA playoffs.

This will be the second year in a row the Garbermen will participate in the tournament which is, coincidentally, two years old. Last year UMass defeated Bowling Green in its first game 19-9, and succumbed to eventual tournament winner Hobart, 13-2, in the quarterfinals.

This year the tourney's directors have decided to run the playoffs on a regional basis. The squads chosen to participate are: New England—UMass, B.C. or Springfield; New York—Cortland, Hobart, C. W. Post, Adelphi; New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware—Franklin and Marshall, Drexel; Midwest—Denison, Bowling Green or Ohio Wesleyan or Kenyon; South—Washington and Lee, Towson, Washington College, Baltimore University; At Large—Morgan State, Roanoke.

SPORTS

Knicks NBA Champions

NEW YORK—The New York Knicks pulled ahead early in the third quarter to take the National Basketball Association championship away from the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers, 102-91.

The loss of Knicks star forward Dave DeBusscher early in the fourth quarter did not bother the Knicks as their pressing defense was still too much for the Lakers.

New York won the championship series, 4 games to 1.

Montreal Takes Stanley Cup

MONTREAL (AP)—Yvan Cournoyer's record breaking 15th goal of the entire play-off series broke a 4-4 tie in the final period and swept the Montreal Canadiens to the Stanley Cup championships with a 6-4 play-off victory over the Chicago Black Hawks. Montreal won the series, 4 games to 2.

WMUA

UMass and UConn meet today and tomorrow in a series that will decide the Yankee Conference championship. WMUA will broadcast the game, starting at 1:55 today with Keel Beast and Gerry Brooks calling the play by play.

Steve Crowe

"Get Out Now!"?

With all the success the athletic department has enjoyed this past season, people are asking the question, 'Why doesn't UMass get out of that damned Yankee Conference.'

It's a question I was asking last year as a freshman at this university, something I just couldn't understand. I believed then that the football team and the basketball team should go on to the "big time".(a cry that rah rah alumni tend to wear out.) UMass, in those two sports, was definitely a superior team and I saw the Yankee Conference as a kind of security blanket for them to rap around and hide under. UMass should just quit the conference today and go on and play some top notch teams in the East, I thought. "So what if they had losing records for a couple of years, it would only be a short time before the teams could be built up to compete on a steady basis with the other powers."

But one year of covering the athletic department has taught me alot about the problems involved. It seems to me that there are three basic reasons why this university cannot leave the YanCon tomorrow and go on to the "big times"; 1) the problem of scheduling; 2) a financial problem; and 3) the harm that will be done to the student-athlete.

Assistant athletic director, Bob O'Connell, is the one who makes out the scheduling for each sport every year. He has pointed out that if UMass decided to leave the conference today to try to add some of the top Eastern powers, he could not find more than 2 or 3 schools that would have vacancies for three years from now. Add to this the fact that it would alienate the other schools in the conference and you can see that poor Bob O'Connell would have not only six holes in the basketball and twelve in the football schedules to fill, but also the the minor sports' schedules such as track, swimming, golf, and tennis. If you get rid of a school in one sport, you get rid of it in all sports—it's a Yankee Conference rule.

The second problem is simply a financial one. If UMass goes on to the "big time" athletic schedule, they automatically go on to a "big time" athletic budget. And where do you think the money would come from? Right! From a "big time" student athletic fee. And will the students go along with that? No way.

Finally, and probably most importantly, is the way the student-athlete would be hurt by a "big time" program. You think those jocks are hurt academically by all the time they put into a sport practicing and playing games now, how do you think they would be hurt if the teams are forced to travel an extra 200 miles to get to an away game. The players would have to cut more classes.

Besides being hurt academically, the student-athletic would also be hurt by the evils of "big time" recruiting. You've probably heard it all before about false promises of the college recruiting wars and the promises of money on the side by influential alumni (which I don't think UMass really has to worry about). It's been said a number of times and I will say it again: athletic scholarships should be eliminated. Really, it sounds great, but in reality, it would never work. If a school wants to be able to compete with a "big time" school on the field, it must compete with that school in the recruiting war for the talent.

So the next time you start crying for UMass to get out of the Yankee Conference immediately, stop and think about what it would take financially, scheduling-wise, and academically for the athletes. Getting out of the Yankee Conference is not as simple as it sounds.
